WEDNESDAY, May 29, 1912.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. NELSON and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

SPECIAL AGENTS AND SECRET SERVICE (S. DOC. NO. 728).

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 29th ultimo, certain information relative to the money for special agents and secret-service men, the number of agents employed, and methods of investigation pursued by them with reference to homestead entries. The communication, with the accompanying papers, will be referred to the Committee on Public Lands and printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the communication and accompanying papers will be ordered printed and lie on the table, subject to future disposal.

H. R. 23063. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war (Rept. No. 817).

Mr. CLAPP. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I hope the acting chairman of the committee will give notice when he expects to call up the bill he has just reported. I desire to say to Senators that it increases appropriations over and above estimates to the extent of some $3,000,000; that it increases appropriations over those contained in the bill as it passed the House by some $4,000,000, and that it carries general legislation, private claims, and other kinds of legislation. I desire the opportunity to be here when this bill is taken up and to make points of order against those items.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

CLINTON & OKLAHOMA WESTERN RAILWAY.

Mr. SMOOT. From the Committee on Public Lands I report back favorably the bill (H. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] informs me that it is very necessary that the bill shall become a law, and if there is no objection to it, I should like to ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to transmit to the Senate all correspondence and documents, or copies of documents on file in his office or in his possession, relating to the attitude and action of the State of New York regarding the conditions imposed upon the appropriation of $1,300,000 for the improvement of the Hudson River, made by the act of June 25, 1910, together with any other information that it may be appropriate to transmit therewith.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 21290) to amend an act to authorize a bridge at or near Council Bluffs, Iowa, approved February 1, 1908, as amended. I only do so because it is of very great importance that the bill be passed.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to amend the act to authorize the Central Railroad & Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Council Bluffs, Iowa, approved February 1, 1908, and amended February 27, 1909, and June 25, 1910, so as to give to the Central Bridge Co., of Council Bluffs, Iowa, all the authority and rights granted under the act, if the actual construction of the bridge authorized by the act is commenced within one year and completed within three years from the date of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GENERAL ARBITRATION TREATIES.

Mr. OVERMAN. I send the following letter to the desk and ask that it be read by the Secretary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read the communication presented by the Senator from North Carolina.

The communication was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

371 CENTRAL PARK WEST,
New York City, May 13, 1912.

Hon. LEE S. OVERMAN,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR OVERMAN: I noted in March the press reports of the terms upon which the Senate consented to the ratification of the proposed arbitration treaties between the United States, France, and Great Britain. I have secured a certified copy of these documents, and find that the Senate's resolution of approval expressly declares, among other things, that these treaties do not authorize the arbitration of any question "concerning the alleged indebtedness or money obligation of any State of the United States." As the Senate thought it worth while to include these words in its resolution of approval, and as you represent the State of North Carolina in the Senate, I deem it my duty to inform you that in 1906 a committee of eminent citizens of this country tendered to the Government of Colombia a large donation of repudiated North Carolina bonds, together with an expression of the committee's regret at the course pursued toward Colombia by the United States as regards Panama. At that time I was acting as counsel to the Colombian Legation at Washington, and was consulted by the Colombian minister in regard to this proposal. I advised against acceptance of this offer, and in due course the committee of American citizens was informed that the Government of Colombia was unwilling to receive the bonds.

The circumstances under which this proposal was made to and rejected by Colombia are worthy of comment. Before I became counsel to the Colombian Legation a proposal to arbitrate the Panama matter was made by Colombia and refused by the United States. The proposal charged violation of the law of nations by collusion between high officials of the United States and citizens of Colombia, prior to the declaration of Panama's independence, and violation of the treaty of 1846 by acts of the United States after the declaration of Panama's independence.

The refusal to arbitrate was based principally on two grounds: First, that the proposal involved the honor of the United States; and, second, that Colombia sought thereby to subject the policy of the United States to foreign dictation. When I was consulted by the Colombian minister, soon after receipt of this unfavorable note from our State Department, I advised him that, in my opinion, Colombia had a complete case against the United States, taking into account only admitted acts of this Government after the declaration of Panama's independence, and that the objection to arbitration made in the note under consideration could be obviated by proposing to arbitrate the alleged violation of international law and of the treaty of 1846 by admitted acts of the United States, leaving out entirely all reference to the alleged secret and unlawful intercourse between high officials of the United States and citizens of Colombia prior to Panama's declaration of independence. I pointed out that this would reduce to a minimum the difficulties of securing an arbitration during that administration, whose high officials committed, or were believed to have committed, the acts complained of, and that in case the administration then in control of the United States should decline this offer a subsequent administration could be expected to arbitrate the entire question at an opportune time.

The Colombian minister accepted this advice and filed such a proposal with the State Department, disclaiming any desire to interfere with the governmental policy of the United States further than to secure an impartial judgment as to whether the United States had violated principles of international law to which it had assented, or the terms of a treaty which it had solemnly concluded with Colombia.

In this proposal the loss of Panama was accepted as irreparable and the question resolved itself into one of financial recompense to Colombia in case a violation of legal duties on the part of the United States was found by the arbitrators. Perhaps I should add that an arbitral court of The Hague Tribunal was proposed, or a court constituted in some other way as the United States might prefer.

The Colombian minister was waiting in vain for a reply to this proposal when the tender of repudiated North Carolina bonds was made to and rejected by Colombia. Shortly after that the minister, who had consulted me, resigned his post, and I thereupon ceased to have any professional relation with Colombia or to its legation at Washington. But, as an American citizen and an advocate of justice, I have continued to follow with interest all the published incidents in the progress of this case, and have never for one moment lost faith in the ultimate consent of this country to let justice be done to Colombia as regards Panama.

Recent events convince me that the time for this is near at hand, and I take this opportunity to refer to some of these: for example, the recent action of President Taft in proposing, and of the Senate in agreeing to, the arbitration of all justiciable questions that may hereafter arise between the United States and Great Britain or France. I observed with great satisfaction the almost unanimous acceptance of that proposal by the Senate, also the declaration in the majority report of the Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs that a similar treaty would be in order with all friendly nations. As I see it, the point of difference between the Senate and the President in regard to one paragraph of these treaties was of small importance, though the public discussion of the treaties made the difference appear large, and resulted in the misrepresentation of the Senate's position. The fact that the Senate wished to mark out by its own deliberate decision, as particular cases arise, the rather indefinite boundary line of the arbitration area, as determined by these treaties, was taken as a sufficient reason for calling the Senators obstructionists. The wisdom and integrity of the Senate, as proven by its actions during more than a century, were apparently lost sight of for the time being.

Having solemnly agreed to arbitrate questions capable of solution by the application of principles of international law, the Senate can be implicitly relied upon, in my humble judgment, to keep that promise as certainly as it can to uphold the Constitution and the laws of the United States duly enacted. To distrust the Senate in this respect is to distrust the operation of the principle of democratic government, for the Senators are those citizens of the various States who are placed by the operation of this principle in a position of joint responsibility with the President in the conduct of the foreign affairs of our country.

The framers of our Constitution placed so much reliance upon the Senate that one-third plus one was given the power to prevent an action in our foreign affairs proposed by the President and approved by the other two-thirds of the Senators less one. The vitalest rights of Americans are dependent upon the wisdom and the integrity of the Senate in upholding the Constitution and the enacted laws of the United States. Why can not the Senate be equally trusted to fulfill a bounden duty as respects international arbitration, self-imposed by its own deliberate act, and becoming by such act a part of the law of our land?

As the Senate passes over to courts of arbitration under the terms of the Taft treaties the various justiciable questions that are outstanding or that may hereafter arise, this action will gradually define the arbitration boundary line as described in these treaties, so that questions of various kinds will thereafter go to the court of arbitration almost as a matter of course. Until that line is clearly defined it would be difficult to find safer men for its demarcation than the President and the constitutional two-thirds of the Senators present at any session duly called.

The Panama case is justiciable, because it can be fully settled by the application of well-recognized principles of international law to which the United States has assented (for violation of which it has held Great Britain accountable) and by the judicial construction of a treaty solemnly concluded by the United States and Colombia, by the terms of which the United States assumed certain obligations for a calculable consideration, paid by Colombia and received by the United States and now being enjoyed by it and by its citizens.

The Panama Canal will soon be completed. The charge that the United States violated the law of nations and the treaty of 1846 in its acquisition of the right to construct the canal ought to be settled before the canal is finished. The charge that there was collusion between disloyal citizens of Colombia and high officials of the United States Government resulting in the declaration of Panama's independence and in Colombia's loss of a member of her body constitutes a stain upon the honor of the United States so long as the United States refuses to permit a judicial investigation of that charge. For the protection of our own honor, therefore, as well as for the proper administration of justice, the completion of the canal should be accompanied by the judicial determination of all questions growing out of the manner of our acquisition of the right to build it. Even if the United States has done no wrong in the Panama matter, a judicial decision of the claim to the contrary is essential in order to uphold the reputation of our country for justice and equity.

In addition to the foregoing considerations there are several others which call for the judicial settlement of this case at an early date. I will mention briefly only three more.

The third Hague conference is expected to assemble during 1915. The United States should enter that conference with the prestige of having secured a judicial determination of all the outstanding controversies to which it is a party and which are justiciable, as that word is defined in the Taft treaties. Decisions can not be expected prior to the assembling of the Hague conference, unless the preliminary steps for the arbitration of the cases are taken at an early date.

The Panama case is between one of the heaviest-armed nations of the world and one of the lightly armed republics of South America, a republic which was supposed to have not only a general guaranty for its protection through the maintenance of the Monroe doctrine by the United States, but a specific guaranty of continued sovereignty over Panama through faithful observance by this country of the promise contained in the treaty of 1846. Claiming that this treaty warranted the use of our armed forces to prevent Colombia from maintaining her own sovereignty over the Isthmus, when one of the express objects of the treaty was to perpetuate Colombia's possession of Panama by the armed power of the United States, and then refusing to let the question thus raised be judicially determined, does not satisfy the demands of justice or comport with the former high character and present reputation of the United States. As I see it, the claim that this country is entitled to leadership in the movement for peace and justice is to be determined by the willingness of this country to submit its conduct to arbitration not merely in cases that may hereafter arise, but in cases that have already arisen, when these cases can be settled by the application of principles of international law or the terms of treaties to which this country is a party.

The newly appointed Colombian minister will come to Washington as the result of a highly honorable act on the part of Colombia toward the United States. I refer to the proffered welcome of Secretary Knox on Colombian soil, notwithstanding continued refusal of this country to arbitrate the Panama case during the past nine years, necessitating, as it did, the recall of a valued Colombian official who had "done the State some service."

Knowing your devotion to justice and right, I feel that you will take any steps that may be proper to secure the earliest possible settlement of this and all other justiciable questions in exact accordance with the law of nations and with the treaties to which our country is a party.

Thanking you for your courtesies to me, I remain,

Very sincerely, yours,

HAYNE DAVIS.

REFUND OF PENALTIES ON ALCOHOL.

Mr. RAYNER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 16690) for the relief of scientific institutions or colleges of learning having violated section 3297 and 3297a of the Revised Statutes and the regulations thereunder.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill named by him. Is there objection?

Mr. RAYNER. I want to say a word about the bill. It was unanimously reported by the Committee on Ways and Means of the House; it unanimously passed the House; it was reported favorably unanimously by the Committee on Finance of the Senate; and has been approved by different departments of the Government. It is to refund certain penalties that have accrued against the hospitals of the country for not properly denaturing alcohol. The alcohol was never used as a beverage, and the bill is an eminently just measure. I do not think there is any objection to it at all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read by the Secretary for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It authorizes the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, on appeal to him made to abate, remit, and refund all taxes or assessments for taxes the liability for which is asserted against any scientific institution or college of learning on account of any alcohol withdrawn from bond free of tax in accordance with the provisions of sections 3297 and 3297a, Revised Statutes, and not used as authorized by the above-mentioned law and regulations thereunder; but no assessment made of tax imposed shall be abated or refunded as to any alcohol so withdrawn and used for beverage purposes; and all applications for relief under this act shall be filed in the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue within one year from the date of the approval of this act, and no liability incurred on or after March 1, 1912, shall be relieved against hereunder.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE NEAR ST. LOUIS, MO.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6925) to authorize the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Co. to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River near the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MEMORIAL AMPHITHEATER AT ARLINGTON CEMETERY.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill (S. 4780) for the erection of a memorial amphitheater at Arlington Cemetery. I call the attention of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] to the request, because I think he has heretofore objected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SIMMONS. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

BATTLE OF GETTYSBURG.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, having given notice to the Senate yesterday that I would do so, I now ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 6964.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the bill by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 6964) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to make certain provisions for the care of the participants in the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg, at Gettysburg, Pa., on the 1st, 2d, 3d, and 4th days of July, 1913, and making appropriation of a sum sufficient to carry out the provisions of this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed: First. To make all necessary and proper detail of officers of the United States Army to make such surveys, measurements, and estimates as may be necessary in providing a sufficient supply of good water for public use upon the 1st, 2d, 3d, and 4th days of July, 1913, upon the battle field of Gettysburg, in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, upon the commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg, and to make all necessary provisions and perform all necessary acts in connection with bringing upon said battle field upon said occasion such sufficient supply of good water fit for drinking and other purposes connected with and incidental to such occasion.

Second. To provide for all necessary sewerage, sanitation, and hospital service necessary for the health and accommodation of persons attending upon such occasion.

Third. To provide and furnish all necessary camp and garrison equipment for visiting veterans of the Civil War, together with all necessary rations and supplies for such veterans during said celebration.

SEC. 2. That the steps hereinbefore authorized to be taken by the War Department shall be fully completed before the 1st day of July, 1913, and that all camp equipment, supplies, and rations shall be fully ready for occupancy and use.

SEC. 3. That the Fiftieth Anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg Commission of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania shall have charge of the order of exercises during the celebration; that the physical control of the camp and grounds and the movements of troops and marching bodies therein shall be in the hands of the Secretary of War, under such officers as he may detail for that purpose.

SEC. 4. That there is hereby appropriated from the Treasury of the United States, out of any funds not otherwise appropriated, one-half of such sum as may be necessary to carry out the foregoing provisions of this act, not to exceed the sum of $150,000: Provided, That out of the sum of $250,000 heretofore pledged by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania by act of the general assembly of that Commonwealth, adopted on the 14th day of June, 1911, the commission appointed by the governor of Pennsylvania, in accordance with said act and having charge of such celebration, shall set aside and appropriate a sum equal to the amount above appropriated, to wit, the sum of $150,000; so much of which as may be necessary shall be expended for the purposes provided in this act, under the sole direction of the Secretary of War: And provided further, That until the said commission shall adopt a resolution agreeing that the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania shall bear one-half of the expenses incurred in carrying out the provisions of this act, and shall furnish to the Secretary of War a certified copy of such resolution, no part of the sum hereinbefore appropriated shall be expended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I dislike to object to the consideration of this bill, and I will not do so if it will not provoke any debate. If it does——

Mr. OLIVER. I hope the Senator will not object. I do not think there will be any extended debate upon the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. If there is any extended debate, I hope that the bill will be laid aside.

Mr. OLIVER. I will say that if there is a disposition shown to extend the debate, I will not insist upon the consideration of the bill to-day; but there is very great necessity for action upon this subject at this session of Congress, if it is to be acted upon at all, and I trust that Senators will allow the bill to pass.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, is the bill accompanied by a written report?

Mr. OLIVER. The bill is accompanied by a very extensive report, I will say to the Senator. The matter was referred to the War Department, which presented a very elaborate report, estimating that this work would cost $285,943.34, of which the State of Pennsylvania has agreed to contribute one-half. If I had time I could explain the matter in detail; but I think there is a general disposition to assist the veterans of the Civil War on both sides in celebrating this epochal battle, and I trust that no objection will be made.

Mr. SHIVELY. What is the exact amount carried by this bill?

Mr. OLIVER. Not to exceed $150,000. I will state that the State of Pennsylvania has appointed a commission and has pledged itself to contribute a sum not to exceed $250,000. Out of that sum the commission having charge of the affair has agreed to contribute sufficient to pay half the expense of establishing this camp, all to be done under the supervision of the War Department; so that the limit to which this measure goes will be $150,000.

Mr. SHIVELY. Let me understand the Senator. Does the Senator say that in no event will this cost the Federal Government a sum to exceed $150,000?

Mr. OLIVER. I state that most emphatically.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STATISTICS OF CORPORATIONS.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate resolution 321, requesting the President to send to the Senate a compilation of the returns of corporations for internal-revenue purposes for the year 1911.

Mr. SIMMONS. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. CULLOM. Regular order!

The VICE PRESIDENT. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order. The Secretary will state the first bill on the calendar.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (H. R. 24565) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 24565. An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

THE METAL SCHEDULE.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, is the morning business over?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the metal-schedule bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18642) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenues, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment is that offered by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend by changing the number of paragraph 73 to 74, by changing the number of paragraph 72 to 73, by changing the number of paragraph 71 to 72, and by increasing the free list by inserting the following as paragraph 71:

Trace chains, plows, axes, spades, shovels, hoes, cane knives, briar hooks, rakes, scythes, sickles, pruning knives, tooth and disk harrows, headers, harvesters, reapers, agricultural drills, and planters, mowers, horserakes, cultivators, thrashing machines and cotton gins, farm wagons and farm carts, whether in whole or in parts, including repair parts.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. [Putting the question.] By the sound, the noes appear to have it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask for a division.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A division is requested.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have the amendment again stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment has just been stated; but, without objection, the Secretary will again state it.

The Secretary again stated the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. O'GORMAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE]. I do not see him present. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. PERCY (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. HEYBURN (after having voted in the negative). I should like to inquire if the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] has voted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. HEYBURN. I saw him present. I am paired with him. I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LORIMER] and will let my vote stand.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GARDNER. I have a general pair with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. CRANE]. For that reason I withhold my vote.

Mr. BRANDEGEE (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], and I should like to ask if he has voted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York withheld his vote because of his pair with the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I was not on the floor when that happened. Therefore I withdraw my vote.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] is detained from the Senate Chamber on important public business.

Mr. JONES. My colleague [Mr. POINDEXTER] is detained from the Senate necessarily. I do not know how he would vote on this question.

Mr. DU PONT (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], and as he is not in the Chamber I withdraw my vote. If he were present and I were free to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (after having voted in the affirmative). I withdraw my vote, being paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BROWN].

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 35, as follows:

So the amendment of Mr. SMITH of Georgia was rejected.

Mr. POMERENE. I offered an amendment yesterday, which I ask may be considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 20, line 21, after the word "development," insert "machine tools, 20 per cent ad valorem," and on page 22, line 9, strike out the words "machine tools."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the rate fixed in the Dingley law on machine tools was 45 per cent ad valorem. In the hearing on the Payne-Aldrich bill the manufacturers asked to have this duty reduced to 30 per cent ad valorem. Under the bill as it comes from the House machine tools, with sewing machines, cash registers, and similar manufactures, were placed on the free list.

It seems to me, in view of the character of the manufacture of machine tools, they ought not to be placed on the free list, particularly at this time. The duty on the raw material, particularly steel, which enters into their manufacture, is levied at 15 per cent ad valorem, and the effect of the proposed amendment is to take machine tools out of the free list and transfer them to the dutiable list under a duty of 20 per cent ad valorem. In other words, a reduction of 33⅓ per cent from the present duty; and I call the attention of the Senator from North Carolina to this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. We will accept the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I can not altogether understand the present situation. This item of machine tools was discussed in the committee. Every member of the minority of that committee voted against any change in the House bill. We had testimony, pages and pages of it, and now a Democratic Senator offers an amendment placing machine tools on the dutiable list, and the minority members of the committee accept the amendment.

Of course, I understand why this is done. That is, I think I do. A delegation from Ohio came to Washington—and, by the way, most of the machine-tool manufacturers are in Ohio—and we find the Democratic Senator from Ohio offering an amendment to place machine tools upon the dutiable list and to take them from the free list as provided for in the Democratic House bill. The Democratic members of the Finance Committee had ample opportunity to make that change before the bill was reported to the Senate, and did not. Are we to understand that this amendment, offered as it is at this time, is the sentiment of the Democrats of the Senate?

I merely wanted to call attention to the fact that it looks to me like trying to play politics with this item, and I hardly think it is the proper thing to do.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I do not know of anybody who could with worse grace make an objection to playing politics on a tariff schedule than the Senator from Utah. But we are not playing politics at all. The minority representatives on the Finance Committee were not convinced by the hearings that were had that these articles ought to be placed upon the dutiable list, and did, as the Senator says, make a report in favor of the bill with them upon the free list. Very largely the failure to convince the minority members was because of the character of the testimony, so called. Speaking for myself I attached very little importance to it. I generally attach very little importance to the utterances of interested witnesses who are volunteer witnesses. But since that time we have come to the conclusion that that was too drastic a cut upon that particular article in the schedule.

Mr. SMOOT. Has there been any additional testimony?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators should get permission of the Chair before interrupting each other.

Mr. SMOOT. Has there been any additional testimony received by the Democratic members of the committee?

Mr. WILLIAMS. So far as I am concerned, upon reading and an examination of the testimony—not additional testimony in the sense of additional witnesses, or so-called witnesses—I have come to that conclusion just as I have come to a conclusion on the duties on several other articles.

Mr. RAYNER. May I ask the Senator a question? As I understand the two bills, it is on the free list in the House bill, and the Senate Finance Committee has put it on the dutiable list?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senate Finance Committee bill will put them on the dutiable list.

Mr. RAYNER. If this amendment is adopted?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; if it is amended. The present duty is 30 or 35 per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. Thirty per cent.

Mr. WILLIAMS. This amendment will make it 30 per cent, which is a reduction of 33⅓ per cent on machine tools.

There was before the committee some testimony that put us, I may say, upon a line of inquiry with regard to another matter right in connection with this schedule. That was with regard to what might possibly be the construction and meaning of the words "machine tools." It seemed evident that the Ways and Means Committee of the House had one idea in their minds, and various people connected with the trade either had or pretended to have a different idea of what the phrase "machine tools" meant. If the phrase "machine tools" was extended to mean all the things that these people in the trade say that the trade means by the phrase, then I do not think it was the intent of the author of the bill as it came from the House to put all these things upon the free list at one fell swoop.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say that this same program proposed will be carried out still further as we progress in the consideration of the Democratic bills. I think it will be found that as soon as we reach the chemical bill we will have indigo, that the House bill provided a duty on, carried over to the free list. Of course I know why it is done, Mr. President, and so I suppose every other Member knows. It is only the carrying out of the policy that I desire to call attention to later.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah has shown no great degree of detective ability in his ascertainment of the fact that certain things that were put upon the dutiable list in the chemical schedule by the House will be placed in the bill which will be offered here by the minority members of the Finance Committee upon the free list, among other things, indigo, Chinese nut oil, and some things that go into the making of varnish. We thought we had good reasons for doing that, and it was announced to the entire Finance Committee, as the Chair will remember [Mr. GALLINGER in the chair] that we would do it.

So the bill which we will introduce upon the chemical schedule already contains those amendments to which the Senator refers, the bill as amended being offered as a substitute for the House bill. We did that for the same reason we did this, because after full reflection and thought, as far as we were capable of it, we thought it was the right course to take for men viewing the question from our standpoint.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course I know that the Senators on the other side found a good excuse for putting indigo on the free list. It was because it is used for the dyeing of cotton goods that are made in the South. I know the protest which came from the manufacturers of the South has been heeded, and I will guarantee that that will be the action taken by the Democratic Members when we reach the chemical bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, one word more. It is astonishing, it is more than astonishing, it is astounding that any Senator of the United States should have the audacity to suggest that tariff legislation of this country either was or could be sectional in the interests of the South. If there is any objection to the whole tariff system at all it is that it has been uniformly the history of sectionalism against the South, and the Senator from Utah knows it as well as I do.

Now, then, we are going to vote to keep indigo upon the free list. It is true that indigo enters as a coloring matter into the production of cheap cotton goods, and it is true that a good number of cheap cotton goods are made in the South, but it is not true that the South alone makes that grade of goods—overalls and things of that sort—dyed with indigo.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not say that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Ah, but the Senator threw out the statement that it was done because it would help the South. Your side has not been tender toward this, and God knows none of you have been tender toward us. From the beginning of the history of tariff legislation down to now you have robbed the agricultural masses of the South in order to enrich the manufacturing capital of the Northeast.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I offered this amendment in good faith. The Senator from Utah has seen fit to charge me with playing politics, and perhaps, if he is judging of me by his own conduct, he is justified in forming that judgment of me in this matter.

It is true that quite a number of these machine-tool people came to me and placed their case before me. I suggested their appearing before the Finance Committee, and they did so appear.

As a matter of fact, the duty under the Dingley law was 45 per cent ad valorem. The machine-tool people appeared before the Finance Committee, as I have been advised, at the time of the consideration of the Payne-Aldrich bill and voluntarily asked for a reduction of the duty from 45 per cent ad valorem to 30 per cent ad valorem, and some of the so-called stand-pat element in that committee, as I am told, criticized them severly because they presumed to come before that committee and ask for a reduction of the duty on that or any other article. They were regarded as curiosities, and I think to some extent they are curiosities when they appear before a committee and ask for a reduction of duties. As a rule the committee has been accustomed to have men come and ask for an increase of duties.

Now, I recognize the fact that an injustice, as I believe, has been done to these people. I believe that will be the feeling of all who will study the proposition. I believe in a gradual reduction of these protective tariff duties to a revenue basis, just as our party has declared time and time again. I do not believe we should reduce them from a highly dutiable rate to the free list, particularly when the raw material is placed upon the dutiable list.

I feel that these duties could be reduced 33⅓ per cent without causing any harm or suffering to anyone or to any class of people. I do not think that at the present time they should be put upon the free list. I had supposed that instead of my proposition being one of dissatisfaction to the opposite side of the Chamber they would be entirely satisfied therewith. It is not my desire, and it is not the desire of those on this side of the Chamber, to injure any industry of any kind, but I feel that in these tariff rates we should be just in the matter, and it was to that end that I offered the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I move to amend the amendment of the Senator from Ohio by striking out "twenty" and inserting "thirty."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio, before the words "per cent," strike out "twenty" and insert "thirty," so that if amended it will read:

Machine tools, 30 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio just made the statement that he did not think it was right to have machine tools put upon the free list or any other article in which the raw material was made dutiable, as I understood him. Is that his position?

Mr. POMERENE. I made that statement.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, I hope to see the Senator from Ohio vote against free cotton ties, as there is a duty upon the wire that makes the cotton ties.

Mr. POMERENE. We will cross that bridge when we come to it.

Mr. SMOOT. And I know exactly how the Senator from Ohio will cross it, too.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I shall vote against the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, and vote, of course, against the amendment to it offered by the Senator from Massachusetts. I believe in keeping everything on the free list that can be kept on the free list consistent with the revenues of the Government. I do not think it is possible for us to maintain any such position as is suggested in the amendment of the Senator from Ohio. I dislike very much not to accommodate him, but if we can maintain the proposition the Senator from Ohio is now making we ought to maintain it everywhere. Then every man has a right in his own State and in his own district to favor protection and vote for reducing the tariff on every article produced in everybody else's State and in everybody else's district. I do not believe in that sort of politics. I think it is our duty to stand by the House bill. I say no sufficient argument has been adduced to show why this industry should have protection in Ohio and why other industries in other States should not have protection. If that argument is made, every man has a right to stand by his State and ask for protection. I have declined to ask for protection in favor of any protected industry in the State of Maryland, and I think that is the Democratic position. I propose to stand by the House bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I wish to suggest that there is a little bit of inconsistency on both sides. In the amendment which I proposed yesterday, and which was voted upon yesterday and voted down with the help of the Senator from Utah, a duty upon machine tools of 25 per cent ad valorem was proposed. He voted against that amendment and in favor of a bill which put machine tools upon the free list. I therefore think he is a little bit inconsistent in expressing indignation now with respect to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio which proposes to restore 20 per cent upon this article.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator is speaking as if the condition about machine tools was the only item in the schedule. It was a better item than the others, but there were many much worse than in the Democratic bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. On the contrary, from a practical standpoint, as has been asserted here over and over again, the very great majority of the items in my amendment carried higher duties than the bill from the other side. But there is the same inconsistency on the part of my Democratic friends. They have just voted for an amendment which proposes to put a very large list of articles upon the free list. No one of them has any better right to be on the free list than machine tools, which they now propose to put on the dutiable list. I hope you will all conclude before you have finished this that the real systematic proposal was that made by the Senator from Iowa, and that you all made a great mistake in not voting for his amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I simply want to state to the Senator from Iowa that I was not inconsistent, because of the fact that I made the statement, before ever I voted, that I was not in favor of either one of the bills as they were presented. There are a good many items in the Senator's bill that I would gladly have voted for, but it was presented as a whole, and I had no chance to vote for satisfactory rates without voting for unsatisfactory ones.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I notice the Senator and his colleagues on the committee representing the majority have given notice of an amendment to the woolen bill. I judge by that that he recognizes the fact that the woolen schedule should be changed, and there should be a revision and reduction.

As Senators have not offered any amendment to the metal bill, I want to inquire if my conclusion is correct that by their failure to do so they intend to be understood as favoring the present tariff duties in the Payne-Aldrich law on metals?

Mr. SMOOT. Until there is a report from the Tariff Board or some information more than we have at the present time.

Mr. BACON. The Senator was on the committee when the present law was enacted and did not have any Tariff Board then. I take the liberty of inquiring of the Senator whether, when the Payne-Aldrich bill was enacted, and he himself on the Finance Committee assisted in its framing and advocated it on the floor of the Senate, he thought he had all the information necessary for him to determine what the rates of duty should be in that schedule?

Mr. SMOOT. We had at that time all the information that it was possible to get, so far as the cost of manufacturing goods in this country is concerned.

Mr. BACON. The Senator had all the information he then thought was necessary to enact the law, did he not?

Mr. SMOOT. All that it was possible to get.

Mr. BACON. The Senator does not answer my question. I ask the Senator the question, if he will pardon me for repeating it, Whether they then had all the information that they then thought necessary in order to enable them to frame a correct rate of duty on that metal schedule?

Mr. SMOOT. We had the information and testimony that was presented to the committee, and upon that information and testimony we framed the bill to the best of our ability.

Mr. BACON. But the Senator——

Mr. SMOOT. But not only that, the Senator must know that the rates in many instances were cut at least in two, as has been stated. As far as I am concerned I have stated to the Senate and to the Senator that until we have more information on what is the difference between the cost of producing in this country and abroad, I think it unwise to undertake to revise the metal schedule.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, I wish to see if I can get him to answer the particular question which I asked. I do not ask him to answer yes or no, but I ask him to answer the question. He has not answered it yet, and that is, Whether, when the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill was framed and when the Senate Finance Committee, of which the Senator was then a member, reported that bill favorably to the Senate, did the Senator at that time think they had all the information which was necessary to then frame a bill which should impose the correct rates of duty upon that schedule?

Mr. SMOOT. I will state that we thought we had all the information we could possibly obtain, and we did have the information necessary to make the changes that were made in that bill. But I call the Senator's attention to the fact that this bill to-day was written in the Democratic House without any information or any desire to obtain any information.

Mr. BACON. I am not talking about that bill; I am talking about the Payne-Aldrich bill. I want to find out whether the Senator thinks the Payne-Aldrich bill is correct in its various rates of duty imposed?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. It is as correct——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. SMOOT. I have the floor. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts if he desires to speak.

Mr. LODGE. I will take the floor in my own time, Mr. President.

Mr. SMOOT. I simply rose in the first place to call attention to the inconsistent attitude of the Senator from Ohio in the statement that he made a short time ago.

Mr. BACON. I was trying to counterbalance that by directing attention to the inconsistent attitude of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. The position of the Senator from Ohio is this: He does not want machine tools to be put upon the free list because the material that goes into machine tools is dutiable, and not 10 minutes before he made that statement he had voted to put implements of all kinds—thrashing machines, shovels, hoes, stay chains, and nearly all the tools that are used around a farm—upon the free list.

Mr. LODGE obtained the floor.

Mr. BACON. I will say——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts has been recognized.

Mr. LODGE. I am taking the floor in my own time.

Mr. BACON. I congratulate the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. I think the Senator has reason to congratulate me. My friend the Senator from Georgia seems to be hungering and thirsting for information as to our view about this matter. I can tell him my view in a moment. When he asks if in acting on what is called the Payne-Aldrich bill we had all the necessary information, no, and no committee ever in making a tariff bill had all necessary or possible information. We had some information and on that we did the best we could. This bill is an evidence on its face that it was made without any information or with misinformation.

I take the single item of the ferro-alloys. Apparently the same great mind that defined a wether as "a sheep after the first shearing" thought that ferro-alloys were all alike and all made in the same way. So he takes ferromanganese out of this classification and dumps it in with a lot of other high-priced ores made by the electric-furnace system; takes that blast-furnace product, puts 15 per cent on it, and more than doubles the duty. That is an example of the condition of information on which this bill was made.

I prefer the schedule as it stands in the Payne-Aldrich bill, where large reductions were made; I prefer that schedule in that bill to anything that has been offered. I have not the least objection to saying that to the Senator from Georgia or to anybody else.

As to local feeling, there is no need to apologize for it. It is perfectly natural in the Senator from Ohio. When I first came into the Senate I heard a distinguished Senator from the State of Alabama say here—and the remark always remained with me—that in the course of a long life he had observed that human nature was pretty evenly distributed throughout the United States. Human nature is pretty evenly distributed now; and everybody in the Senate—and I have seen evidences of it time and again on both sides—is not in a hurry to sacrifice the industries of his own State. I have seen many an occasion when the revenue duty became so elastic that it furnished protection for a particular locality, and I do not think any Senator needs to apologize for looking after the industries of his own State. We all do it in one way or another, except the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER], who says that he does not; but most of us are not quite so Roman, and we are generally looking after our own industries.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I am sorry that I can not agree with the Senator from Massachusetts that the most of us are looking after our own industries. I do not think that is the case at all. This is the first time I have known a Democratic Senator to rise here and ask for protection for an industry of his own State; and I would like the Senator from Massachusetts to select Members on this side who are looking after the industries of their States; I would like the Senator to select——

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. RAYNER. One moment now. I would like the Senator to select Senators, as a rule, who stand in any different position from that I occupy. For instance, I was asked years ago—and the Senator will recollect it, because he served in the House of Representatives with me—I was asked whether I would vote for free coal, the production of coal being one of the principal industries in my State, and I said "yes." One industry after another was quoted there in the House of Representatives, and I was challenged to say whether or not I would vote for protection. I made the same reply that I have made to-day, that we have no right to stand here—and I think Senators will agree with me, as a rule, on the Democratic side—to vote for protection in our own States and in our own districts and to vote for free trade in everybody else's State and in everybody else's district. The doctrine of tariff for revenue goes to the ground if that is done. I deny that the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts is a correct statement. I would like very much to accommodate our friend from Ohio; but, as I understand, this is the first amendment that the Democratic minority of the Finance Committee have agreed to make to the bill as it came from the House—I do not know whether I am right about that—but I understand that in all the different schedules and parts of schedules that have come from the House the Democratic minority of the Finance Committee have agreed to make this one amendment in order to protect an industry in Ohio. I say that we have no right to do it.

The point has been made that the raw materials that go into the manufacture of this industry are taxed. I think that is wrong. I think wherever you can lower the duty on the raw materials that you ought to do it, and wherever you can make raw materials free, it ought to be done; but there are any number of cases in the schedules where this can not be done. There are any number of cases in which you can not take off the duties upon the raw materials. This furnishes no reason why we should not keep the manufactured article upon the free list if it is possible to do so.

The House of Representatives has passed a Democratic tariff bill, and I have been given no reason and I have heard no reason why we should abandon our doctrine and protect an industry in any State, I do not care in whose State it is, whether it is in my State or in any other State. I would not stand on this floor as a representative of the Democratic Party and claim protection for any industry of the State of Maryland. That is my doctrine.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I took pains to except the Senator from Maryland——

Mr. RAYNER. But the Senator from Massachusetts had no right to take pains to except me, because I am not an exception.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, who has the floor?

Mr. RAYNER. I stand with every other Democratic Senator upon this side of the Chamber, and the Senator had no right to isolate me and except me.

Mr. LODGE. I thought I had been recognized.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts had been recognized. The Chair will now take occasion to admonish Senators—for the rule has been violated in countless instances to-day—that they should address the Chair and get permission to interrupt other Senators.

Mr. RAYNER. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. LODGE. I wanted to complete my sentence. I said that I carefully excepted the Senator from Maryland, and pointed out that his attitude was Roman. I cast no reflection upon him, but I say that this is the first instance, perhaps, where it has occurred on this schedule. But, Mr. President, is it necessary to go back over the past to remind Senators of sugar and lumber and rice and alligator skins and pineapples? Must I go on with the list? I have seen some pretty good protectionist votes cast on the other side of the Chamber. I remember that as to quebracho and chestnut juice—the duty on those articles emanated from Virginia. I am reminded, too, of peanuts, and long staple cotton, and tea in South Carolina—all of those have been offered on the other side of the Chamber in my time as articles to be protected. I do not hold that as a reflection against those Senators. It is perfectly natural. I do not hold such a strong and rigid virtue as that. I know that the Democrats are in general for a tariff for revenue only; but if they can soften the asperities of a tariff for revenue for the localities in which they are peculiarly interested, I can not see any harm at all in their doing so.

Mr. RAYNER. I do not think the Senator from Massachusetts——

Mr. LODGE. I can mention other cases if the Senator wishes me to do so.

Mr. RAYNER. Yes; I would like the Senator to mention some others, because I do not think he has mentioned a single case that is applicable to this subject.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, how about Louisiana sugar, to begin with?

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, with that exception, every case which the Senator has mentioned is a case where Senators on this side voted for a duty for revenue, and not a duty for protection.

Mr. LODGE. How about the duty on pineapples that was moved by a Democratic Senator when the Payne-Aldrich bill was pending?

Mr. RAYNER. That duty, Mr. President, was defeated. There is a reduced duty on pineapples; and the large majority of us stood up here and voted for a reduction of the duty. There is no necessity for the Senator from Massachusetts selecting a single Senator and saying that that Senator, for some reason or other, represented the principles of the Democratic Party. Why does not the Senator pick out a majority of the Democratic Senators on this side? There is not a Senator on this side who ever voted against a revenue duty and for a duty for protection. I challenge contradiction.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. RAYNER. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I thought I had the floor; but I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts has the floor.

Mr. RAYNER. I thought the Senator had finished.

Mr. LODGE. I had not.

Mr. RAYNER. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I do not want the Senator to yield. I will take the floor in my own right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts is entitled to the floor. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. RAYNER. I shall be done in a moment. I do not speak continuously for three or four days. I generally finish in about three or four minutes. I have very little to say here, except this: I do not like the idea of being singled out; I do not like the idea of being made an exception to the Democratic side.

The Senator talks about free sugar. I recollect the day when the whole Democratic side of the House of Representatives stood up, man after man, unanimously voting in favor of free sugar. We are not responsible for things that took place in the Senate afterwards. It is not fair to select a single Senator upon this side any more than it would be fair to select some single Senator on the other side as representing the principles of the party. The overwhelming majority of the Senators on this side have always voted for a tariff for revenue as against a tariff for protection. There may be isolated instances to the contrary; and I think in the case of lumber good reasons were given. The tariff on lumber was a revenue tariff. So far as the tariff on tea was concerned, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] had no idea that his amendment would succeed.

Now, let us get to the point and stop talking about the Payne-Aldrich bill and matters that have no reference to this subject. Let us talk about the amendment before the Senate. I certainly do not desire to comment upon the Senator from Ohio; that is the last thing in the world that I would do; but the Senator from Ohio comes here—let us be perfectly frank about it—and asks for protection upon an Ohio industry, and he asks the Democratic side to aid him in protecting an Ohio industry. I am opposed to that.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland accused me of picking him out alone as unassailable, whereas I said everybody was. He asked me to name others besides the Senator from Ohio on the Democratic side who in the past had manifested an interest in the industries of their own States. I named 8 or 10, and I can name a good many more. The Senator says they were individual Senators. Of course they were; that is why I named so many articles, because each article meant one or two more Senators. I wanted to cover as many as I could. I have found no fault with them for doing so, and I do not see why they should not have done so.

The Senator says there were good reasons for the revenue duty on lumber. There are always good reasons for a protective duty for the locality that needs it. There is nothing so flexible as a revenue duty. You can fix the rate at a protective point or you can fix it lower, just as you please; there is nothing stable about the revenue point. I do not blame Senators for doing it, and I am criticizing nobody for doing it; but, on the contrary, I simply was pointing out that it had been done many times and it will be done a great many more times before we get through talking about the tariff.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I certainly do not object to the Senator's stand. I admire the stand the Republican Party has taken for protection, and I have nothing to say about that. Any man who is for protection as a principle certainly deserves the respect of the other side, to say the least.

So far as lumber is concerned, of course I voted for free lumber, but there were other Senators who voted differently. What I contend for is this: I contend for the proposition that we have not any right to protect the industries of our own States. I am for a tariff for revenue; I am for putting everything on the free list that can be put upon the free list consistent with the raising of revenue. If a tariff for revenue gives incidental protection I can not help it, but I am for a tariff for revenue. I am not for a tariff for protection with incidental revenue, and I believe that the vast majority of Senators on this side agree with me in the views I have expressed.

Mr. BACON obtained the floor.

Mr. RAYNER. I want to say this before the Senator from Georgia commences. The Senator from Georgia, after an exhaustive examination, compiled a table of yea-and-nay votes taken during the tariff session of 1909. It was one of the most instructive tables used during the last campaign, showing exactly how each Senator voted on all amendments proposed to the tariff bill. I think that table absolutely sustains the views I am expressing, that nearly every Senator on this side all the time, through all the schedules, in all the votes, voted for a tariff for revenue and not for a tariff for protection.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia was recognized. Does he yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BACON. In a moment. What the Senator from Maryland has said about the votes cast by the Democrats during the consideration of the Payne-Aldrich bill is true, as shown by the RECORD; but that is not what I rose to say. I rose to say simply this: That I was trying to get the Senator from Utah and others who think with him to state plainly whether they favor the present metal schedule as found in the law. I have not been able to get them to say whether they do or not.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me——

Mr. BACON. I beg the Senator's pardon. I will yield to the Senator in a moment; I want to finish my statement. This is as far as the Senator from Massachusetts would go, that he preferred the metal schedule of the Payne-Aldrich law to anything else that was offered. That is what the Senator said. That is also true, I presume, of the woolen bill—that he prefers the woolen schedule as it is now found in the law rather than anything which has been offered. But the point that I was trying to get the Senator's attention to was that, while in the case of the woolen schedule they do recognize that there should be a reduction by giving notice that they themselves intend to offer a bill which will reduce the duties to a certain extent, they have failed to make any such offer in the case of the metal schedule, from which I drew the conclusion that they favor the metal schedule as it stands. That is all I want them to say. They shelter themselves behind the excuse that, in the first place, it is better than anything which has been offered, which is not an answer, because the same thing is true, in their opinion, as to the woolen bill; and, second, that they have not had information from a Tariff Board, when Congress has been legislating for over a hundred years on the tariff without the assistance of a Tariff Board, and when the Congress, then strongly Republican in both branches, three years ago did not express any hesitation as to whether or not their conclusions were then correct as to what should be the real duties in the metal schedule; but all at once there has developed a great amount of uncertainty, to put it as mildly as possible. They do not know now what it ought to be, forsooth; they must wait until they can have the report of a Tariff Board before they can express an opinion whether the present law is as it should be or is not as it should be.

I want to say another word, Mr. President, and that is this: This is the first Congress for a long time in which the Democrats have had responsibility, in part, as to the framing of a tariff law. The Democratic House has sent us a bill and, whatever may be said about the past, Senators on the other side of the Chamber will have the opportunity, if they wish to do so, to vote for a revenue tariff bill, and they will find that Senators on this side of the Chamber will sustain the Democratic House in an effort to reduce the tariff; and they will not be distinguished by any such want of fidelity to principle as the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Utah would suggest.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland raises the point of no quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Dillingham	McLean	Shively
Bacon	du Pont	Martin, Va.	Simmons
Bankhead	Fall	Martine, N. J	Smith, Ariz.
Borah	Fletcher	Myers	Smith, Ga.
Bourne	Foster	Newlands	Smith, S. C.
Bradley	Gallinger	Nixon	Smoot
Bryan	Gardner	Oliver	Stephenson
Burton	Gronna	Overman	Sutherland
Catron	Heyburn	Page	Swanson
Chamberlain	Hitchcock	Paynter	Townsend
Chilton	Johnson, Me.	Penrose	Watson
Clapp	Johnston, Ala.	Perkins	Williams
Clarke, Ark.	Jones	Pomerene	Works
Cullom	Kern	Rayner
Cummins	Lodge	Richardson
Curtis	McCumber	Sanders

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

The question is upon the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. RAYNER. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland demands the yeas and nays. Is there a second?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BACON. I raise the point of order that when a Senator addresses the Chair, even if the yeas and nays have been demanded, the question ought not to be put as to the yeas and nays until after the Senator has finished. How does anyone know whether or not it will be two hours before the yeas and nays are called, and the contemplation of the law is that the yeas and nays will be called for by those who are present at the time and who are going to participate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair does not agree with the Senator from Georgia. The Senator from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I do not intend by the amendment which I have offered or by the remarks which have been made by several Senators to be placed in a false attitude. I did not offer this amendment as a protectionist. I do not offer it as a protection duty. I am not asking for protection for any single industry in Ohio. I am asking simply that justice be done under all the circumstances of the case.

Neither the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] nor the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], nor anyone else, I think, who has studied this question, will say that a duty of 20 per cent would be a protective duty. It is a revenue duty, and nothing more and nothing less than that. In fact, some of the testimony before the committee shows that in order to make it a protective duty they desire an increase to 45 per cent, and I have letters to that effect from some of the men interested in that business.

Under the Dingley bill it was on a protective basis of 45 per cent. Under the Payne-Aldrich bill it was reduced to 30 per cent. Under the Underwood bill it is proposed to put it upon the free list. I think by reducing it from 30 per cent, as it now is, to a duty of 20 per cent ad valorem, we will leave it on a revenue basis. It certainly is not on a revenue basis when it is placed on the free list.

Am I extreme in this? Is my position wrong or different from that of my party? Let us see what the platform says on the subject:

We favor immediate revision of the tariff by the reduction of import duties.

This is a reduction of 33⅓ per cent.

Articles entering into competition with trust-controlled products should be placed upon the free list.

It is not contended here that the machine tools are trust made, by any means.

Material reductions should be made in the tariff upon the necessaries of life, especially upon articles competing with such American manufactures as are sold abroad more cheaply than at home.

And that is true with regard to most of the articles placed on the free list, or the greater proportion of them, under the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia. I do not have the memorandum at hand now. They have been sold at times, at least, at a lower price abroad than at home.

Then the Democratic platform further reads:

And gradual reductions should be made in such other schedules as may be necessary to restore the tariff to a revenue basis.

That is what I propose in this amendment. Here are these articles, which are manufactured not by the trust, but by people of modest means. We are reducing their tariff, and I hope to have it, as it will be some day, on a free-trade basis; but under our platform and in harmony with my views on this subject I do not think it is proper that these articles should be taken entirely from a protection basis and placed on a free-trade basis at once, but let us do so gradually, and it is to that end that I offer the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll on the question of agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BACON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. As I understand it, the vote is now on the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BACON. I did not know that all Senators knew that fact.

Mr. LODGE. To make it 30 per cent instead of 20 per cent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the fact.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GARDNER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. CRANE]. If I were at liberty to vote upon this proposition, I should vote "nay."

Mr. JOHNSON of Maine (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. PAYNTER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. GUGGENHEIM]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BROWN]. I transfer the pair to the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], who is now absent and will be for some time. I will continue the transfer during his absence. I shall vote during the day without any further explanation. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER] is paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN].

Mr. WATSON. I announce the transfer of my general pair to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DU PONT. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. As he is not present in the Chamber, I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LORIMER] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to state that the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] is necessarily absent from the Chamber. If he were here, he would vote "nay."

Mr. BURNHAM. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. I transfer it to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. JONES. My colleague [Mr. POINDEXTER] is necessarily detained from the Chamber. I think if he were present he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 37, as follows:

YEAS—27.

So Mr. LODGE's amendment to Mr. POMERENE's amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE].

Mr. BURTON. I suggest an amendment to the amendment of my colleague, to strike out the word "twenty" and insert the word "twenty-five."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio offers an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Before the words "per cent," strike out "twenty" and insert "twenty-five."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BURTON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I rise to ask a question for information. I should like to ask some Senator on the other side, as well as on this, as to the line of demarcation between a protective duty and a revenue duty. If I understood the Senator from Ohio correctly, he said that under the Dingley bill this identical article bore a 45 per cent duty. It was then reduced in the Payne-Aldrich law to a 30 per cent duty. The Senator from Ohio proposes to reduce it to a 20 per cent duty, and the gentlemen on the other side have taken occasion to criticize the Senator from Ohio with the statement that 20 per cent would be still protective. Now, by a logical deduction, if 45 per cent was protective and 30 per cent was protective and 20 per cent is protective, then a duty of 25 per cent must of necessity be protective. I do not see exactly wherein lies the argument in twitting the Senator from Ohio with a protective duty, when he proposes to reduce it to 20 per cent and it is still protective, and when the claim has been made by Members on the other side that they simply want a rate of duty that will measure the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad, with a reasonable profit to the manufacturer.

I am not standing here to say that I am advocating the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio. I am going to vote for that article to go on the free list for the reason that, as a Democrat, believing in protection for revenue, I believe that the principle of a protective duty being necessary for the support of the Government has been so abused by the other side that we can not even vote for a revenue duty without being twitted with having a special interest in view.

As one of the Senators from South Carolina, I want to say that I have been consistent wherever it was possible for me to be so, and that I have voted, as near as possible, for all articles to go on the free list, not because it was strictly in accord with the doctrines of my party, but because the mere fact of a revenue duty had been so abused by protectionists that I could not vote even for this revenue duty without laying myself open to the charge that I was attempting to hide behind a revenue duty rather than to come out in the open and say that I wanted protection. It is better for the people of this country to suffer for the lack of sufficient revenue than to be put in the attitude of being open to a charge that a Senator is using a subterfuge to hide behind a special interest in his own part of the country.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, it seems to me that the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] can be defended on purely Democratic doctrine and as being in line with the bill itself. The average tariff on the metal schedule as existing at present is 35 per cent. The bill sent to us by the House of Representatives represents an average of 22 per cent. The Senator from Ohio proposes a duty of 20 per cent on an article that is rather highly finished. It seems to me that for that reason his amendment can be defended as Democratic and as being in harmony with the other provisions of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE].

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], and withhold my vote. As I understand that Senator from Missouri is absent for the day I desire this statement to stand for the day.

Mr. DU PONT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LORIMER], and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. GARDNER (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. CRANE], and withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY]. I do not observe that he is in the Chamber, and so I withhold my vote.

Mr. PAYNTER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. GUGGENHEIM]. He is absent from the Chamber, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I again transfer my general pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRIGGS] to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], and vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to state that the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS]. If the junior Senator from South Dakota were here he would vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Then I, having a pair with that Senator, withdraw my vote.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE] is paired with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY], with whom I am paired, would probably vote the same way that I would vote on this question. So I withdraw the announcement of the pair, and vote "nay."

Mr. FOSTER. In the absence of my pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (after having voted in the negative). I ask if the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON] has voted? He intimated to me that he might be absent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The junior Senator from Delaware has not voted.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Then I transfer my pair with that Senator to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY], and will let my vote stand.

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 33, as follows:

YEAS—27.

Borah	Catron	Lippitt	Poindexter

So Mr. BURTON's amendment to Mr. POMERENE's amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE].

Mr. RAYNER. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HEYBURN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. I do not see him present and I will therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. PAYNTER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. GUGGENHEIM]. He is not present, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I again transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I make the same announcement as to the transfer of my pair as on the previous vote. I desire this announcement to stand for the day. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HEYBURN. I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LORIMER] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Because of the absence from the Chamber of the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], with whom I have a pair, I withhold my vote.

So Mr. POMERENE's amendment was rejected.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask the Secretary to read the amendment I offer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. Insert the following as a new section at the end of the bill:

That on the 1st day of January, 1913, a reduction of 10 per cent shall be made in the duties now imposed by law on articles imported into the United States from foreign countries, and that on the 1st day of January of each year thereafter for the period of four years a further reduction of 5 per cent shall be made on such duties until a total reduction of 30 per cent in such duties shall be made: Provided, however, That such reductions shall not apply to duties on articles which have been specifically fixed by law at this session of Congress or shall be hereafter specifically fixed by law: And provided further, That such reduction shall not apply to duties on articles the importations of which during the previous fiscal year have equaled one-tenth of the production of similar articles in the United States.

That the ascertainment of the facts upon which the foregoing provisions shall take effect shall be made by a tariff commission consisting of five members, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, of whom no more than three shall belong to the same party; that the terms of the commissioners shall be one, two, three, four, and five years, respectively; and that the President in appointing such commissioners shall designate the terms of each; that at the expiration of such terms the term of each successor shall be for the period of five years.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment is to bring the two great parties of the country in harmony in accomplishing a needed reduction in the tariff, such reduction to be accomplished in a manner consistent with the principals of both parties.

For many years a reduction in the tariff has been urged. The Democratic Party has been urging it ever since the Civil War, and, with the exception of a few years, when it secured a temporary reduction of the tariff, its efforts have been without result. The Republican Party has recently declared for a revision and reduction of the tariff. The Republican Party proposes to establish that reduction by ascertaining the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad. The Democratic Party in its platform has pledged itself to a gradual reduction of duties toward a revenue basis.

This amendment accomplishes a reduction without violating the principles of either party. It provides for an immediate reduction of 10 per cent upon all existing duties and a reduction at the rate of 5 per cent per annum for four years thereafter, making a total reduction of 30 per cent. But the amendment contains a proviso that this reduction shall not apply to any duty fixed at this session of Congress or to any duty the importations under which to-day equal one-tenth of the domestic production, and therefore the reduction does not apply to any duty in the existing tariff which can be fairly termed a revenue duty.

The proviso also declares that the annual reduction shall not apply to duties on articles the importations of which during the previous fiscal year have equaled one-tenth of the total domestic production of such article, thus accomplishing a termination of the reduction whenever we reach the importing level and when increased importations may seriously disturb American labor or American industries.

It may be said that this involves an indorsement of the Republican principle of protection. I deny that. It does not affirm or approve in any way the Republican principle of protection. It simply recognizes the fact of protection, and that under a protective system industries have been so stimulated that if a radical change is made serious readjustments may follow.

The Democratic Party recognizes the fact of protection in its platform, for it provides for a gradual reduction of duties. Every Democratic platform has declared its intention not to affect American wages or to seriously impair American industries. The Democratic Party has wisely recognized the fact of protection and is determined to legislate so gradually and so progressively as not to injure the American workingmen or American industries. It has recognized the fact that a sliding reduction is essential in order to reach safely the goal of a revenue basis which it has in view.

Mr. President, the debate which has just ensued——

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I should like to suggest to the Senator from Nevada that the amendment which he has introduced is a very important amendment, but it has not been referred to the Committee on Finance, and they have had no opportunity to give it consideration. The amendment can be offered to some other of these bills which will be brought before the Senate, and I suggest to the Senator that, instead of pressing it as an amendment to this bill, he withdraw it, and let it be referred to the Finance Committee for consideration, and then to offer it later on to some other of the tariff bills.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from North Carolina how many other revenue bills are there to which this amendment could be offered?

Mr. SIMMONS. There are four others.

Mr. NEWLANDS. What are they?

Mr. SIMMONS. One is the sugar schedule, another is the excise bill, another is the chemical bill, and the other is the woolen bill. I think probably the Senator's amendment would come better in connection with the excise bill than with any other, but that would be a matter for the determination of the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Well, Mr. President, I will accept the suggestion of the Senator from North Carolina and will frame the amendment so that it may be applicable to any of the pending revenue bills. I recognize the force of what he says. I regard this as a very important amendment. I hope that it will receive the careful consideration, the nonpartisan consideration, of the Committee on Finance, for I regard it as a rational solution, which will bring about gradually and progressively a reduction in the tariff, which all desire, without in any way prejudicing American interests.

I will add—and I shall be brief upon the subject—that the discussion which has recently taken place upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] in regard to the duty on machine tools demonstrates the necessity of some such action as I suggest. The bill came from the House of Representatives to this body and was reported by the minority of the Finance Committee. It contained a free list including machine tools. Machine tools are suddenly transferred from a dutiable list involving a tax of 30 per cent, I believe, to the free list.

Workingmen employed in this industry in the State of Ohio complain that the reduction is too radical, and the Senator from Ohio, a Democrat, recognizing that fact and justifying himself by a Democratic platform which he has quoted, offers a duty of 20 per cent upon machine tools, a reduction of 33⅓ per cent upon the existing duty, and that amendment is accepted by the minority members of the Finance Committee, but rejected by the Senate, and rejected by a divided vote among the Democrats themselves, the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] declaring that he was going to stand by the free list. Why? Did he assert that he had any knowledge upon the subject? No. He simply declared that the other House had put these articles upon the free list, and that he proposed to stand by the House. I assume that each member of the Democratic Party in the House took the same position when it came from the Ways and Means Committee. We should probably find, if we made inquiry of the Ways and Means Committee, that the placing of these machine tools upon the free list was the act of one member, who had made the investigation. Thus we find the action of an entire body relegated finally to the judgment and the decision of an individual member of the Ways and Means Committee in the other House. I do not say it is so, but it is quite possible that it is so.

With these differences of views amongst Democrats themselves, how are we to arrive at any harmony of action? Is it not a great deal better to feel our way down toward a revenue tariff than to jump down from a high protective tariff to a revenue tariff, to jump down from high protective duties to a free list? If we gradually reduce these duties, what possible harm can be accomplished? I do not propose to reduce by this amendment a single revenue duty. The reduction does not apply to any duty the importations under which equal one-tenth of the total domestic production of any article. Is there any Democrat who will insist upon it that importations shall exceed one-tenth of the total of domestic production? If so, let him name his limit. Surely the importation of one-tenth of the articles produced in our domestic manufactures will give a revenue; and the effect of my amendment will be to absolutely destroy every prohibitory duty. That is an object which the Democrats wish to accomplish, and which every reasonable Republican ought to wish to accomplish. The Republicans should not be in favor of prohibitory duties; they wish duties that will enable American producers to command the American market, according to the statement of the leaders of that party—both stand pat and insurgent—the other day. By that I assume they do not mean the command of the American market to the absolute exclusion of all foreign goods, but they must be desirous that some portion of foreign manufactures in each grade of industry shall slip over the tariff wall as a regulator against extortion and exaction.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. GRONNA. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bacon	Fall	McLean	Smith, Md.
Borah	Fletcher	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Mich.
Bradley	Gallinger	Myers	Smoot
Brandegee	Gardner	Nelson	Stephenson
Bristow	Gronna	Newlands	Sutherland
Burton	Heyburn	O'Gorman	Thornton
Catron	Hitchcock	Page	Tillman
Clark, Wyo.	Johnson, Me.	Perkins	Townsend
Culberson	Johnston, Ala.	Poindexter	Williams
Cullom	Jones	Root	Works
Cummins	Kern	Sanders
Dillingham	Lea	Shively
du Pont	Lodge	Simmons

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum of the Senate is present. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I am aware that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] wishes to bring this bill to a vote this afternoon, if possible, and I will simply close what I have to say on this subject by stating that my amendment will absolutely do away with every prohibitory duty and will change every prohibitory duty into a revenue duty; that whilst accomplishing this, the reduction is so shaped as that the reduction shall cease when the importation of any article equals one-tenth of the total domestic production, thus relegating the whole matter to Congress, and thus preventing a flood of importations which may prostrate American workmen or injure American industries. The amendment does not apply to any duty which shall be specifically fixed at this session of Congress or hereafter fixed, so that the whole range of tariff duties is before us for future special revision.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. CULBERSON. If this amendment does not apply to any duties which may be fixed at this session or at any subsequent session, to what duties can it apply?

Mr. NEWLANDS. It applies to all the duties that are not fixed at this session; so that if legislation should fail entirely, it would apply to every duty in the Payne-Aldrich Act.

Mr. CULBERSON. The contemplation is, then, that nothing will be done at this session?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Well, I very much fear that nothing will be done. I hope to accomplish something myself, and will use every effort in that direction, but I have assumed that all legislation might fail, and that, at all events, only partial legislation would be secured.

Mr. CULBERSON. My inquiry was to secure information. The first proviso of the amendment of the Senator from Nevada reads:

> Provided, however, That such reductions shall not apply to duties on articles which have been specifically fixed by law at this session of Congress or shall be hereafter specifically fixed by law.

I was concerned with knowing to what that did apply, and it was purely for information that I asked the question.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator understands, of course, that if we should revise, say, the metal schedule, and it should receive the approval of the President, this amendment would not apply to that, because that metal schedule would contain duties specifically fixed at this session of Congress, and the proviso would apply to it; but the amendment would apply to every other schedule with reference to which no duties have been changed, and thus work a gradual and automatic reduction of excessive duties.

Mr. CULBERSON. Then, if we should pass a law fixing a tariff at this session on one schedule, Schedule K, for instance, and not upon any of the others, this automatic reduction would go on with reference to the others for four years, but not with reference to Schedule K?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes; it would not apply to Schedule K in that event, because presumably——

Mr. CULBERSON. Would that not be unequal and inequitable and disarrange the whole tariff procedure?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do not think so, Mr. President. We have already adopted the policy of considering each schedule by itself, without relation to the others; and if Congress does exercise its judgment with reference to the revision of a particular schedule, and that judgment is confirmed by the President of the United States, there is no reason why the automatic reduction provided for by this amendment should apply to it; but, with reference to all the other schedules concerning which legislation is either unsought or fails, it is extremely desirable that a gradual reduction, running over a period of four years, should be accomplished which would destroy the prohibitory duties, change them all into revenue duties, and yet, at the same time, accomplish a reduction without seriously increasing the importations of the country. The bill guards against a flood, which might prove serious, and applies a brake to the reduction when it threatens injury.

This amendment is tariff reduction with a brake, to be applied under a rule fixed by Congress—a self-acting brake. The tariff commission which this amendment provides for has no power to fix duties and no power to reduce duties, but is simply to ascertain the facts upon which the reduction shall take place; and we thus in this amendment simply fix the rule of action.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I am through, Mr. President. I will state that I will accept the suggestion of the Senator from North Carolina, withdraw the amendment which I have offered to this bill, and present it to another revenue bill, so that it can be considered by the Finance Committee. I would suggest that it be added to that bill which is most likely to receive the signature of the President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada withdraws his amendment.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, and I ask that it may be read. I offer it to be inserted as a new section on page 22, after the word "parts," in line 14.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 22, after line 14, it is proposed to insert the following:

> That sections 1 and 3 of the act entitled "An act to promote reciprocal trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes," approved July 26, 1911, be, and are hereby, repealed.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I offered this amendment some time in February last, and I asked to have it referred to the Committee on Finance. Whether that committee has considered it or not, I do not know.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. I can give the Senator some information. The Committee on Finance considered the question, including the entire reciprocity act, and reported favorably a bill which is now on the calendar. On the first day of this session of Congress I introduced a bill providing for the repeal of the entire act, so that, having provided for that, it did not seem necessary to the committee to provide for the repeal of particular sections.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator will permit me, I wish to ask him this question: Does the Senator from Idaho think that his bill will be passed at this session of Congress?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; I expect it to pass.

Mr. GRONNA. This amendment, Mr. President, does not provide for the repeal of section 2 of the reciprocity act.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, if the Senator will permit me——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Can the Senator give any good reason why that section should not be repealed, as well as the other sections, if we are going into the matter of repealing the law?

Mr. GRONNA. I can give a reason why from my standpoint the Senate should not initiate it. Section 2 is now a law, and as I understand the Constitution of the United States all revenue measures must originate in the House. The reciprocity law is as much a revenue measure as any other tariff law which we have upon our statute books.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield further?

Mr. GRONNA. I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. That section does not provide any revenue at all.

Mr. GRONNA. Section 2 is operative whether it is accepted by Canada or not; it is a law whether the Canadian Government rejected it or not. About a year ago this iniquitous measure was passed by Republican votes. We, who have believed——

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; I yield.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think the Senator's recollection is at fault. My recollection is that it was not passed by Republican votes, but that Democratic votes, with a few Republican votes, passed the measure. A majority of the Republicans voted against it in both Houses.

Mr. GRONNA. I should like to have the Senator from Idaho tell me who those Republicans were who voted for that measure, and whether they are the ones who are now known as "stand-pat protectionists," or whether those who are generally known as "insurgents."

Mr. HEYBURN. Well, there is only one kind; no man is a Republican who is not a protectionist.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. GRONNA. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Accepting the division which the Senator from North Dakota is pleased to make, I will say that some of the strongest opponents of this measure on the floor of the Senate and on the floor of the other House were those who are called "stand-pat" Republicans; and some of the most earnest speeches—perhaps not the most effective, but the most earnest—against this bill upon the floor of the Senate were made by what are sometimes called "stand-pat" Republicans.

Mr. GRONNA. Is it not also true that the measure did pass by the support of what is known as the "standpatters" of this body?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It is true, Mr. President, that the bill was passed by the Democratic Party, assisted by certain Republican Members on this floor.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. If there are two Republican Members on this floor who are classed as "standpatters," they are the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]; and my recollection is that both of those Senators opposed the bill——

Mr. GALLINGER. And spoke against it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. And I know that for myself I opposed it, as did other Republican Members upon the floor of the Senate.

Mr. GRONNA. That is true. I should not have referred to the two factions in the Republican Party were it not for the fact that we have been taunted by men of our own party, men on this side, and I want to make the statement, without fear of successful contradiction, that if the Republicans had enacted the Payne bill as it passed the House there would, in my opinion, have been no great dissatisfaction on the part of the American people. That measure, when it passed the House and when it was known as the Payne bill, before it became known by any other name, provided a reduction of tariff duties.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I do not want to interrupt the Senator unless he is willing to be interrupted——

Mr. GRONNA. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HEYBURN. What promise was ever made that the tariff legislation of that Congress would be a reduction? I read it in the Democratic platform, but it never was written into the Republican platform. I think, probably, some of the men who advocated it outside of this body and some in the body must have turned two pages at once and confused the Democratic declaration in favor of reduction with the Republican declaration that did not contain any such promise. Why should we have adopted a bill that was a reduction? It was a fulfillment of a Democratic promise when it came over here, and we took that sting out of it.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I will try to answer frankly the Senator from Idaho. It was understood, I believe, by every Republican in this country——

Mr. HEYBURN. Oh, no.

Mr. GRONNA. That an extra session of Congress would be called for the purpose of revising the tariff. There was not a single Republican who had the courage to go upon the stump and advocate any increase in the tariff; at least I never heard of any in the country where I live, and where I help to elect Republican candidates. It was announced from every platform that the revision called for meant a downward revision.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the country at large understood no such thing. The Senator probably did not hear the echo of the voices of Republicans who were speaking along straight, well-established Republican lines. Not only did we not concede in our country that it was to be a revision downward, but we took occasion at all times to assure the people that it was not to be a revision downward.

Mr. GRONNA. Well, Mr. President, there may be an honest difference of opinion about that. I have made the statement, and I emphasize it now, that the extra session of Congress was called for the purpose of revising the tariff and that it was understood as clearly as it could be understood that an honest revision would be a downward revision, not on all the 4,000 items contained in the tariff bill, but on items where the tariff was unduly high. Tariff rates that had been prohibitive for many years, rates that simply applied to industries owned and controlled absolutely by monopolies, were the rates the American people wanted to have revised.

It is true, as the Senator says, that there was no demand for a reduction in the duties on agricultural products. Personally I have no objection to reducing them. If they are too high, reduce them. But there was no demand by the American people that the agricultural schedule should be revised and reduced. The agricultural industry is not owned and controlled by a monopoly. It never has been and it never will be. There are more than 35,000,000 people who depend upon this great industry. There are some ten or eleven million people who own and operate these farms, and it is an absolute impossibility to build up a monopoly in this industry.

We showed conclusively to the Committee on Finance a year ago when this iniquitous measure was passed in this body that the farmers were not receiving any unduly high prices for their agricultural products. We proved it beyond a question of doubt that they had not unduly profited in their industry.

I believe the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] will agree with me on this: I may not personally be regarded as being so good a protectionist as he is, but I believe in protection. It is true that just a moment ago I voted to place agricultural implements on the free list. I acknowledge as a protectionist, as a genuine 100 per cent pure protectionist, perhaps I should not have voted for it; but I do not know how I could justify my position by voting for a duty upon agricultural implements and then say to those who are engaged in the farming industry that their products shall be placed upon the free list.

When we gave Canada reciprocity with our country in agricultural products we might just as well have placed them on the free list for all the world. We proved to the Senate a year ago that it would be an injury to the farmers of this country if that bill was passed. It is still a law in this country as much as we can make it so, and if it had not been for the action the people of Canada took we would to-day be facing the question of free trade with Canada, not in manufactured products, but in what you call raw materials.

Mr. President, I did not intend to make a speech upon this question at all. I did not intend to say as much as I have already said, but I make the statement, based upon the importations of the year 1907, the Payne bill as it passed the House was, on the average, a small reduction.

Computed on the basis of the dutiable imports for the year 1907, the average rate of the Dingley law is 41.12 per cent, while the average rate of the Payne-Aldrich law is 41.58 per cent—on the whole an increase. The figures from which these average rates are calculated are those prepared under direction of the Finance Committee. If we take both the free and dutiable imports, we find that the average rate of the Dingley law was 23.25 per cent, while the average rate of the new law is 23.51 per cent. There can therefore be no doubt as to whether the revision was upward or downward. The average rate of the new law is clearly higher than that of the Dingley law.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. Was there an increase on the imports of agricultural implements and products?

Mr. GRONNA. No, there was not; it was a small reduction.

Mr. HEYBURN. It was a reduction?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes, there was a small reduction; I do not recollect just how much.

Mr. HEYBURN. That was not in response to any platform demand?

Mr. GRONNA. Taking the whole bill, I think the average duty, taking the goods on the dutiable list in the Dingley law, was some 43 or 44 per cent; and when it passed the House there was a decrease, a small decrease, but there was a decrease.

Mr. HEYBURN. I would ask the Senator, Was that decrease confined to a class of items or was the decrease he mentions applicable to the entire bill?

Mr. GRONNA. I have reference now to the entire bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. Now, what decrease was there in agricultural implements, and did the Senator favor a decrease in duties upon agricultural implements and products?

Mr. GRONNA. I want to be perfectly frank with the Senator from Idaho. I voted for the Payne bill as it passed the House.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator did not object to the protection given to agriculture and the related products.

Mr. GRONNA. I do not believe I have any right to refer to what happened in the House; only that which has been printed in the RECORD. The Senator from Idaho knows as well as I do that the Members of the House were permitted to vote on only 5 as against 4,000 items in the bill. We either had to vote against the whole bill or vote for it. Under the rule adopted by the House, we were not permitted to offer amendments and to vote upon them separately, and I have acknowledged that I voted for the bill as it passed the House, but I did not vote for it when it came back from the Senate, because I found that the rates had been increased.

Mr. HEYBURN. Did the Senator vote on it in both bodies?

Mr. GRONNA. I did not vote for the bill as it came back to the House from the Senate.

Mr. HEYBURN. Did the Senator vote upon the question in both branches? In other words, is it a fact that the Senator was in the House at one stage of the legislation——

Mr. GRONNA. No.

Mr. HEYBURN. And before final action came here?

Mr. GRONNA. No.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is true of one or two Members.

Mr. GRONNA. I was a Member of the House, and I voted against it when it came back from the Senate because there had been an increase made.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. GRONNA. Certainly. I shall be through in a few moments.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator recognizes the fact and will he not admit that the aggregate duties in the so-called Payne-Aldrich bill, as it became a law, were a decrease over the bill then upon the statute books?

Mr. GRONNA. I took the bill and figured it, taking the rates and basing them upon the importations of the year 1907. I took that year because that was a normal year, and any man who figures the bill will agree with me that the bill as passed by the Senate, on the average carries a higher rate of duty than the Dingley law.

Mr. GALLINGER. Why did the Senator take the importations for 1907 instead of some later year?

Mr. GRONNA. I took that year because I thought that was a fair average to base my figures upon, and for no other reason. It was neither the highest nor the lowest. It occurred to me that it was only fair to find an average, and I considered that the year 1907 was an average year for importations.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me one moment, I will not disturb him again. Of course, we have not seen the Senator's figures, but I want to say to the Senator in all seriousness when he says that the Payne-Aldrich bill increased the duties as a whole, in the aggregate, the Senator differs with every other Senator who has made an estimate or who has examined the rates.

Mr. GRONNA. It is hardly fair to state it that way. I think the Senator should allow me for basing my figures upon the importations of a particular year. It may be that, figuring on some other year, my statement might be incorrect; but I contend that, based upon that particular year, upon the importations of 1907, there was an increase instead of a reduction. At least that is the way I estimated it.

Now, Mr. President, I hope that the Senators who believe in protection will accord the same privilege and will do equal justice to all industries, and I hope there will be no objection, at least on this side of the Chamber, to accepting the amendment I have offered. The people have again spoken on political questions, and we ask ourselves the question why they have spoken in the manner they have. But any Senator who will take the time to visit the people will become as fully convinced as I am that they believe there was a great injustice done to the people engaged in this great industry.

If it had been in the interest of the consumer, as some people in the cities were led to believe, then, Mr. President, it would be a different question. How are you going to benefit the consumer by taking the tariff off of the raw material—and I should not use the term "raw material," because it is the farmer's finished product—how are you going to favor the consumer by taking the tariff off of wheat and laying it on flour? I do not believe any one of you is going to eat whole wheat. How are you going to benefit the American people by taking the duty off of cattle and leaving a duty on beef? It is obvious, Mr. President, that the Milling Trust and the Beef Trust would reap the benefit and not the consumer.

Mr. President, I have occupied more time than I intended when I rose; and upon the question of agreeing to the amendment I will ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have a substitute which I desire to offer for the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. SIMMONS. While the Senator from New Hampshire is preparing his substitute, I ask that the amendment be again read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 22, after line 14, insert:

That sections 1 and 3 of the act entitled "An act to promote reciprocal trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes," approved July 26, 1911, be, and are hereby, repealed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Without much hope that the substitute I offer will be agreed to—it ought to be agreed to—I submit it and ask for a vote on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire offers a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as a substitute the following:

That the act entitled "An act to promote reciprocal trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes," approved July 26, 1911, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to an amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Let me make an inquiry. Does the Senator from New Hampshire offer a substitute repealing the entire act?

Mr. GALLINGER. The entire act.

Mr. WILLIAMS. On that let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. McCUMBER. I want to ask the Senator from New Hampshire if he believes that we on this bill should attempt to change a law that has already been passed, which originated in the House, with reference to the tariff? I have supported always the other two propositions, because I did not want to get into conflict with the universal practice. Very probably the constitutional way of arriving at these things, where we repeal a portion of existing law, is for the act to repeal to originate in the House, although I would like to repeal the law.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have not any doubt in the world as to our constitutional right to repeal any act.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In order that we may get a ruling, I make the point of order that this would be virtually the origination of a revenue act in the Senate; that it is not germane to the metal schedule, and if in order at all, it would be in order upon its own merits. I make the point of order that under the Constitution——

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, we can not hear the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I make the point of order that under the Constitution we can not originate a revenue measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the amendment is offered as a substitute for an amendment to a tariff measure; and the Chair is of the opinion that the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire, as a substitute for an amendment to a tariff measure, is in order. The question is on agreeing to the substitute offered by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to have it stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The substitute will again be stated for the information of the Senate.

Mr. CULBERSON. Let the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota be reported again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from North Dakota will again be reported for the information of the Senate.

Mr. HEYBURN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fall	Lodge	Pomerene
Borah	Fletcher	McCumber	Sanders
Bourne	Gallinger	McLean	Simmons
Bryan	Gardner	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ariz.
Burton	Gore	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Md.
Catron	Gronna	Myers	Smoot
Chamberlain	Guggenheim	Nelson	Stephenson
Chilton	Heyburn	O'Gorman	Sutherland
Clapp	Hitchcock	Oliver	Watson
Clark, Wyo.	Johnson, Me.	Page	Williams
Culberson	Johnston, Ala.	Paynter	Works
Cummins	Jones	Penrose
Curtis	Kern	Perkins
du Pont	Lippitt	Poindexter

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. CULBERSON. Before the roll was called I made a request that the two amendments be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota and the substitute therefor offered by the Senator from New Hampshire will be reported for the information of the Senate.

The SECRETARY. The amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota reads as follows:

That sections 1 and 3 of the act entitled "An act to promote reciprocal trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes," approved July 26, 1911, be, and are hereby, repealed.

The substitute offered by the Senator from New Hampshire reads:

That the act entitled "An act to promote reciprocal trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes," approved July 26, 1911, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, this is about the first real meritorious question that has been considered for a long time. The so-called tariff questions have afforded means of exhausting the time of the Senate and postponing the consideration of the appropriation bills. But we have a glint of sunshine here in the nature of needed legislation—legislation that will meet with the approval of the country, to wit, the repeal of a mistake that was condemned not only at home but abroad. That is a combination of condemnation not to be overlooked.

I am not going to expand on the question of Canadian reciprocity; not that it has been exhausted, but I just want to say to the Republicans of this body that they have an opportunity, as one Senator suggested, to purge their record. They have an opportunity to come out as real protectionists in voting upon this substitute.

I have on several occasions made an attempt to obtain unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill now on the calendar providing for the accomplishment of the same purpose, and there has been objection to it, not much to my surprise. I asked for a roll call that Senators might have an opportunity to come into this Chamber and vindicate themselves, those who made the mistake of voting for what was known as the reciprocity treaty. I hope they will come in. If I could send my voice out to the various recesses where they are now I should like to have an opportunity to do it.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. HEYBURN. I do.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator will allow me, I wish to call attention to the fact that when the Senator from Idaho asked me the question as to the rate on agricultural products I had reference to agricultural machinery. I did not mean to say that the Senate did not increase the duty on agricultural products.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was not going to hold it against the Senator. I had the fact in my mind when I asked the question, but I do not expect Senators always to be ready with quick and accurate information on subjects to which their attention has just been called.

Mr. GRONNA. I understood the Senator to refer to agricultural machinery instead of agricultural products.

Mr. HEYBURN. That tariff legislation is ancient history now. Those who led the consideration of it upon this floor have passed out into the business world or elsewhere. Probably not over half the Senators are here who were here at that time. I would not want to revive the consideration of that question under those circumstances.

There is no room for doubt in regard to the suggestion that was made that this amendment could not originate in this body. If the Senator is still of that opinion, I will take the time of the Senate to refer to the decisions interpreting the constitutional provision. I will read that in order that it may be in the RECORD in connection with it. I have not heard it stated correctly once out of ten times when it has been stated on the floor of this body. It is less than three lines. It is section 7 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States, and it reads:

All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments as with other bills.

That is an accurate reading of the constitutional provision. It has been before the courts three times, and at no time has it involved the question raised in this case. Now we are going to have a yea-and-nay vote on this amendment. I understand that the Senator from North Dakota will be content to see the substitute adopted.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield further to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. GRONNA. So far as I am able to do so, I am willing to accept the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the Chair understands the Senator from North Dakota withdraws his amendment.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; for the present I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the substitute offered by the Senator from New Hampshire becomes the amendment before the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. It becomes the original amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. The question, then, is on the substitute, which becomes the original amendment. I do not suppose it is necessary to call attention to decisions of the United States Supreme Court, which I have before me, interpreting this provision of the Constitution. If I thought any Senator would be deterred from voting for this provision because of any lurking idea that he would in doing so be transgressing the organic law of the land, then I would feel it necessary and proper to refer to the decisions.

Mr. GRONNA. Will the Senator permit me to make a parliamentary inquiry of the Chair?

Mr. HEYBURN. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. GRONNA. By withdrawing my amendment and accepting the substitute offered by the Senator from New Hampshire, would it be in order for me to again offer my amendment?

Mr. LODGE. Oh, yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; if it is defeated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator can offer the amendment at a later time.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the pending amendment is defeated.

Mr. HEYBURN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I was very much in favor of the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota. It is impossible for me to vote for the substitute presented by the Senator from New Hampshire. If I understand the effect, it will be to restore a duty of $3.75 per ton upon print paper. The duty is too high. It is not defensible upon any testimony or evidence or any report ever presented to Congress.

To me in 1909 it seemed clear that there should be a duty of $2 per ton upon paper. I am not willing to cast a vote the effect of which would be to re-create a duty of $3.75 per ton on paper. Therefore I offer the following amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa offers an amendment to the amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of the amendment the following proviso:

Provided, That from and after the passage of this act there shall be a duty of $2 per ton paid on the paper described in said section 2.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say to the Senator from Iowa that I will vote for his amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire accepts the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa. The question is now on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire as modified by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; I modify it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I did not hear the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment as modified for the information of the Senate.

The SECRETARY. On page 22, after line 14, insert the following:

That the act entitled "An act to promote reciprocal trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes," approved July 26, 1911, be, and the same is hereby, repealed: Provided, That from and after the passage of this act there shall be a duty of $2 per ton paid on the paper described in said section 2.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been asked for on agreeing to the amendment as modified. Is there a second?

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa exactly what the effect of that provision is? Does it reduce the duty on all paper?

Mr. CUMMINS. Prior to 1909 the duty on paper that would be embraced in the amendment was $6 a ton. In the House revision of 1909 the duty was reduced to $2 a ton. The Senate increased the duty to $3.75 a ton, and that is the law at the present time, or was the law until the passage of the so-called reciprocity act with Canada, which made paper of that sort free, and it is now entering our customhouses without the payment of any duty whatsoever under certain circumstances.

Mr. LIPPITT. I understand that that applies to the whole world except simply as to Canada.

Mr. CUMMINS. The rate of $3.75 applies to the world.

Mr. LIPPITT. The rate of $3.75 applies to the world, and the free entrance of paper applies to Canada.

Mr. LODGE. No. If the Senator will excuse me, that point was made in regard to the favored-nation clause, and all the favored nations having with us a treaty and that made paper out of wood-pulp are now asking the free entry of the paper which was protected at the time of the passage of the reciprocity act.

Mr. LIPPITT. What is the situation in regard to granting that request? It has not been granted as yet?

Mr. LODGE. It has not been granted.

Mr. LIPPITT. The duty of $3.75, I understand, applies everywhere except as to Canada?

Mr. LODGE. Except as to Canada, the principal source of wood-pulp paper.

Mr. LIPPITT. The effect of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa would be to make the duty $2 per ton on paper from Canada, and would it remain $3.75 on paper from all other countries?

Mr. CUMMINS. It would not. If this amendment is adopted and the law of which it is sought to be made a part finally passes, the duty on paper of all the world would be $2 per ton.

Mr. LIPPITT. The effect of it would be that instead of free entry from Canada there would be a duty of $2 a ton and a reduction of the duty of $3.75 from all other sources to $2?

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely. I think no one will question that the report of the Tariff Board fails to sustain a duty of $3.75 per ton from any quarter of the earth.

Mr. LIPPITT. I was simply asking so that I might have it clearly in my mind.

Mr. GALLINGER. The phraseology of the Senator's amendment ought to be changed. Where it says "in said section 2" it should read "in section 2 of said act."

Mr. CUMMINS. I think so. I wrote it very hastily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator modifies his amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think it ought to be rewritten, but I found it necessary to produce it quickly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa a question. Should his amendment pass, would the duty on Canadian paper be $2 a ton while the duty on paper from other countries would remain at $3.75 a ton?

Mr. CUMMINS. No; if the amendment I have proposed should finally become a law, there would be a duty on print paper of $2 a ton, no matter from whence it might enter our ports.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I did not hear the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. The duty of $2 a ton would apply to the whole world under the amendment that I have proposed.

Mr. CULBERSON. It would repeal the free-of-duty proposition from Canada?

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes. We have now a certain law with regard to the duty on print paper. The law was, prior to the reciprocity act, $3.75 per ton. The reciprocity act allowed certain papers manufactured or originating in Canada to come in free. It is now sought by the substitute of the Senator from New Hampshire to repeal that act, and I have added to that as an amendment that after the act is repealed all paper described there shall enter our ports at $2 per ton.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. One other question. I should like to ask whether the Senator from Iowa or the Senator from New Hampshire has any evidence that section 2 of the Canadian reciprocity bill has resulted in any disastrous consequences, as were predicted at the time it was passed, by reason of admitting Canadian paper free of duty?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not know; but I had an opinion with regard to the duty on paper in 1908, and again in 1910, when we investigated the subject. I reached the conclusion that the duty ought to be $2 per ton.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. On what theory?

Mr. CUMMINS. On the theory that it costs that much more to make it in this country than to make it abroad.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then, as we have had free paper for a year, I ask the Senator if he can point to any disastrous consequences to American industries as the result of having paper on the free list?

Mr. CUMMINS. In the first place, we have not had free paper. The Canadian arrangement, I take it, has not possibly fulfilled all the hopes of those who originated it. But that does not alter the opinion I then formed, and that I still hold, that there ought to be a duty of about $2 a ton upon print paper.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, the question of revenue is of some consequence.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I would inquire of the Senator from Iowa whether the proposition to impose a duty of $2 or any other amount is not a revenue where there is now no duty, and whether it would be a violation of the constitutional provision?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not think, Mr. President, that it would be a violation of the Constitution. It has been held that if the House passes a bill which changes the duty on a single article, around that bill there can be gathered a full and complete revision of the tariff.

Mr. HEYBURN. I recognize that.

Mr. CUMMINS. I hesitated to offer the amendment because, generally speaking, I thought we ought to confine ourselves to the schedule under consideration. But inasmuch as the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire was offered, I could not see it pass without expressing my view.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Iowa does not question our right to transfer an article from the free list to the dutiable list in the House bill?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly not.

Mr. HEYBURN. No; and I am not going to press the suggestion further than that it may not appear hereafter that we overlooked it, so that in interpreting it no one may be in a position to say that we overlooked it. Upon this article there is now no duty, and we are going to impose one of $2 by a piece of original legislation. I merely made the suggestion for the reason that I have stated.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no doubt about our power constitutionally to do what has been proposed. Of course, that power ought to be exercised with wisdom and properly when necessary.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I merely want to say a word in regard to the inquiry made by the Senator from Nebraska with regard to print paper. The Senator from Nebraska knows as well as I do that a commission was appointed to investigate this question. There were Republicans and Democrats upon that commission, and they brought in a report that there should be a duty of $2 instead of $6, which was the law at that time. No attention was paid to it, or at least the report of that commission was ignored. Instead of lowering it to $2 it was reduced to $3.75.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been asked for. Is there a second?

Mr. CULBERSON. Now, let us have the amendment as amended read so that we can understand the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment as perfected, for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read as follows:

That the act entitled "An act to promote reciprocal trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes," approved July 26, 1911, be, and the same is hereby, repealed: Provided, That from and after the passage of this act there shall be a duty of $2 per ton paid on the paper described in section 2 of said act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been asked for. Is there a second?

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. I will transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LORIMER] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. LIPPITT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA], who is absent. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey (when the name of Mr. SMITH of South Carolina was called). I was requested to state that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. BACON. I wish to add to what the Senator from New Jersey has stated, that the Senator from South Carolina has been called away by illness in his family.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SHIVELY (after having voted in the negative). I am paired on this vote with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE]. I voted inadvertently, and I desire to withdraw my vote.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. SWANSON] has been called from the city. He is paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NIXON]. I also announce that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] is unavoidably absent.

Mr. FOSTER. On account of the absence of my pair, the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], I withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (after having voted in the negative). I inadvertently voted. I transferred my pair to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], but the Senator from Oklahoma is now in the Senate. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. HEYBURN (after having voted in the affirmative). Because of the absence of my pair from the Chamber I will withdraw my vote.

Mr. GORE. My colleague [Mr. OWEN] is necessarily absent from the Senate. He is paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GAMBLE]. I will let this statement stand for the day.

Mr. BURNHAM. I inquire if the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] has voted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). He has not voted.

Mr. BURNHAM. In his absence I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER. I was requested to announce that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY] is paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE].

The result was announced—yeas 37, nays 27, as follows:

DESIGNATION OF PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am informed that the Vice President will be necessarily absent from the city on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday of this week and Monday of next week. I rise to ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] be designated to act as President pro tempore of the Senate on those days.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 324), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the Senate has elected AUGUSTUS O. BACON, a Senator from the State of Georgia, President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office in the absence of the Vice President on Thursday, Friday, Saturday, and Monday next, May 30, 31, June 1 and 3, 1912.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 325), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary notify the House of Representatives that the Senate has elected AUGUSTUS O. BACON, a Senator from the State of Georgia, President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office in the absence of the Vice President on Thursday, Friday, Saturday, and Monday next, May 30 and 31, June 1 and 3, 1912.

THE METAL SCHEDULE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18642) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909.

Mr. WATSON. I offer the following amendment. I hope the Senator in charge of the bill will accept it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add a new section to the bill to read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the President is hereby authorized, in any case of emergency, to suspend the collection of customs duties on any article included for taxation in the tariff law in effect on the day the President issues his proclamation suspending the collection of duty on any article, so that such article may be imported free of duty for not exceeding the period of six months. When the President decides to suspend the collection of duties on any article, he shall issue his proclamation to that effect. Such suspension of the collection of customs duties for the period named by the President in his proclamation shall take effect on the day following the issuing of said proclamation, and shall continue for the period named.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, that is a very important amendment, dealing not only with this schedule but with all tariff schedules. It has not been referred to the Committee on Finance; there has been no opportunity to give it consideration; and I hope the Senator from West Virginia will withdraw the amendment and let it be referred to the committee. He can offer it to some other of the tariff-schedule bills hereafter.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I withdraw the amendment, and ask that it be referred to the Finance Committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be printed and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I move to amend the bill by inserting, on page 2, line 6, after the word "steel," the word "six" in place of "eight," so that the provision will be for a duty of 6 per cent on pig iron instead of 8 per cent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 1, on page 2, line 6, before the words "per cent," it is proposed to strike out "eight" and to insert "six," so as to read:

1. Iron in pigs, iron kentledge, spiegeleisen, wrought and cast scrap iron and scrap steel, 6 per cent ad valorem.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I wish to say a word in reference to the amendment. The present law provides for a duty of something less than 15 per cent on these articles. The House bill provides a duty of 8 per cent. The substitute offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] provided a duty of slightly less than 6 per cent, and I think it is fair to say that the Senator from Iowa demonstrated in the address which he delivered that there is no need for any duty larger than the one which he proposed.

The product of pig iron in this country amounts to almost $400,000,000 worth annually, and we practically export as much pig iron as we import. I believe that the duty of 6 per cent is applicable for revenue purposes and in harmony with the rest of the bill. I should like to have the Senator in charge of the bill accept the amendment, if possible.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I am not in a position to accept the amendment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then I ask a yea-and-nay vote on the amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. In making that statement I did not intend to express any personal opinion about it; but I am not authorized, as in other instances where I have accepted amendments by the minority members of the committee, to do so in this case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska asks for the yeas and nays. Is there a second? Not a sufficient number, in the opinion of the Chair, have risen to second the demand. The question is on the amendment. In the opinion of the Chair, the ayes have it.

Mr. MYERS. I call for a division on the demand for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I did not distinctly hear just what became of the amendment proposed by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. WATSON]. Was it withdrawn?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HEYBURN. So that the only amendment now pending is the one offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK]?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is carried, unless, in the opinion of the Chair——

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I thought the Chair declared that the negative vote had prevailed. However that may be, I will first ask that the amendment shall be again stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will restate the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 6, before the words "per centum," it is proposed to strike out "eight" and insert "six," so as to read:

1. Iron in pigs, iron kentledge, spiegeleisen, wrought and cast scrap iron and scrap steel, 6 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the yeas and nays on that amendment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I understood that the yeas and nays were refused.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There has been a division called for.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And that the Chair had so decided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That was on the request of the Senator from Nebraska, since which time there has been a vote, and now the yeas and nays are demanded. The Chair thinks the question should be put.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I understood that the Chair had announced the result of the vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the opinion of the Chair the "ayes" had it, but that vote was challenged by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And there was no call for the yeas and nays until subsequent business had intervened.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will hold that it is not too late to demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). In the absence of the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], with whom I am paired, I withhold my vote.

Mr. FOSTER (when his name was called). In the absence of my pair, the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], I withhold my vote.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I am paired for the day with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN].

I am also requested to announce that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] is paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS].

Mr. LIPPITT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA], so that I shall not vote. I make that announcement for the day.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BROWN]. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HEYBURN (after having voted in the negative). I would ask if the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], with whom I am paired, has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMITH of Michigan in the chair). The senior Senator from Alabama has not voted.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then I withdraw my vote.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I desire to announce for the day that the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] is paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON].

Mr. SHIVELY (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to inquire whether the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE], with whom I am paired, has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. SHIVELY. Then I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 20, as follows:

YEAS—36.

Ashurst	Cullom	Jones	Rayner
Bacon	Cummins	Kern	Simmons
Borah	Fletcher	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ariz.
Bristow	Gardner	Myers	Smith, Md.
Bryan	Gore	O'Gorman	Thornton

So Mr. HITCHCOCK's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WATSON. On page 2, line 13, I move to strike out the word "fifteen" and insert the word "ten."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. SHIVELY. Let the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 13, before the words "per centum," it is proposed to strike out "fifteen" and to insert "ten," so as to read.

Ferromanganese, chrome or chromium metal, ferrochrome or ferrochromium, ferromolybdenum, ferrophosphorus, ferrotitanium, ferrotungsten, ferrovanadium, molybdenum, titanium, tantalum, tungsten or wolfram metal, and ferrosilicon, 10 per cent ad valorem.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is in the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there be no further amendments to be offered, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, for some reasons I regret that the bill is not yet ready to be reported to the Senate. I was calling attention yesterday when the Senate closed its session to the position in which the Republican Party stands in regard to this question. It ought to interest them, and it would interest them if they were as zealous as the Democrats. I have been somewhat interested during the discussion of this question to observe that, while the Democrats have raised the cry—and I am afraid have impressed some Republicans with the seriousness of that cry—that there is a great demand for this legislation; that the interests of the people individually and collectively are at stake—I have been interested to see the measure of zeal shown by the attendance of Members upon the other side and their participation in this debate.

If I thought this measure, this Democratic destruction of prosperity, was so vital as they seem to think it is, I would stay in my seat, if I sat on the other side, as long as my physical condition would permit, and I would speak on behalf of my belief as long as my voice could be heard. They have been content in the arrogance of power—and I do not use that word in an invidious sense—and in the possible expectation of an alliance with some Members of the Senate on this side to allow it to go without a word of recommendation or defense. I am rather astonished. Are you so sure that you are going to get the assistance on this side that you anticipate? Senators on the other side must be well aware of the fact that without it they can not pass the bill, and yet they are going along gloriously, assuming that they will pass this bill. I say—and I base my statement upon my faith in Republicans—that they will not pass it. If I lose in that proposition, it will be because I have made a miscount of the Republicans. I used to know how to count them.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from Idaho permit me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. BACON. I want to say that whatever confidence we have had in regard to that matter has been due to the assurances we have had from the other side of the Chamber. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] on yesterday or the day before boldly announced that it was the purpose of the majority to absent enough of their Members to permit this side to carry the vote, and he defended his course in that regard.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I certainly made no such statement. I think the Senator from Georgia undoubtedly misunderstood what I said. I said that I was opposed to this bill and that I was opposed to the substitute offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], and, speaking for myself, and for myself alone, I held myself at liberty to defeat both measures, either by voting against them or by abstaining from voting, and I proposed to use my own judgment as to which course I would pursue; but I did not declare to the Senate my intention of doing anything in the premises.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator from Idaho, I will recall to the recollection of the Senate that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] had asserted in no ambiguous terms, but, on the contrary, in the most emphatic terms and with iteration and reiteration, that that was the purpose of Senators belonging to the majority; and the Senator from Pennsylvania made the utterance of which he now speaks in response and in reply to the charge which had been made by the Senator from Iowa. If he did not mean to be taking the position that he was justified in doing exactly what the Senator from Iowa charged was intended to be done, then I do not understand the use of the English language. I simply repeat that whatever confidence we have in the matter is not because of any majority of votes on this side, but because of that announced intention on the part of the Republicans. Of course, we are ready to pass our bill, expect to do so, and will endeavor to do so.

Mr. HEYBURN. By what kind of votes does the Senator expect to pass the bill?

Mr. BACON. By Democratic votes exclusively.

Mr. HEYBURN. Entirely?

Mr. BACON. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then the Senator counts every man a Democrat who votes for that bill?

Mr. BACON. Well, I have no right to speak about others.

Mr. HEYBURN. I merely want to get a line on the thing.

Mr. BACON. I did not say that every man who votes for the bill is a Democrat, because I think that properly a good many Republicans could vote for it and should do so. What I did say was that the Democrats would vote for it; I did not say that all who voted for it would be Democrats.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator used the word "exclusively."

Mr. BACON. I meant that, according to the announced program as stated by the Senator from Iowa, who seemed to be sure of his ground, and which was not denied by any Senator, but which, on the contrary, was defended on the other side, I supposed they were not going to vote for this bill——

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. But that they had the information that enough Senators who occupy the same relation to the bill which the Senator from Idaho occupies would abstain from voting, and that that would leave a majority for the Democrats, the Senator at the time saying that the Senator from Idaho would not be one of them.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. BRISTOW. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Idaho what he would call the Senator on this side of the Chamber who absents himself from the Chamber so as not to vote and thereby permits the Democratic bill to pass?

Mr. HEYBURN. I never call names.

Mr. President, it is obvious that the other side rely upon gaining some votes upon this side; but we have made some history to-day. We had a vote here a few moments ago in which there seemed to be a degree of harmony most gratifying and which has not always existed. I will pin my faith in men on very small things sometimes, and I believe that men who go wrong on their judgment may always be brought back to a proper conception of the right. I have faith, a vast amount of it, and I am not going to yield it up until I see somebody who comes here wearing a Republican badge voting with the Democrats. So I am in rather a happy and contented frame of mind on that subject.

Do you suppose, Mr. President, that a Senator representing the great industry of lead mining could be counted upon by the other side to vote for a reduction of the duty upon lead? Yesterday the Senator from Iowa introduced an amendment that proposed a reduction of $5 a ton upon lead bullion. He provided for a duty upon lead ore and proposed a reduction of $5 a ton upon lead bullion. I have been in the lead country a long time, and supervised a good many settlements for ore. The settlement for lead ore is based upon the bullion value and contents, so that the proposition really struck at the whole lead industry. The reduction suggested by the Senator would merely be a temptation to those who deal in Mexican mines and Mexican ores to build their smelters on that side of the line, reduce their ores into bullion, and send it over to compete in our field of production with our bullion——

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. HEYBURN. Just a moment, until I finish the thought—and inasmuch as the product of lead and the use of it in our country are about the same, that is a very material proposition.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator has stated the case accurately, but possibly all Senators did not follow the lead schedule with sufficient care to know just what the statement of the Senator from Idaho means. At the present time the duty on lead in ore is $30 per ton, and the duty on lead in bullion is $42.50 per ton. My amendment did not reduce the duty on lead in ore, but it reduced the duty on lead in bullion from $42.50 per ton to $37.50 per ton; and if the Senator from Idaho can convince the Senate that in this country it costs to reduce lead ore to lead bullion in excess of $7.50 a ton over the cost in other countries he will have convinced me of error. I simply wanted the Senate to know what the total duty was on lead bullion and lead ore.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the difficulty with the Senator from Iowa is that he starts to reason from a false premise. In the first place, it is the bullion that regulates the price of the ore, and the displacement of our product in bullion by Mexican bullion would diminish our market for the bullion that we produce. Nobody uses ore; it has to be reduced to bullion before it is ready for use.

Mr. President, this is not only a large item, but, inasmuch as we produce the lead that we use in this country in equivalent quantities, it is more important than the ordinary schedules, and there is a wide margin between the production and the use.

Mr. President, I merely started out with that as an example of the discrepancy between the contention of the Senator from Iowa and the facts in this case. I know that in some commodities the line of reasoning adopted by the Senator from Iowa would be a true line of reasoning, but it does not apply to this commodity.

Let us see something about it. In the first place, to produce a ton of ore you mine 6 tons; I will say 5 tons to be conservative. You mine 5 tons of raw material out of the ground. You break it down, and hoist it to the surface, and you carry it to the mill in order to get 1 ton of lead ore. That ton of lead ore, when you have reduced it by concentration or other processes, will contain about 60 to 62 per cent lead, and the balance is waste, and when you send that to the smelter you pay the wages incident to the transportation and you pay the freight on the waste, and when you get to the smelter you pay the smelting charges on the waste. So you have been mining and shipping and smelting waste all along the line in order to get a ton of ore, and when you have that ton of ore, it represents the wages and the expense incident to the mining of 5 tons of rock.

It costs just as much to mine barren rock as it does rich ore. It costs just as much to send it over the railroad or the transportation line. It costs just as much to put it through the smelter. In fact, it costs more, because you have to introduce into the charge certain other metals or minerals in order to fuse the lead ore.

So I have been somewhat impatient with the discussion of the question of the duty on lead based upon the assumption that you mine lead. We do not mine lead. We mine vast quantities of rock in which there is lead. If you sell the ore without treating it, you get the bullion value. If you treat it, you reduce it to bullion.

There is the difficulty with the proposition of the Senator from Iowa. You pay exactly the same wages to the man who breaks the barren rock that stays in the mine or goes over the dump. You not only spend your money for the 5 tons that goes to the concentrator, but you spend in addition to that your money for rock that never goes anywhere, but stays on the dump of the mine.

No one has taken that into consideration at all. It was assumed, I say, that you mine lead. Nobody mines lead. The reason the industry is of such supreme importance is because it has been the foundation of States. There are great States in the Union to-day which would not have existed except for the mines. The pioneer goes there, not because of the climate or the scenery or the soil, but because of the existence or supposed existence of these ores, and being there he first directs his attention to the thing he went for, and not being fortunate in securing a foothold in mining and being in the country looking around for other possibilities, staying there for other purposes, he, with the other men coming in, have developed the foundation upon which the State rests.

The State of Colorado was a mere prospecting ground. It was not known for anything within its boundaries except the metals and ores. The same is true of the States of New Mexico and of Arizona.

The same is true of the States of Montana and Idaho and California. Nobody ever went to those States originally with any idea of doing anything except to mine. Idaho had passed through its gold-mining experience for years and had produced more real wealth than any State east of the Mississippi River, and there was an interval during which time men were estimating the possibilities and reaching out for new discoveries. It resulted in developing agriculture and horticulture and industries of all kinds that were a safe foundation for a State.

That is something in the making of a State. The miner either realizes his desire in mining or goes down into the valleys or into the fertile portions of the State and stays permanently. He never would have gone there to settle except that he went there to mine. The people who engage in mining in all its branches, seeing around them possibilities for home building, engage in it. So there is a whole lot more involved in this question than the mere matter of how many dollars were taken out of the ground. There are the growth and the increase of the resources of the State in timber, in agriculture, in horticulture, and grazing that stand very high in the estimate of the wealth of this country.

We are not to be overlooked by the trader, by the money changer, by the huckster, and the broker. They can not stand and point the finger of superiority at us. We furnish them with the material with which they do business. A city is merely a place of exchange. It produces nothing except the energy and the disposition of the men to engage in gainful enterprise. That is all a city does.

It is fashionable for those who live in cities to assume a superiority over those who live in the country. No greater mistake ever was made in the world. You picture a man from the country in lines of derision, when, as a matter of fact, he is the furnisher of everything upon which you base your prosperity.

Mr. President, that applies to this industry. It supports 100,000 families in the United States. If it did not support them, who would? Can some Senator tell me who would support these 100,000 families if you withdraw or destroy this industry? Could they be taken up by the commercial world of the East? They are the customers of the commercial world. Without them the profits of the commercial activities of the country would be diminished, if not destroyed.

It is my intention that when this measure goes out—whether according to the prophecy of the Senator from Georgia or not—it shall be accompanied with a biography and a history; that it shall go out tagged, so to speak, that those who come to inspect it two years and four years from now will know what it means. You have seen things written in invisible ink, and when you hold them up to the light there will appear something you did not suspect existed. When, two or four years from now you hold up to the light the tag which I propose to place upon this bill, you will find written upon that tag, "Destruction to American industry and prosperity." That is what this legislation means.

I do not believe that Senators have the right to legislate by general consent in regard to these measures. There is a duty resting upon Members of this and the other branch of the Congress of the United States to give their reasons, because the people will want to know their reasons. I want to call attention to just one item of history that I have here before me, in which I participated, and in which I see other Senators present who participated.

I refer to the mistake of 1892. In 1892 the Republican Party in convention made a cowardly platform. They confessed themselves scared by the noise that was being made by the Democrats, and the country said "If you are not brave enough to have a principle and stand up to it we will have none of you," and they turned the Republican Party out of power and turned into power a party that professed what they would do rather than recited what they had done. Just think of a platform of a national party going before the people, situated as our people are, making this declaration:

> We believe that all articles which can not be produced in the United States, except luxuries, should be admitted free of duty—

The Democrats had said that before and we had repudiated it.

> And that on all imports coming into competition with the products of American labor there should be levied duties equal to the difference between wages abroad and at home.

They deserved defeat, and they got it. They not only defeated the political organization but they defeated the American people in their homes. They took away from them their prosperity by substituting the pretentious pretensions of the other party. It was my fate to be a member of the committee that made this platform. Those words were not written in it with my consent.

What does it say? Let us look at it. That there should be duties levied equal to the difference between wages at home and abroad. I want to make a reference to that. That was equivalent to saying that in this country those who sustain it in war and in peace should have no better standing than the people of other countries who contend with it in both war and peace. A more unreasonable declaration never was made in a platform. The men who made it—a number of them were my friends and still are my friends—forgot that they lived in the United States of America. They did not know in that hour of unwisdom that an American citizen is entitled to more, in or out of the United States, than any foreigner is entitled to.

They talk about putting us upon an equal footing with Germany, France, and England without making any provision for the fact that we support this Government and the foreigners contribute nothing to it; that we maintain the institutions and pay the taxes and they do not; that we pay taxes upon the very goods which they send here under the doctrine of free trade. If a cargo comes in from England or Germany and lands in New York, upon landing it becomes the property of an American citizen, and he has to pay taxes on the very thing that destroys his market. The people with whom they are seeking to put us on an equal footing pay no taxes upon the articles of manufacture either there or here.

And then again this cheeseparing has fretted me from the beginning of this discussion—to see Senators stand here and shave down to the very quick in estimating how much torture the American producer can stand; upon how low a basis he can live; with how little he can get along without starving. That has been the spirit of too much of the discussion on the tariff question.

I look at it from just the opposite standpoint. The question with me is how prosperous can we make the American citizen; how can we improve the conditions that surround him; how easy can we make it for him to compete in the markets or abroad? That is the point of reason from which the tariff should be considered by Americans, and not how tolerable it might be for him were conditions changed.

I should like to see more of it. Senators have fled from the consideration of this question who were pledged to the consideration of it by their constituents. They flee from it and propose to absent themselves when the responsible hour comes. I will have none of it. The legislation and the consideration of questions should be in this Chamber, not in the committee rooms, which are adjuncts to a Chamber, not out in the byways and highways and secret corner where two men may come together and whisper how they can jockey in the political controversy. They will jockey themselves out of office. They always do. They will jockey the country into difficulties. I call it "jockeying" when a man says "Let us stay away from our duty. Let us not perform our duty, in order that we may accomplish something." That is jockeying. I have not been, and I know I never will be, able to bring myself to such an agreement.

This is a place for controversy and contest and decision; not a place to come in and put a ticket in the slot to record your action. This is a chamber for consideration, and consideration among men in council of responsibility means an interchange of ideas. What we say here goes to the country; it goes to our masters. They elected us to this position in order that we may use our judgment and wisdom in the best manner for the benefit of their best interests. If we come here and divide up into coteries and then absent ourselves when the hour of responsibility comes, the people will know what to do. They will not need any recall. They will forget the men who did it at the next election, and they ought to forget them. One might imagine in this Chamber sometimes that there was nothing of interest before the Members of this body except what they may be chattering about among themselves in their little coteries of two or three. That is doubtless interesting to them.

Now, Mr. President, of course, we will assume that when we come to vote every Senator will have mastered every question upon which he votes, and the people will probably accept that hypothetical condition until they learn better. A man makes a promise, upon the strength of which he comes to Congress, that he will support legislation imposing protective duties upon wool and lead and lead ores. The people expect him to keep that promise. That is the solemn pledge of the Republican Party.

In 1892 they did not get a chance to put it in operation. They had just before that declared themselves so inefficient or their intentions so uncertain that the people said, "Just go home and stay there until you know what you want to do, and then present yourselves to us and we will tell you whether we want you to do it or not." They did send the Republican Party into retirement at that election and they elected a Democratic President and Congress. I am not going to dwell upon their action. I never was fond of these exhibitions of chambers of horrors. I never visit them. I let that rest. There will be some chambers of horrors for the individuals who have forgotten the pledges that the party placed them under in regard to this tariff question, but they will each of them enjoy it in their own way.

How can a man be a Republican and not be in favor of a protective tariff that protects? How can a man be a Republican and come here and engage in cheeseparing down to the very quick to determine whether or not the people of the country can barely live rather than how they can be certainly prosperous?

The Republican Party has stood for prosperity in the past when it was sane. I will pass from that platform of 1892, which was the Waterloo of the Republican Party, and, in my judgment, forfeited all claim that the party might have upon the people, and I will go to 1896, after the earthquakes, and the volcanoes, and the nightmares, and the distress, and the poverty of four years, and I find new leaders at the head of the columns. I find constructive statesmen in the place of the shivering time servers of four years before. I find men who knew what they wanted and dared to proclaim it in the great convention of 1896. They knew how to take the rank and file of American industry and organize it so that its march would be to the certain goal of prosperity. They did it with as true a hand as ever guided a purpose to a destiny.

I am looking about among the men for such men in this hour that confronts us. I have not yet been able to see through and beyond the ranks of selfish speculation, the ranks of the men who conceive it the very acme of their purpose and of their glory to hold an office. I would rather stand down among the masters than to be their servant. Serve them, if they choose you so to do, but if you undertake it, do it according to their purpose and their will. The man who cares more to be elected to office that he does to fight for the principles of a great party is not fit for any office. The man who considers, rather, how he can be elected or reelected than how he can keep the pledge given the people ought not to be in office. The man in office does not outrank the creator of the office. This is not a Government of politicians. It is a Government of the people who make jobs for politicians, but the people are the masters. When I see in this hour consideration given not to how we can insist upon and fix the principles of the party upon our Government, but rather what position we can gain for our selfish advancement, I am startled. The fact is that it would be a fair conclusion that there were only a few men in this body who care anything about the question of the tariff and tariff legislation. That is a fair conclusion to be drawn. There are only a few of them. That is borne out by the measure of attention that they give to the consideration of these questions.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. JONES. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator need not call for a quorum on my account. I am talking to the whole country. I have a pretty big audience.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Curtis	Kern	Pomerene
Bacon	Dillingham	Lodge	Root
Brandegee	Fletcher	McCumber	Shively
Bristow	Foster	Martine, N. J.	Simmons
Bryan	Gallinger	Myers	Smith, Ariz.

Clark, Wyo.	Hitchcock	Penrose	Townsend
Culberson	Johnson, Me.	Percy	Watson

Cummins	Jones	Poindexter	Works

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, we have heard nothing in the consideration of this bill on behalf of the real merchants and the people who deal with them. The large manufacturing establishments could not reach the people except through lesser establishments that constitute the means of distribution of what the larger concerns produce. They have not been heard. They were not heard before the committee that prepared this bill for consideration. Yet it depends upon those people as to whether the products of the large mills will ever reach the people at all. They are the medium of distribution. Their prosperity tells infinitely more for the welfare of the people than does the prosperity of the large manufacturing plants. They are the people who are looking most anxiously to Congress awaiting its action. You strike down their prosperity and the climax is close at hand.

You may take away all the profits of the large plants that have been discussed so much, and the owners probably would go down to the Waldorf-Astoria or to the seashore or to Europe and live the rest of their lives without any suffering, while these industrial enterprises that depend upon them would suffer all the agony that belongs to poverty, disappointment, and distress. It would change the lives and the destiny of millions of people who never saw the United States Steel or any of these large enterprises that have been discussed as though they were all there was to be considered. You strike down the prosperity of the country for a day and you change the destiny of millions of people any day and change their course of life from that time to the end. You shut down the mills in a village or any one of these manufacturing centers for six months and thousands and thousands of people will have been compelled to change their residence, to change their plans of life, both in regard to the adult members who toil and in regard to the children who depend upon them. The possibilities of the education of the hundreds of thousands of children in this country are vitally affected by every shutdown or strike from whatever source it may originate. You bring about a condition such as we had in 1893, 1894, and 1895, and you have changed the destiny of the American people; millions of them, who with that four years of standing ground would have attained their cherished ambition, never again can reinstate themselves. The period of education passed for many during those four years of financial distress. The period that was selected by their parents in which they were to be educated passed, and their opportunity was lost because of the inability of the parent to carry out the purpose. Instead of being well-equipped citizens, they were forced to this shuffling industry of opportunity.

Who was responsible? The Democratic Party as a party and the people they were able to deceive into supporting or believing in the doctrine of comparative free trade. How many millions of people in this country were so affected by that period of stagnation that they never can recover from it? Industry closed, the door of opportunity to the apprentice is closed. The boy who would have entered without difficulty to learn his trade or occupation in the mills and industries of the country was deprived, because the mills and industry had no opportunity to afford him, and instead of being on the way to prosperity, he was a victim of conditions and circumstances over which he could exercise no control.

This question of the prosperity of the people is a very serious thing; and when we are dealing with those questions that will affect it one way or the other we can not be too serious. We can not grow impatient—we dare not—with the consideration of them. The Congress of the United States that passed the first tariff bill spent three months in its consideration. We read it on three pages, and we are apt to think they did it over night. They gave serious consideration to those questions, realizing that they were laying the foundation of the prosperity of the people of that age. Well, we lay the foundation of the prosperity of the people every two years or four years in this country, or every time we take up the question whether our people shall be classed as the people of other countries, on an equal footing, as was laid down in that foolish platform. I have never yet forgiven the unwisdom of that hour, notwithstanding that I participated in the making of the platform; but I did not agree to the provisions that lost us the election.

What was done in the last national platform? I want to read a phrase, however, in the intermediate platform. These were the days when Republicans were really Republicans, and they were not dickering and trading as to how they could support this and that amendment and receive in return the support for some other. These are the closing words in the tariff platform of 1896, when intelligence and patriotism ruled the convention. After declaring in favor of the protective tariff policy of the party, they say:

> The country demands a right settlement, and then it wants rest.

In referring to the duties not agitated every day, not revision by schedules, not revision by fugitive amendments upon other bills, after that nightmare of Democracy, they said the country wants to return to the conditions under which it was prosperous, upon the theory that like conditions produce like results. When they said that they put the clinch on it. Let me read the words——

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. HEYBURN. In a moment. I do not want to break in now on this:

> The ruling and uncompromising principle is the protection and development of American labor and industry. The country demands a right settlement, and then it wants rest.

That is the way to talk. Now, I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. I agree to that. There is nothing in the world that we need so much as a right settlement of the tariff question, followed by a long rest. I want to say to the Senator from Idaho that personally I very greatly prefer the platform of 1896 on the tariff question over the platform of 1908.

Mr. HEYBURN. So do I.

Mr. CUMMINS. And if the Senator from Idaho has read all of that platform which relates to the question of protection, he will discover why I think it is a better expression of our doctrine than that which occurred in 1908.

Mr. HEYBURN. It does not require very close study to determine that question.

Mr. CUMMINS. Has the Senator the whole platform before him?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; I have all the platforms of the Republican Party right here in my hand.

Mr. CUMMINS. Might I be permitted——

Mr. HEYBURN. Is the Senator referring to the platform of 1908?

Mr. CUMMINS. No; the platform of 1896.

Mr. HEYBURN. Here is the platform of 1896. The Senator will get some indication as to what I think about it by the marks and interpolations I have made in it. Of course I do not approve of the tariff plank in the platform of 1908. The Republicans of the country will denounce it on the first opportunity.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not want it to be inferred that I ever intend to denounce the platform of 1908. On the contrary, I think, if fairly construed, it means just what the protectionist believes; but I do think it was an unfortunate expression.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will state about it in a minute.

Mr. CUMMINS. Will the Senator from Idaho listen to me while I read a part of the platform which he may have overlooked?

Mr. HEYBURN. I have already read it into the RECORD, but I will listen to the Senator with patience.

Mr. CUMMINS (reading):

We renew and emphasize our allegiance to the policy of protection——

Mr. HEYBURN. Is the Senator commencing at the beginning?

Mr. CUMMINS. At the beginning—

as the bulwark of American industrial independence and the foundation of American development and prosperity.

This true American policy taxes foreign products and encourages home industry. It puts the burden of revenue on foreign goods. It secures the American market for the American producer. It upholds the American standard of wages for the American workingman. It puts the factory by the side of the farm and makes the American farmer less dependent on foreign demand and price. It diffuses general thrift and founds the strength of all on the strength of each. In its reasonable application it is just, fair, and impartial; equally opposed to foreign control and domestic monopoly, to sectional discrimination and individual favoritism.

I have oftentimes in my political life attempted to enforce upon the American people this wise declaration that the doctrine of protection fairly applied is "equally opposed to foreign control and domestic monopoly." It is therefore that I have endeavored to stand for a system of duties that would not permit domestic monopoly and the exactions of a profit which domestic monopoly always secures.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the Senator has read with splendid emphasis the doctrine of the Republican Party, but it occurred to me while he was reading it that he was rather within the scope of those that I mentioned the other day who read the commandment:

Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work, but the seventh day * * * thou shalt not do any work.

The last part of it is the only part that he practices.

Mr. CUMMINS. No, Mr. President; I disclaim that. Every part of the platform is attractive to me. I see no inconsistency in it. It expresses, taking it all together, the fairest and justest doctrine that ever became a part of a governmental policy. I only wish that we had retained and reiterated in 1908 the expression of 1896.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I said a few moments ago—I think before the Senator from Iowa returned to the Chamber—that I am looking now into the Republican rank and file in this country for the man or men who can duplicate the wisdom of that convention. I am looking for the man who can get away from personal advantage and skirmish for office, write a platform like that, and go before the people with the result that those men went before the people. That is what I am looking for. This cheeseparing, lead-pencil tariff declaration of the last platform, which meant, if it meant anything, that the Government would guarantee a reasonable profit without determining the tribunal in which the question of reasonable profit should be determined. That is what I call "a lead-pencil platform." This is not.

This true American policy taxes foreign products.

It taxes them. They were not afraid to use the word "tax" merely because it was hurled back at them by the Democracy. The Democracy has succeeded in making a lot of people believe that the word "tax" is a word of opprobrium. I have heard it used here and before the committee in considering these tariff questions as though it was enough to condemn a man to charge him with wanting to tax the foreign producer for coming into our market; but those men were not afraid to do it, and the American people sustained them. Just look at this phrase:

And encourages home industry—

They do not say by what per cent. You do not require any lead pencil to determine what the Republican Party meant that wrote that platform.

It puts the burden of revenue on foreign goods; it secures the American market for the American producer.

That is the law and the gospel of the Republican Party that we ought to be sounding here and up and down the land as we march against the common enemy of the American people.

It upholds the American standard of wages for the American workingman.

It does not say how nearly it can put the American workingman on a par with the German or the English or the French or the Mexican or the Canadian workingman; it declares that it is in favor of putting him before those people—above them—in the standard and scale of compensation and prosperity.

It puts the factory by the side of the farm.

We here have lost sight of that. Who has considered the effect upon the sale of farm products and the encouragement to the productions of the farm in dealing with the steel schedules? With the billions of dollars represented by the enterprise, they have sought only to account for it along the trail of the money changers. How much of it have they traced into the country and sought to apply to the development of the resources of that great element of our population, with 16,000,000 of laborers, wage earners, and with 35,000,000 of population? How much of this great wealth have they sought to trace to them? In those days of Republicanism that was the first thought in their minds; that was the front banner in the procession—the relation between these industries and the people who supported them. Let us get back to those lines of protection, and we shall have the confidence and the support of the American people. Those are grand words.

It diffuses general thrift, and founds the strength of all on the strength of each. In its reasonable application it is just, fair, and impartial; equally opposed to foreign control and domestic monopoly.

I am speaking against the foreign control of our markets; I am speaking against the foreign influence or competition in the field of production and sale. The farmer is interested in having a market, and his market can only be based upon the purchasing power of the people of the country. If you destroy or impair their purchasing power, it affects the market of every man and woman in this country for whatever they may have to sell, whether it be the skill and energy of the man or the woman, or whether it be the fertility of the soil or the vicissitudes of life. They are all at stake in this balance.

When we made our declaration in regard to domestic policy, we were speaking of recent history. We did not have to read it; we knew it; we had lived through it. It had been subjected to the sifting process of no man's reasoning power. We knew that yesterday and last year and last month. There was desperate poverty; there was a lack of reward for industry; there was no market for industry. We knew those things, and when we wrote into the platform—

We denounce the present Democratic tariff as sectional, injurious to the public credit, and destructive to business enterprise—

We knew what we were talking about; it was not a question of cheeseparing and hairsplitting.

Then, there is the threat—because it is a threat—that is continually going out that we are going to elect to buy of a foreigner unless our people at home will be dictated to by somebody else as to what they shall receive for their labor or enterprise.

If I had my way, so far as the disclosures of the tariff are concerned, you would not know there was another government or another people on the face of the earth, except as we saw them come creeping through subject to our control, not coming through with a mandate as to what our markets should do with them when they came, but with a plea for admission to the advantages belonging to our Government. I would maintain this Government for its own people first, and I am not envious of those who grow rich; I am not envious of the men of millions, about whom we have heard so much. There is one solution to all ambition, and that is that we all die. It has solved many a question in this world among men. There are not 2 per cent of the fortunes to-day in the hands of men whose fathers had them. The field of opportunity has opened the door of fortune to those whose fathers knew only labor. What is the use in bothering ourselves because some man is rich? If he is rich within the law, it is his right. If the law is wrong that enables him to be rich, change the law as to the man affected, but do not repeal and amend laws affecting a hundred thousand other people in order to get at the one man. Go after the man himself.

These are pertinent considerations in dealing with this great business question of the country, because it is the Government itself. The issues that have been headlined in the papers for the last few weeks and months, and which have been discussed and wired over the world, are of no consequence to the people; they do not affect the prosperity of the people nor their happiness or comfort; they represent only the rivalries among men, the strife of men to attain not something for the benefit of their generation and their country, but something that will add to their physical or mental comfort as individuals. I am not interested in that question. They can have what they gain under the law and keep it without making me envious or jealous. We have been dealing with the wrong end of the question; and I do not suppose, from the conditions that surround this discussion now, that we are going to get back into the right track until the people put us there. It may be in this generation, or it may be in the next. I merely call attention now to the fact.

It may not seem a reasonable thing for me to stand here and criticize the platform made by the last Republican national convention, but I am speaking to Republicans when I refer to it, and I am doing so because there seems to me to be a disposition here to disregard the old lines and the old principles under which the party dominated the country for the country's good and the good of the people. Think of adopting a plank like this and then attempting to live up to it and misconstruing it and adding to it:

The Republican Party declares unequivocally for a revision of the tariff by a special session of Congress immediately following the inauguration of the next President.

That was a concession to the taunts of the Democracy. We were then living under a Republican system of tariff and we ought to have obtained a reputation by that time for wisdom enough to ask the people to trust the Republican Party to do the thing without putting it in those apologetic terms, apologizing for the Democracy, trying to look more like a Democrat than a Democrat in the hope that Democrats would support us, not knowing us from the Democrats, and hoping that the Republicans would remember us when we took off the disguise. That is what we were confronting and what we have been confronting of late.

Here was a Republican convention promising to jump at the snap of the Democratic whip and telling them just how we would do it. We were not content to say, "Well, Miss Democracy, we have dealt with this question before, and I guess you will have to trust us to deal with it again, relying upon our wisdom and conservative judgment to do it right." That was not enough—that was not bid enough for Democratic support, for the support of the discontented between the lines.

Then, again, see what we said:

In all tariff legislation the true principle of protection is best maintained by the imposition of such duties as will equal the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad—

That is, the cost of production abroad—

together with a reasonable profit.

Whoever conceived that last sentence would be a curiosity to me—"a reasonable profit." Who is going to determine? The profit to no two men is equal. The profit of men engaged in the same business on the same block, buying of the same man and selling to the same class of customers, would not be equal. Profit depends upon skill and management and expense and all the other considerations that enter into it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator if it is not equally as absurd for any man to suppose that we can determine the cost of production abroad, which is a varying matter from day to day and month to month?

Mr. HEYBURN. It varies every day.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is absolutely impossible to determine that accurately.

Mr. HEYBURN. There was the underlying fallacy of it. The cost of production of one article that I have in mind in Germany varied more than 100 per cent in 90 days—I referred to it the other day in my remarks—and it did so because there had been certain strikes and economic conditions surrounding that particular productive section of the country, and the cost of the item there had been enhanced. Then when they resumed work under the conditions of the employers the price went clear down below where it was when they started.

It is the fluctuation. How could a manufacturer in this country know the cost of production abroad unless he cabled every day? You have only to take up their trade sheets to see the vast shipments and the frequent and continuous change in the cost of production. Men go out on a strike for 25 per cent increase in their pay, and they get it. That adds to the cost of production. Times are hard and men are hunting employment in numbers, and that depreciates the cost of labor.

Then, again, this proposition takes no account of the different conditions—the cost of the buildings, and so forth. I think anyone who has been personally in a position to inspect it will agree with me when I say that the large majority of the manufactured products in countries like Germany and especially in Germany are made in inexpensive buildings. There are great workshops, there are finely equipped establishments, but the great majority of the products of that country are made in cheap workshops, made by people who live in cheap homes, made by people who are content to work for low wages.

What kind of a basis to rest on is the declaration in that platform—the difference in cost between abroad and home? Where is the element of stability and certainty that the business world requires as the condition of doing business? That was written in that platform. They first tried to forge new principles. They undertook to write into it a phrase from the Democratic platform of the same year—a pledge of the party to a revision downward.

Now I am going to ask the Senator from Iowa whether or not, in his judgment, there was in the Republican platform any pledge for a revision downward?

Mr. CUMMINS. I think there was a pledge for revision downward——

Mr. HEYBURN. I said in the Republican platform.

Mr. CUMMINS. Not in the words of the platform, but when it is remembered that that part of the platform was adopted after a very long campaign insisting upon a reduction of duties, I am sure the Senator from Idaho can not doubt that it was the general understanding that the platform would be followed by a revision reducing generally the tariff duties.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is rather a secondary process of reasoning. There had been agitation upon this subject, and the minds of the people were alert, and presumably the men in the convention had in mind whether they would adopt it, and they affirmatively did not, and the Senator arrives at the conclusion that they meant something just the opposite of what they did when they were alert. If the question had not been agitated at all, if men's minds were not alive to it, he might have claimed that it was through lack of attention and by inadvertence that they did not say they were in favor of revision downward, but the Senator's statement that the minds of the people were alert precludes the possibility that they omitted it through inadvertence.

The Democratic platform had declared for a revision downward; and were we in such harmony with the Democratic convention and the Democrats that we would go and write into our platform in specific language the declaration of the Democratic platform?

I do not think that anyone is justified in concluding that the national Republican Party and those who sent the delegates there ever for a moment intended to concede that there was error in Republican legislation and that the Republican duties should be written down under a pledge to get up in the morning before breakfast and do it.

Now, Mr. President, they went on. They said they would do this on the basis of a reasonable profit to American industries. There never was such reckless language written into a platform as those words—a reasonable profit to American industries. Who was to determine the reasonable profit? Can the man who does business in an expensively equipped business house make the same profit as the man who does it under a tent? Can the man who has a large investment in buildings in which he does business compete on the basis of profits with the man who has no expense? Do not the rents and the cost of the buildings enter into the question whether or not he can make what may be termed a reasonable profit? Is it a reasonable profit for the man who sells $10,000 worth of goods in a year to make 5 or 6 per cent on them as against the man who sells a million dollars worth of goods out of a less expensive establishment and makes 6 per cent on them? Can you possibly take that as a basis?

This platform is history, and I am only speaking, as I say, to Republicans a word of warning along Republican lines, that they may not repeat such mistakes, and inasmuch as we were not pledged in dealing with the question of tariff duties to reduce them downward or at all, I feel perfectly free, without being open to the charge of attacking my party or its platform, in calling attention to a just and proper interpretation of this language. No matter what the men who wrote it intended, we are entitled to interpret it by the dictionary of Republicanism.

I have been for three years here in this body fighting and contending against the assumption that the Republican Party was pledged to that which Senators have been continually insisting it should do; that is, to revise the tariff downward. Republicans here have become so obsessed with that idea that I think they really believed there was moral obligation resting upon them to revise the tariff downward. Their wires had become crossed. They had been reading the declaration of the Democratic platform probably without knowing it. The very fact that it was written in a Democratic platform would put me on notice.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator will concede, I suppose, that this part of the Republican platform of 1908 was adopted on account of the public agitation of the tariff question for a long time preceding it. Does the Senator contend that there had been any agitation to increase the duties on any important schedules of the tariff law?

Mr. HEYBURN. We had made a declaration in favor of a tariff system, and we had followed that with a declaration "Let that stand," and we were not agitating it. The worst thing that happens in this country is the frequent agitation of this question.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I agree with the Senator there.

Mr. HEYBURN. And changes in conditions do not warrant——

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator——

Mr. HEYBURN. Pardon me. And changes in conditions do not warrant interference with the tariff unless you proceed upon the assumption that you will make a change every day to comply with extraneous or outside conditions. Then you would have to change it every day. If you are going to revise or make a tariff based upon the changing conditions you would have to make it every day.

I now yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I agree with the general statement which the Senator makes. Of course, that has nothing to do with the particular inquiry as to the proper construction of the platform of 1908. I think myself the tariff ought to be taken out of political campaigns. It could be taken out, and the country ought not to be continually agitating the question. But it was agitated; it was the subject of general agitation and the leading public question in this country for a long time before the platform of 1908 was adopted, and the only insistent demand that was made with regard to changing the tariff in any way whatever was that it should be reduced and not increased.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator has evidently been unconciously in a Democratic environment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am speaking of the——

Mr. HEYBURN. There was no such demand among Republicans.

Mr. POINDEXTER. This was a Republican convention and a Republican platform.

Mr. HEYBURN. But it did not demand a reduction of duties.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is a question——

Mr. HEYBURN. It does not even mention the reduction of duties.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is a question we are just discussing.

Mr. HEYBURN. We have only to read it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. My understanding is that it meant a reduction of duty.

Mr. HEYBURN. It does not say so here.

Mr. POINDEXTER. My understanding is that it meant a reduction of duty, because it was in response to a demand in the Republican Party——

Mr. HEYBURN. No.

Mr. POINDEXTER. For a reduction of duty; and there was no general demand in the Republican Party for an increase of duty.

Mr. HEYBURN. No. That demand came from such communities and such people as demand a change in the Constitution every day and a change in the system of government every day; the people who want everything submitted by initiative and referendum. Those people are always making a noise, and a great noise. You have to be very careful to distinguish. They understand the art of ventriloquism. They can throw that voice into the most respectable circles at times and you do not know whether you are hearing the voice of the present or of the absent.

Mr. POINDEXTER. On the question of ventriloquism I do not think we are confined to one side. There are those who are willing, when the proper occasion presents itself, to amend the Constitution if necessary, and there are those who are not willing to amend it at all.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let us not get into that question. I have thought some of proposing an amendment, merely for educational purposes, to change the oath of office that the Senator took and the President took and I took. Let it be that "we will support and amend the Constitution."

Mr. POINDEXTER. The only difference between the Senator and myself in this regard is this: The Senator constitutes himself as the instructor and the educator, for he says he is willing in that capacity to introduce an amendment for educational purposes. I am perfectly willing to sit at his feet and learn from him either in regard to the tariff or in regard to the Constitution, but when we come to fix the standards of Republicanism I prefer to accept the Republican national convention and the Republican national platform of 1908, which the Senator now says resulted from these people who are always talking and always making a noise, I am more willing to accept them as the standards of the party than simply the assertions of the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am accepting them as standards, but I want them correctly interpreted. I do not want anything written into them. I do not want the word "downward" written in when it says we will revise the tariff. It is bad enough as it was. I do not want it improved in that way.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; although I did want to answer an assertion of the Senator from Washington, but probably I can consolidate them.

Mr. CUMMINS. In any event, the Senator from Idaho ought to feel much gratification, because if any influence arose out of the platform of 1908 for a downward revision the Congress of the United States very successfully resisted that influence.

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not know that they did. I am not going into that phase of it now. I may later.

I want to say something to the Senator from Washington. This is an opportune time. The Senator from Washington says the sentiment was in favor of tariff reduction, outside of Congress. That is the effect of what he said. There never was a sentiment of that kind that met the favor of the American people and there never will be. There are a lot—I do not know how I ought to designate them and still be respectful—of unoccupied, would-be politicians who can always tell how the other man can perform his task; but, fortunately for the people, they never perform any of their own. They are like the man on the fence who tells the farmer how he can plow a furrow or a man who sees a mechanic at work and tells him how to do the work. There is no one I know of that favored such a proposition who was ever intrusted by the people—I mean originally; I know where it started—with the responsible duties of Government. They started the propaganda and it afforded a convenient nucleus for the men who wanted something the people would not give them. By and by it got to be quite a big, floating body. Senators have seen seaweed start from one little plant or leaf and others attach themselves to it, until it begins to think it is an island, and by and by a continent, and now these people begin to think they are the earth.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Idaho if we will not agree on some hour to-morrow at which to take a vote on this bill?

Mr. HEYBURN. Let me say to the Senator that I have a work to perform. I am performing it at the right place. It is not the work of converting the Democracy. I have converted only a few Democrats, to my own personal knowledge. I have had some who were influenced in their judgment by what I have said; but I am talking for the Republican Party, I hope and believe, beyond the walls of this building as well as within it. I am trying to do that which will help to lay the foundation for the success of Republican principles—if not to-day, then some other day.

The work that I am engaged in is too serious for me to pause and consider whether or not my own convenience or that of others would be served by fixing a time to vote. I do not for a moment imagine that I can stand here and talk on this question indefinitely. But I am going to talk it until I have said what I think ought to be said, and as I think it ought to be said, as nearly as I can. I am not at all impatient with the duties of government. I am not at all impatient that we should make a mistake in this hour by our action. I am not at all impatient that we should be left in a position where the Republicans of the country will say, "You had the opportunity and the power to say to the American people where you stood and why you stood there, and merely because a combination was made between Democrats and some other people you thought best to retreat from the field." I would never retreat from a field of action or controversy where my duty required me to remain and fight it out.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will permit me, I will state to him that there is no such combination and agreement, so far as I know, between this side and the other side or any part of the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will take that in absolute verity if the Senators who voted in a certain way to-day will stand up in their places and say that they will stay by their party when the vote comes upon this bill. I am not afraid to stand up and say how I will vote. If by a poll of Republican Senators with which we are credited it appears that the Democratic minority is not to be allowed to pass this Democratic measure in a Republican Senate, then we can probably talk about a vote.

Yesterday, when the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] was closing the debate upon his amendment, he made certain declarations which really brought some hope to my heart. He said he would not vote for the Democratic bill. Now, let the Democrats stand up and say they will not vote for the Cummins substitute, and we will begin to untangle this tangled skein.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not rise for the purpose of getting into any controversy with the Senator about how Senators on that side of the Chamber are going to vote.

Mr. HEYBURN. But, Mr. President, the question is to be solved on that side as well as this.

Mr. SIMMONS. I simply rose for the purpose of seeing if it was not possible to accommodate the Senator and fix an hour to-morrow. I have no disposition, I assure the Senator, to interfere with his speaking as long as he desires. I thought possibly that by meeting to-morrow at 11 o'clock we could agree to vote at 5 or 6 o'clock to-morrow evening, as no one shows any disposition to further discuss this question except the Senator from Idaho. That would allow him probably as long a time as he would desire. I simply meant to ask the Senator, in all kindness, whether that arrangement would be satisfactory to him.

Mr. HEYBURN. I give the Senator the fullest credit for sincerity and candor in this matter, and I have no feeling, of course, as he knows, one way or the other.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am sure of that.

Mr. HEYBURN. We are both proceeding along lines that seem to us wise and patriotic. Suppose we were to fix a time to vote to-morrow. To-morrow is a holiday outside of this Chamber. I do not know, but I believe we are going to sit to-morrow.

Mr. SIMMONS. My understanding is that we will not adjourn over to-morrow.

Mr. HEYBURN. If we should fix a time to vote to-morrow evening, there would be vacant seats here all day to-morrow waiting for the evening to come. If I have any words of wisdom, or that I deem to be words of wisdom, they would fall upon empty seats. Now, why should I do that? If I were filibustering or speaking merely for the purpose of making a speech, I might do that; but I am sincere in my endeavor to awaken a response in the minds and hearts of my fellow Senators. That being the case, I can not conscientiously take any chance to meet the conditions that to-morrow nobody will attend the Senate. Senators would wait until the hour for voting. To-morrow morning I have made an arrangement to perform a patriotic duty that is always a pleasure to me, and I intend to do that during the morning hours, unless the Senate controls me in some other way.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will pardon me, I suppose there is a way in which the Senator might be assured of a good audience all the while to-morrow. If we would agree to vote to-morrow immediately after the conclusion of the Senator's speech, he would have a good audience all day probably.

Mr. HEYBURN. I gathered that from a somewhat familiar acquaintance with the rules of procedure. I had realized that that might be done. I am not impatient with the existing conditions.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. HEYBURN. I do.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to suggest that to-morrow being Decoration Day, we adjourn over until Friday.

Mr. HEYBURN. That question is, I think, under consideration, and I want to say this——

Mr. CURTIS. I hope the Senator will agree to that

Mr. HEYBURN. Of course I would be very glad to see it that way, but I desire to see this. It is no pleasure to me to detain the Senate here after the ordinary hour of adjournment. I have not any patience with a condition of affairs that would punish a man because he dares to perform his duty. I am not speaking frivolously—I trust I am not—and I am speaking for a cause that is worthy to be spoken for. Why the ordinary hour of adjournment can not be observed I am unable, from my point of view, to understand; but if they are not to be observed, then there is only one thing left to do and that is to do my duty; that is all.

Mr. CURTIS. Will the Senator yield to me to make a motion?

Mr. HEYBURN. What motion is it?

Mr. CURTIS. That when the Senate adjourns it be to meet on Friday.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; I will yield to the Senator to make the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho yields to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. HEYBURN. For the purpose of making the motion. I do not yield the floor.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to state that the House has adjourned over, so I am advised, until Friday, and I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday at 12 o'clock.

Mr. SIMMONS. I rose to move to amend the motion by moving that when we adjourn we adjourn until 11 o'clock to-morrow; but at the suggestion of Senators around me I will modify the amendment. I had understood it was not the desire of the other side to adjourn over to-morrow, and I had been relying upon that; but if it is the desire of the other side to adjourn over to-morrow, of course I would not want to antagonize an adjournment over Memorial Day. So I will change my amendment so as to make it 11 o'clock on Friday.

Mr. HEYBURN. Has the Senator taken into consideration the committee meetings on that day? The 11 o'clock meeting interferes with committee meetings very much.

Mr. SIMMONS. We all have committee meetings, but near the close of a session, when we are anxious to get through, we have to sit a little longer hours.

Mr. CURTIS. So far as I am concerned I am willing to accept the suggestion, and I will move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday at 11 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas moves that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday at 11 o'clock a. m.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Of course I am aware of the patriotic sentiment which moves the Senator from Kansas in making the motion, but at the same time I for one am not in favor of adjourning over to-morrow. The patriotic exercises of to-morrow are nearly all confined to the forenoon, and those of us who desire so to do can well attend to that duty and still have the full legislative day here in the Senate to work. There are very many and very important matters pending before the Senate now that will sorely try our patience and strength before we get through. I for one am anxious to sit as long as we consistently can until the work of the Senate and of Congress shall be wound up and finally disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am aware of the fact——

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I have not objected heretofore, but this debate will be interminable if no one raises a question of order. A motion to adjourn is not debatable.

Mr. GALLINGER. No; it is not. I recognize the fact that it is not debatable, and I was simply going to ask unanimous consent to say a word, and then I hope the vote will be taken. It is not a debatable question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In order that we may keep strictly within the rule, the Chair will put the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to say a few words.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if I may say a word on the point of order, this is not a motion to adjourn to a day certain. It is not a motion to adjourn at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is that when the Senate adjourns it shall adjourn to meet on Friday.

Mr. LODGE. That is a very different motion. It is a debatable question, in my opinion.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I may be wrong about it, but I had an impression that any motion relating to adjournment is not a debatable question. But whether that be so or not, I am going to say only a single word. I had said to some Senators on the other side as well as to Senators on this side that I thought we ought to sit to-morrow. I have not changed my mind, and I hope the motion to adjourn over will not be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the motion of the Senator from Kansas that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday at 11 o'clock.

Mr. JONES. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], and I will withhold my vote. If privileged to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. O'GORMAN (when his name was called). In the absence of the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], with whom I am paired, I withhold my vote.

Mr. PAYNTER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. GUGGENHEIM]. He is absent from the Chamber, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. SHIVELY (when his name was called). In the absence of the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE], with whom I am paired, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BURNHAM]. I notice that he is not in the Chamber, and therefore I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have announced my pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]. I am sure that that Senator would vote "nay" if present, and therefore I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (after having voted in the negative). I announced the transfer of my pair to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE]. As that Senator is now present, I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY], and I will let my vote remain.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. He is not here, and I desire to withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 30, as follows:

YEAS—22.

Bourne	Gronna	Nelson	Smith, Mich.

So Mr. CURTIS's motion was rejected.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, it is a small matter, but a moment ago I made the point of order that the motion that the Senate adjourn, or that when it adjourn it adjourn to a day certain was not debatable. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] took issue, and said that it was debatable. I ask the Secretary to read Rule XXII for the benefit of the Senate, so as to show that no motion relating to adjournment is debatable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

RULE XXII.

PRECEDENCE OF MOTIONS.

When a question is pending, no motion shall be received but—
To adjourn.
To adjourn to a day certain, or that when the Senate adjourn it shall be to a day certain.
To take a recess.
To proceed to the consideration of executive business.
To lay on the table.
To postpone indefinitely.
To postpone to a day certain.
To commit
To amend.
Which several motions shall have precedence as they stand arranged; and the motions relating to adjournment, to take a recess, to proceed to the consideration of executive business, to lay on the table, shall be decided without debate.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Texas is right. I think the rule covers a motion to adjourn to a day certain.

Mr. GALLINGER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 23 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow (Thursday, May 30, 1912) at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, May 29, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we thank Thee for the great men who in thought and deed have contributed to the dignity of life. We do not build monuments to the evildoer; his acts we would forget. We build monuments to the men who think great thoughts and do noble deeds that we may perpetuate their memory and emulate their virtues. To wait on destiny is futile, since destiny waits on us. Do the opportunity of to-day and we are prepared for the opportunity on the morrow. Live well to-day and we shall be prepared to live better to-morrow. Every good thought, every noble deed, weaves itself into our being and is its own reward. "For he that hath, to him shall more be given; and he that hath not, from him shall be taken even that which he hath."

Help us, we beseech Thee, to build monuments for ourselves which shall survive the wrecks of time, that we may glorify ourselves by glorifying humanity and our Maker. In Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following telegram, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

JAMAICA PLAINS, MASS., May 27, 1912.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

I request leave of absence for one week, on account of illness of my father, who is in a very critical condition.

GEORGE EDMUND FOSS.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the leave will be granted; and the Chair ought to state, in justice to Mr. Foss, that this telegram came to him yesterday morning, but was misplaced in some way, and the Chair had forgotten who it was who asked leave, and the Chair has no doubt that yesterday was the particular day the gentleman wanted to have the leave granted.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

on March 24, 1832, and under or by virtue of the treaty between the United States of America and the Creek Tribe or Nation of Indians of the 9th day of August, 1814; and

H. J. Res. 319. A joint resolution making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for contingent expenses of the Senate and House of Representatives for the fiscal year 1912, and for other purposes.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the subject of the Schuylkill River.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to print some remarks in the RECORD on the Schuylkill River. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. MCMORRAN was granted leave of absence, for two weeks, on account of illness in family.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday, and the unfinished business is the bill H. R. 17260.

BUREAU OF MINES AND MINING.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that we may close debate on the bill H. R. 17260 after 1 hour and 30 minutes time.

The SPEAKER. Who is to control the time?

Mr. FOSTER. I would ask that I be permitted to control one half and any gentleman who may be opposed to the bill control the other half.

The SPEAKER. Who is the chief opponent of this bill? The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that general debate on this bill be confined to 1 hour and 30 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I was going to reserve the right to object.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move that general debate close in two hours.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Make it an hour and a half.

Mr. FOSTER. I ask to modify that by making it 1 hour and 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that all general debate on this bill close in 1 hour and 30 minutes.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. MARTIN of Colorado) there were—ayes 58, noes 6.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 234, nays 6, answered "present" 10, not voting 142, as follows:

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, I want to change my vote. I voted "yea." I want to be marked "present."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. BROWNING, and he answered "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. General debate is limited to 1 hour and 30 minutes. A quorum is present, and further proceedings are suspended under the call. The Doorkeeper will unlock the doors. Under the rule the House automatically resolves itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the Chair will ask the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] to take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. MARTIN of Colorado in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 17260) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish in the Department of the Interior a Bureau of Mines," approved May 16, 1910. By order of the House, general debate is limited to one hour and a half.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this one hour and a half be divided equally between those who may be opposed to the bill and those who favor it, and that I may control one half of the time and some one who may be opposed to it may control the other half.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] asks unanimous consent that the time be controlled, one half by himself and the other half by some one opposed to the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Is this general debate?

Mr. FOSTER. General debate.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] is entitled to an hour.

Mr. FOSTER. I will say to my colleague that I do not desire to use any time myself.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] whether he anticipates there are enough gentlemen on the floor opposed to this bill to occupy one-half of the time? My impression is that there are very few who are opposed to the bill, and therefore a division of time between those who are in favor of the bill and those who are opposed to it would not be fair.

Mr. BARTLETT. How much does the gentleman estimate this bill will cost the Government in addition to what the Bureau of Mines costs now?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think it would cost much, but I will say to the gentleman that that matter is entirely under the control of Congress.

Mr. BARTLETT. I know; but the gentleman proposes to establish certain offices and require certain things to be done. If the bill becomes a law, the duty will devolve upon Congress to make appropriations.

Mr. FOSTER. The bill especially provides "as Congress may from time to time appropriate."

Mr. BARTLETT. Of course Congress could appropriate or it could abolish the offices on the ground that it would retrench expenditures under the Holman rule.

Mr. FOSTER. If Congress should decide in one Congress to take up certain problems and appropriate for those particular problems in that year, the other problems would be taken up at a subsequent time.

Mr. BARTLETT. Unless the Holman rule should be invoked in the next Congress or the Congress succeeding. If you appropriate for an office and do not create a salary, the officer might have a suit against the Government for recovery.

Mr. FOSTER. I suggest to the gentleman from Georgia that while the present Committee on Appropriations is in power I do not think there will be any trouble about that.

Mr. BARTLETT. But there may be a change in the party, but I hope not.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the gentleman will watch this in the next Congress.

Mr. MILLER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois one further question. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. Has the gentleman in mind any gentleman on the floor of the House who cares to act in opposition to the bill and cares to have the disposal of 45 minutes?

Mr. FOSTER. No. I will say to the gentleman from Minnesota that I do not desire to use any time myself at all.

Mr. MILLER. I understand that.

Mr. FOSTER. But I wanted to arrange that Members who did desire to have time could have it.

Mr. MILLER. I suggest that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] be allowed to control all of the time.

Mr. FOSTER. I would not ask for that.

Mr. MILLER. I know the gentleman's modesty would forbid.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman is entitled to an hour, and then whoever might be recognized would be entitled to the remainder of the time. Then the bill is to be considered under the five-minute rule. It seems to me the gentleman had better take his hour.

Mr. FOSTER. I simply want to be perfectly fair.

Mr. CANNON. That is fair.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask to be recognized in my own right.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] is recognized.

Mr. FOSTER. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER].

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, we are all of us apt to be most interested in the working of those agencies of Government which come in the closest touch with our own people.

Two years ago or thereabouts when the bill to organize the Bureau of Mines was offered in the House I gave it my cordial support, and I doubtless would have done so if there had been no miners and no mines in my own district, because I recognized the great value which this bureau could be to the mining industries of the entire country and to the people at large. We all at that time assumed, however, that the principal activity of this bureau would be with respect to the coal mines of the country, and on account of the local interest in that business in my own district I gave it my support even more gladly than I otherwise would have done.

I come from the anthracite coal district of Pennsylvania. In one of the counties in my district—Carbon County—anthracite coal was first mined in this country and used for commercial purposes nearly 100 years ago. From that time down to the present the people of that county have been engaged in large numbers, and with an immense amount of capital, in the business of mining and selling anthracite coal.

At the time this bureau was originally created I indulged the hope that the interpretation of the language giving powers to the bureau would be broad enough to cover the activities of certain other mining industries in my State and district, and

I myself believed that the language of the law was sufficient for that purpose. I want to say that so far as my observation has gone, and so far as I have learned from the people interested in coal mining especially, the work of this bureau, under the efficient and able management of its chief, Dr. Holmes, has fully justified its creation. And although the time of its operation has been comparatively short, the work which it has done has fully come up to the expectations of those who devised the plan that resulted in the creation of this bureau.

But, Mr. Chairman, there are, as I intimated, other mining industries besides the coal-mining industry which are in need of the kind of service that this bureau has been giving in the coal-mining regions, and the present bill, as I understand it, is intended, in the creation of a new organic act for this bureau, to widen its jurisdiction and enlarge the scope of its work in order to include metal mining and quarrying. It is in relation to the quarrying business that I particularly desire to address myself to-day, and it is because of this addition to the jurisdiction of the bureau, permitting it to cover the operations in stone, cement, and slate quarrying, that I believe the bureau, with these enlarged powers, will be even more eminently useful to the people of the country than it has been since it was first organized.

After the bureau began its operations it was learned that it was paying no attention to conditions in the quarrying business, and I introduced a bill (H. R. 15784) to amend the organic act of the Bureau of Mines in section 2, so that it should be the—province and duty of said bureau and its director, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to make diligent investigation of the methods of mining and quarrying in slate, cement rock, granite, and other quarries,

And so forth. That bill went to the Committee on Mines and Mining, which gave it careful and close consideration. The committee granted a hearing to the interests affected by it and to those men who desired that the operations of the bureau should be extended in this manner. While I had hoped that the language of the new organic act, as reported in the Foster bill, would be a little more definite with regard to the operations of the bureau with respect to cement rock, slate, and granite quarries, I am satisfied, and I believe the persons interested in those business operations are satisfied, that under the new language contained in this bill their interests will be safeguarded.

I submitted that bill to the chief of the bureau, who replied that in his judgment such an amendment to the organic act would be eminently proper and wise, and concluded a letter to me by the statement:

I quite agree with you that such work should not only be authorized in the organic act of the Bureau of Mines, but that it is important that such work should be done.

Members should not minimize the importance of this addition to the jurisdiction of this bureau. It is of itself a sufficient argument to pass this bill. In my own district in Pennsylvania, Mr. Chairman, 85 per cent of the slate mined, manufactured, and produced in the United States is taken out of the earth. It comes from enormous quarries, holes in the ground, which are sometimes 500 feet deep and often deeper, and have reached as high as 1,000 feet in diameter at the opening. The refuse from these quarries is piled in immense heaps on the quarries' edge, so that frequently there is a distance from the top of the refuse pile to the bottom of the quarry of 1,000 feet. Men are compelled to work in these quarries hanging almost literally on the side of a perpendicular rock declivity; they are transported from the bottom to the top in baskets, and across the quarry in baskets or buckets, and it is an extremely dangerous occupation.

The same condition exists in the granite quarries in Vermont and in other parts of the country, although I am not prepared to say that the holes in the ground are as large as in the slate belt of Pennsylvania.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PALMER. I will.

Mr. CANNON. The slate quarries that the gentleman speaks of are in the State of Pennsylvania?

Mr. PALMER. The slate quarries to which I have just referred are in the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. CANNON. And the granite quarries are in Vermont?

Mr. PALMER. The largest granite quarries are in Vermont, and there are many granite quarries in other States of the Union, as the gentleman knows.

Mr. CANNON. Has the State of Pennsylvania paid any attention to this industry under its police powers?

Mr. PALMER. The State of Pennsylvania has passed very adequate laws relating to the inspection of anthracite and bituminous coal mines, but they have not passed any such legislation requiring inspection in quarries.

Mr. CANNON. Has any effort been made to have them?

Mr. PALMER. Yes; an effort has been made to have Pennsylvania pass a comprehensive system of inspection laws for these quarries along much the same lines as the inspection of the anthracite and bituminous coal fields. I myself drafted a quarry-inspection bill, which I have twice presented to the Pennsylvania Legislature and which I have argued before their committees time and time again, but for some reason, generally suspected to be the close affiliation between certain of the operators of these quarries and the organization which has been all-powerful in that legislature, it has so far been impossible for the people of Pennsylvania to get this service for their own State.

Mr. CANNON. I will ask the gentleman further: If the only power under the police powers does not reside in Pennsylvania to go with "thus saith the State of Pennsylvania," and is there any power in the Congress of the United States as to these slate quarries to go with "thus saith the United States do so and so"?

Mr. PALMER. I think we passed that question when we passed the original act creating this bureau. If it is lawful, if it is proper, if there is power in this Congress to do these things with relation to other mining enterprises which the Bureau of Mines has been engaged in since its creation, certainly there is no reason why the activities should not be extended to the slate and rock quarries. Every quarry and every mine is in one State or another; is within the jurisdiction of some one State and subject to its laws. As far as coal mining is concerned, the States may have exercised their right to inspect the conditions under which men are compelled to work, and the fact that they have not done so with respect to granite, slate, and cement quarries is no reason why, after we have given the assistance of the Government to men engaged in the mining of coal, we should not extend it to those in the dangerous occupation of mining rock and cement.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will allow me, Alaska belongs to the United States, and we are responsible for the Philippines. There is no doubt about the Bureau of Mines, where we can go with "thus saith the United States," where we can make all manner of investigation, and go with authority. Now, so far as the slate quarries of Pennsylvania are concerned, Uncle Sam must pull off his hat and say to Pennsylvania, "Will you be kind enough to come in and make an investigation and employ my force?" I merely want to say if the gentleman and his State had been as vigilant touching the slate quarries as they have touching the mining of coal, would there have been any necessity for this legislation touching slate?

Mr. PALMER. Oh, yes; I think there would, because the work of the Bureau of Mines is totally and entirely different from the work of the mine-inspection bureaus in the various States. I will not go into detail about what the Pennsylvania law is with respect to inspection, but, in a word, it divides the State into districts, appoints State officers, who see that the laws which have been passed by the State for the safety and health of miners are observed.

It would be a good thing, undoubtedly, if the State had done the same thing with respect to these quarries. But this Bureau of Mines does not propose to inspect the quarries, does not propose to endeavor to enforce any laws relating to the safety of quarrymen, but it proposes, as I read the organic act of the bureau, to make investigations of conditions under which men must work, and from a scientific standpoint, after examination by experts, to issue bulletins giving the country the benefit of that examination in order that the owners and operators of slate and cement and rock quarries may, if their judgment approves—and there is no way to enforce it—adopt improved methods and adopt such means of insuring the safety of the miners as may be recommended.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman shall proceed for such time as he may desire.

Mr. PALMER. I do not want to take that privilege. I do not want more than 10 minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate was limited in the House to 1 hour and 30 minutes.

Mr. PALMER. The gentleman from Illinois took the floor and was entitled to an hour and he yielded me 15 minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have 15 minutes, not to be taken out of the time.

Mr. BARTLETT. But the House has already ordered, on a roll call, a limit of one hour and a half debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Illinois took the floor in his own right for an hour and yielded 15 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania; and he can yield as much more time as he wishes.

Mr. CANNON. I understand that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] was recognized for an hour and yielded 15 minutes of that time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER]. That leaves him 45 minutes. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] would yield the floor, reserving his 45 minutes, then it would be in order for the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] or myself to ask that the gentleman's time be extended for 15 minutes. That would take 15 minutes of the remaining time.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to that or to the gentleman having time. In fact, I have no objection to any arrangement, except that the House, having by vote on a roll call limited the amount of debate to an hour and a half, we can not, in Committee of the Whole, change that.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely. We can not do that, but the 15 minutes would come out of the hour and a half.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes more to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. PALMER. Which, I hope, begins now.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to interruptions. The subject which I am discussing is not a large one, and I hope it will not take very much time. I have referred to the slate quarries in the slate belt of Pennsylvania, because I have personal knowledge and information about conditions there. I know, as every man who is familiar with the slate belt knows, that two-thirds of the enormous number of accidents resulting in loss of life and injury to limb in those quarries could be prevented if the foremen and superintendents of the plants had been instructed by some expert who had studied conditions in all the quarries everywhere. In some quarries these accidents almost never happen and in others they are very common, which of itself is evidence that in many cases it is ignorance or carelessness which causes the accidents.

The constant temptation in slate quarries is to save the excavation of waste. Slate is apt to be beneath the soil, and the top is taken off in order to get to it. Unless all of that top is removed and removed far enough away so that there will be no danger of a slide, then every man who goes into such a quarry takes his life into his hands.

I have taken the trouble to investigate through the coroner's office of one county in Pennsylvania—Northampton—the number of deaths which have occurred in these quarries in the past 10 years. They are only the deaths on which the coroner sat. Manifestly there have been a large number of others resulting from injuries some time after the injury was inflicted. The record is by no means complete, and yet I have from that single county a list of 232 names of men who have thus lost their lives in accidents of that character in those quarries.

Mr. MILLER. Over how long a period of time?

Mr. PALMER. Ten years in one county.

Mr. MILLER. How many men are employed in that county in that kind of work?

Mr. PALMER. It is difficult to say how many men are employed in that county, but I would say the number does not exceed 4,000 at the outside. In addition to this list there is an enormous list of injuries to these people. They are a high class of workmen—not cheap foreign labor—principally Welshmen coming from the quarries of Wales to go into the slate business of Pennsylvania.

Mr. MILLER. Can the gentleman give us any comparison between the mortality statistics in that quarrying industry and coal mining?

Mr. PALMER. Not of my own authority, but an officer of the International Union of Slate Workers, which I think is the name of their organization, has made the statement over his signature that after investigation the proportion of injuries and casualties in the slate business is found to be larger than in the coal-mining business in Pennsylvania.

Mr. MILLER. I thought likely it was, and that is the reason I made the inquiry.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt the gentleman to ask him a question for information?

Mr. PALMER. Certainly.

Mr. TILSON. Is the slate industry confined to excavation from above, or are there shafts and runs underground the same as in coal mining?

Mr. PALMER. No; they are all quarries; but they may be in a mountain side, where the entire side of a mountain is taken out and the men are compelled to work 500 feet above the level of the ground, or there may be enormous holes in the ground where men will be compelled to work 500 feet below the surface of the ground.

Mr. TILSON. The principal danger is from slides?

Mr. PALMER. Yes. Of course there is also the danger of premature explosions from blasting operations. There is a danger from overloaded baskets or buckets carrying the slate to the surface. These accidents happen in half a dozen or more different ways. I have a list, prepared by the men themselves, in which they name two-thirds of the accidents as easily preventable if proper precautions had been taken. I do not say that the operators have been careless or negligent. They have fierce competition and they are bound to operate so that they can make the most money, but they have not in some cases taken the pains and time and trouble to investigate the methods by which these serious accidents could be avoided. Methods are adopted in some quarries which could be duplicated everywhere, and which would be, without increasing the expense or operation of the quarries, if a bureau like this so advised it in a report.

Everything that I have said with relation to slate quarries applies with equal force to the cement-rock quarries of the country. They are not confined to Pennsylvania, and are all over the country. I do not know exactly how the cement rock is taken out of the ground in other parts, for I have never visited those quarries or mines, but in Pennsylvania I do. In my district there is the largest cement mill in the world, a plant large enough to take a single order for 5,000,000 barrels, and it is now completing that order by sending cement to the Panama Canal for the United States Government. The cement rock is taken out of the mountain side. Enormous quarries are chiseled into the sides of the mountains in the south and west sides of the Blue Ridge Mountains of Pennsylvania. I have stood at the bottom of those quarries and looked at men clinging, like flies to a window pane, on the side of a rocky declivity which marks the boundaries of those quarries, so high up that their features could not be distinguished. They looked one-third their size.

The danger there is just as great as in the slate quarries, and the extraordinary development of the cement business growing out of the large increase of the use of concrete everywhere has opened up so many of these giant quarries, has made competition in the business so considerable, has encouraged men engaged in the business to operate so rapidly, that I am convinced that, as in the slate quarries, a suggestion from experts having the confidence of the people, such as the Bureau of Mines would have, would result in an enormous saving of life and limb of the men who are compelled to work in those quarries.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there are many other features of this reorganization of the bureau, if I might call it such, that appeal to me. There are many other reasons why this act should be passed, but in my judgment, as I said a moment ago, there need be no other reason advanced than that under the new organic act the Bureau of Mines would be permitted to make investigations of those conditions to which I have referred, in the confident belief on the part of those most interested that such investigations would result in great benefit to the men engaged in those enterprises. I cordially approve all that this bureau has done in the interest of the coal miner. I know that it has been of tremendous value to the coal mines of the country, and especially to the men engaged in that work. I want to say that those men who go down hundreds of feet into the bowels of the earth to take out the slate, or climb the mountain sides for hundreds of feet to blast out the cement rock, are entitled to just as much consideration at the hands of the Government as are those men who go down beneath the soil and, with lamps on their hats, dig out the anthracite and bituminous coals which feed the insatiable maw of industry everywhere. If there is reason for the protection of the one, there is reason for the protection of the other. If there is value in the work of this bureau for the coal miner, there is value in it for the quarryman, and I shall be glad, for the sake of those men who have long struggled to secure legislation in their own State by which their safety would be improved, if they will finally secure some relief out of this legislation which is before the House to-day. [Loud applause.]

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, when this House passed the original act providing for a Bureau of Mines there was a great deal of hostility to the legislation. It was claimed at that time that it was unnecessary and inexpedient, because other branches of the Government service could adequately carry on the same kind of work. There was necessarily at that time a prognostication in a somewhat speculative manner as to the probable work of the Bureau of Mines and its probable value and effect upon the important industry of mining in this country. After an experience of two years we are now able to tell what this Bureau of Mines can do and should do, and therefore we are able to state the exact terms of the organic act that creates it. Also I think we are now agreed that instead of the hostility that originally was to be found with respect to the establishment of the bureau we have an atmosphere entirely friendly, but inclined to keep proper restrictions upon the activities of this as in the case of any other bureau. I remember it was particularly stated two years ago tnat the reason for the establishment of the Bureau of Mines was to promote the safety of the men engaged in mining, and particularly coal mining. We had served up to us with a good deal of dramatic strength the horrors of coal mining, how many accidents had occurred that resulted in the death even of hundreds in single cases. The House no doubt had in mind largely in the framing of the phraseology of the bill at that time that the activities of the bureau should be largely exercised in investigation of conditions concerning the coal-mining industry, and as a result the Bureau of Mines has largely confined its activities to health conditions, safety appliances, and protective measures in this class of work. I recall a short time ago when the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who has just delighted the House with a splendid speech, occupied the floor with respect to a tariff bill, of which he was the author. During the course of his remarks, which were both eloquent and instructive, I remember he said that iron was king and that the palace of the king was the State of Pennsylvania. I took no exception to the remark at that time and do not now, but at this moment I would add a little to that and say that if it were not for the iron-ore mines in the State of Minnesota that king's palace would be but a whited sepulcher for dead men's bones. The time will not be far away when the grand State of Pennsylvania, that I admire as all do, will depend for its prosperity upon the great mines of regions far to the west. She must turn to these western areas that the wheels of industries within her borders may turn and that prosperity may be promoted among her people. In the county in which I live is mined one-half of all the iron ore mined in the United States, so I am more interested in that side of the question than in quarrying or in coal mines. I may confess that two years ago I was somewhat impressed with the great number of accidents of a horrible nature that were held up to view, accidents that were largely confined to the coal-mining industry; but after some investigation I find that the number of men each year who fall in the industrial army by fatal accidents in iron mines of the country is a greater total in proportion to the men engaged than those who fall in the same way in the coal-mining industry.

In other words, fatal accidents in iron mines to-day are more numerous in proportion to the men engaged in the work than in the coal-mining industry. As a result, therefore, it is certainly proper that this Bureau of Mines should have full and enlarged power and be given instructions, I will say, Mr. Chairman, to undertake in reference to iron mines all of the activities they have hitherto displayed in respect to coal mines. I agree to all that the gentleman has said in respect to quarrying both limestone or cement stone and slate in the country. I think I could make a similar argument in respect to nearly every mining industry within the borders of the United States. To-day many of the western States are largely given to copper mining, an extremely hazardous occupation, because the men are nearly all deep down in the bowels of the earth, and while fire damp and some of the gases attendant upon coal mining are not prevalent, there are other many and important dangers. So, Mr. Chairman, I think it is highly proper that at this time, at the expiration of two years of activity, we should give to the Bureau of Mines the enlarged powers and full authority to carry on the work for which they have already demonstrated complete competence. Again, I do not know of any work more important from an industrial and purely financial standpoint. We are actuated largely, of course, in the consideration of a measure of this kind by humanitarian considerations, and it is proper. We think of the men who are injured, who are suffering, and of the suffering of those who are dependent upon them. But the community has an interest in the matter beyond that of sympathy. Whenever a man falls a victim to an accident in a mine, leaving a family, the community must bear the expense of the support of that family, and if we multiply these by the hundreds, as we must, the consideration is an important one.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] has called attention to the fact that two hundred and forty-some men had met their death in the quarrying business in one county of Pennsylvania during the past 10 years. I want to say to him that almost that number annually falls in two counties in Minnesota. If we are to take into consideration the large number who are injured in such a way as to prevent their ever again engaging in gainful occupations or manual labor, we would have the number multiplied several times. By reason of the lax methods that have in many instances been employed in the mining industry we have been gradually collecting in every mining community a large number of people who belong to the dependent class who have become public charges, and by reason of that consideration the public at large is interested in every kind of preventive measure that can be found.

And yet there is a field for this Bureau of Mines independent of this, and it is well worth mentioning while the subject is up for consideration. I have had an opportunity to get a little insight into some of the activities of the Mining Bureau. To illustrate, we have had recently an investigation by an important committee of this House to see what ought to be done with one of the great corporations of the United States, namely, the United States Steel Corporation; an investigation not yet completed. I believe it was thought at one time that the Steel Corporation probably controlled a majority of the steel-manufacturing industries of the country and controlled more than half of all the iron ore deposits. Quite likely they do control a majority of the steel-manufacturing plants and over one-half the iron ore now merchantable, but it is only a small part of that which can be made merchantable. There is a region along the northern shore of Lake Superior in my own State that contains iron ore of a peculiar kind. It is mixed with titanium and is called titaniferous ore. The number of tons of that ore that lie there exposed to the naked eye runs up into the thousands of millions. I repeat it—thousands of millions—and nobody wants it, because it is not merchantable, because it can not to-day be reduced in furnaces. It has been the dream of metallurgists and the dream of mining experts that some man would find a method of reducing this class of ore. The Bureau of Mines has taken into consideration this problem, having secured the activities of one of the best mining engineers of the country, and I think I am not exceeding the limits of propriety when I say that he has almost solved the problem. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] five minutes.

Mr. CANNON. I again ask the gentleman to reserve his time and yield the floor just for the present and let the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] be recognized further, so that he can utilize part of the half hour.

Mr. FOSTER. I will say that I think he has probably used all the time he desires.

Mr. MILLER. I could use five more minutes if the gentleman could give them.

Mr. FOSTER. I regret I can not do so. For the present I yield five minutes to my colleague from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] is recognized.

[Mr. FOWLER addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. CANNON. Is the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] going to yield any more time to his colleague?

Mr. FOSTER. No; I have not any more time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, this is a very interesting question, and an old one. It ought to receive full consideration.

I have counted, and I find that out of the nearly 400 Members of the House there are just 26 here. They ought to hear this discussion, and I therefore make the point that no quorum is present. I want to compel gentlemen to come and listen during the consideration of an important bill like this.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair counts 32 gentlemen present, not a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MARTIN of Colorado, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had found itself without a quorum, whereupon he had directed the roll to be called, whereupon 228 Members, a quorum, had answered to their names, and he reported the names of the absentees to the House.

The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union resumed its session.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be recognized in my own right.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming is recognized in his own right.

Mr. MONDELL. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. POWERS].

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, we are all apparently agreed that the establishment of the Bureau of Mines was a splendid piece of constructive legislation. Apparently the Members here all agree that during its existence it has done splendid work. I have heard on the floor of this House no criticism offered concerning the management of the bureau or the efficiency and proficiency of the men in charge of same. All agree that Prof. Holmes, the director of the bureau, and those associated with him are peculiarly fitted for the great work which has been intrusted to their care. Apparently it is the sole purpose of the Members of this House to amend the law as it now exists in such a way as will give this bureau more power and more authority and widen and broaden the sphere of its usefulness. The bill now under discussion by this House was prepared and brought forward by the Committee on Mines and Mining, of which Congressman FOSTER is the chairman. I have not a doubt but that this committee has given this subject careful consideration. I have no doubt but that it is the intention and purpose of the Committee on Mines and Mining to so amend the law as will give the Bureau of Mines more, and not less, power and authority. But, with all due respect to the able gentlemen who compose this committee, I submit that the framers of the Foster bill, which we are now considering, will be disappointed in the power and authority given the Bureau of Mines if the Foster bill should become a low without amendment.

Section 2 of the law as it now is and section 2 of the Foster bill are the ones which give life, authority, and vitality to the Bureau of Mines. These are the sections which regulate its scope of operation. These are the ones which give it the power to investigate. These are the ones which enable it to accomplish the work for which the Bureau of Mines was created.

Section 2 of the present law reads as follows:

SEC. 2. That it shall be the province and duty of said bureau and its director, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to make diligent investigation of the methods of mining, especially in relation to the safety of miners, and the appliances best adapted to prevent accidents, the possible improvement of conditions under which mining operations are carried on, the treatment of ores and other mineral substances, the use of explosives and electricity, the prevention of accidents, and other inquiries and technologic investigations pertinent to said industries, and from time to time make such public reports of the work, investigations, and information obtained as the Secretary of said department may direct, with the recommendations of such bureau.

That is the law as it now exists. Section 2 of the Foster bill provides:

SEC. 2. That it shall be the province and duty of the Bureau of Mines, subject to the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to conduct inquiries and scientific and technologic investigations concerning mining, and the preparation, treatment, and utilization of mineral substances with a view to improving health conditions and increasing safety, efficiency, economic development, and the prevention of waste in the mining, quarrying, metallurgical, and other mineral industries; to investigate explosives and fuels and unfinished mineral products belonging to or for the use of the United States, with a view to their most efficient use; and to disseminate information concerning these subjects in such manner as will best carry out the purposes of this act.

With these provisions before us we are in a situation to judge whether or not the Foster bill unamended will come up to the expectation and meet the requirements for which the Bureau of Mines was originally established.

It will be remembered that some years ago there followed in this country one terrific and appalling mine accident after another in which hundreds and thousands of the lives of our brothers working beneath the soil were snuffed out. They were so frequent and so terrible that the public mind and conscience were so aroused as to their cause and cure that more stringent laws were demanded looking to the proper care, safety, and protection of the miners. Upon investigation it was discovered that in many, if not all, of the States in the Union the laws on the statute books and the power of the State authorities were inadequate to afford the proper amount of protection. It was believed that the National Government alone could deal adequately with this great subject—one involving the safety and protection of the great army of miners scattered throughout the length and the breadth of this country. It was under these conditions and by reason of this necessity that the Bureau of Mines of the United States Government was established. Section 2 of the law creating the Bureau of Mines says that it shall be the duty of the Bureau of Mines and its director—to make diligent investigation of the methods of mining, especially in relation to the safety of mines and the appliances best adapted to prevent accidents, the proper improvement of conditions under which the operations are carried on, * * * the prevention of accidents, etc.

These constitute the principal work for which the Bureau of Mines was originally established and intended. These provisions have been left out of the Foster bill. It has been contended by its advocates that its language is sufficiently broad and comprehensive to cover and provide authority for all the things embodied in the old law; but, as a friend to the miners, as one interested in their welfare, I object to leaving anything to chance.

I do not want their rights and interests under the law to be left to interpretation, implication, or construction. Their rights should be specifically provided for. The old law in this respect ought to be reenacted in the Foster bill, together with some amendments to the old law. At the proper time I shall offer amendments to this bill reembodying this part of the old law in the Foster bill, together with an amendment or two to the old law as it now exists. The Bureau of Mines should be given power and authority to investigate the cause and prevention of mine fires. This is left out of the present law. It should be given power and authority to inaugurate rescue and first-aid work. This is left out of the law as it now exists. All this is left out of the Foster bill. It is true that section 3 of the Foster bill provides that it shall be the duty of the Bureau of Mines to—prepare, publish, and distribute, subject to the direction of the Secretary of the Interior * * * reports of inquiries and and investigations * * * concerning the nature, cause, and prevention of accidents—

also concerning the safety, methods, and appliances; also concerning rescue and first-aid work; also concerning causes and prevention of mine fires. But I submit that under section 2 of the Foster bill the Bureau of Mines will have neither the power nor the authority to make any investigations concerning these subjects; and having no power and authority to make investigations concerning them, it will have no power or authority to make reports about them. These are the things concerning which the miners of this great country are vitally concerned. The power of the Bureau of Mines to make investigations and inquiries concerning these vital subjects is the one in which the miners of this country are most concerned. It was to make inquiries and investigations concerning these subjects and afford relief to the miners that the Bureau of Mines was originally established.

I trust that before this bill is passed these vital provisions will be embodied in it, to the end that those things which are most dear to the hearts of the miners and most essential to their safety and lives will not be left to interpretation or construction. These provisions ought to be made so clear and so explicit that there could be no chance for misinterpretation or misconstruction, no opportunity to deprive the miners of the things for which the Bureau of Mines was established.

This Bureau of Mines has done a splendid service, and I want to see this Foster bill so amended as to put in it the things to which I have called your attention. In that event there will be no question as to the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Mines over these vital subjects.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. POWERS. I will.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Does not the gentleman think that the language of the Foster bill, authorizing the Bureau of Mines and its employees to look after the health and safety of persons employed in mining and quarrying, is broad enough to cover what the gentleman refers to?

Mr. POWERS. I do not. On the contrary, under section 3 of your bill you provide that it shall be the duty of the Bureau of Mines to make reports concerning the nature, the causes, and prevention of mine accidents, and so forth. But I submit that under section 2 of your bill you strip the Bureau of Mines of the power to make these investigations, and you require a report on matters concerning which it has no power to investigate.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Has the gentleman carefully studied the report of the department on it?

Mr. POWERS. I have studied the bill and the reports on it with what intellectual powers I have.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I will say as one of the members of the committee that this bill was considered with Dr. Holmes, of the Bureau of Mines, with the Department of the Interior, and we had a number of hearings on it. We all of us intended to do the very thing the gentleman feels ought to be included, and after various drafts of the bill not only Dr. Holmes and the other officials, but the mining people themselves in the coal and the metaliferous mines, decided that the language was broad enough. So we felt that if we made it broader than we have we might be open to just criticism and thereby probably defeat the bill. We could not open up the field so broad as to take the whole Treasury of the United States, and we had to put some restrictions on it. We feel that this language is sufficient to cover all that the gentleman desires to include.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I have not a doubt but that the committee framing this bill had the very best intentions regarding the good of the Bureau of Mines and the splendid work it is accomplishing. I have no doubt but that Dr. Holmes and others are intensely and vitally concerned with regard to this matter; but I submit that under the language of the bill as now framed it will not cover the ground that the framers of this bill think it will cover. I do not believe in leaving anything to chance. This bureau has done a great work. There are a number of mine-rescue stations scattered throughout the United States. These rescue stations are headquarters for a group of Government employees engaged in rescue and instruction work. They have with them at these stations at least one car equipped with all the modern devices and appliances for the purpose of doing mine-rescue work. They go from place to place throughout the country instructing the mine operators and miners how to prevent mine accidents and the best methods of rescuing entombed miners. I applied to this Bureau of Mines for a mining-rescue car with a corps of trained and skilled employees to go to the district I have the honor to represent and give what instructions in their power to give to those engaged in the coal-mining industry. I am glad to say that the Director of the Bureau of Mines complied with my request and sent to the eleventh district of Kentucky a mining-rescue car well equipped and in charge of trained operators. This was the first time that such a mining-rescue car ever entered the eleventh congressional district. They went from mine to mine, and were received with glad hands by both the operators and the miners. Much interest was taken in this work, much instruction given, much good accomplished. I have the promise of the director of the bureau that he will each year send to the eleventh district this mining-rescue car for such time as he will be able to spare to it. Those in charge of the rescue car are required each day to telegraph their exact whereabouts to the Bureau of Mines, so that in case of a mine disaster anywhere the Bureau of Mines will know just where all of its mining-rescue cars are and just how long it will take them to be rushed to the scene of the disaster. From time to time I get a letter from some mine operator or from some miner making a request that the Government send to his locality this mining-rescue car for the purpose of giving instructions in the best methods of preventing mine accidents and what to do in case of them. I file those letters carefully away, and when the mining car reaches the district I see to it that those making the request are supplied with the best instructions in the power of the Government to give.

This Bureau of Mines is accomplishing great good, as I have before stated. Its power of usefulness should not be hampered by the lack of specific legislation defining what it can and what it can not do; and I hope that the amendment which I shall later offer will be incorporated into and made a part of this bill and thereby a part of the law.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, at this time I desire to read some extracts from a speech delivered by Abraham Lincoln before the Young Men's Lyceum of Springfield, Ill., on January 27, 1837.

It seems to have been a prophetic utterance and it deserves to be reproduced at this time for the guidance of the American people. So much has been recently quoted from Abraham Lincoln to justify all sorts of vagaries in governmental affairs that this may appeal to the sober senses of the people and make them, before it is too late, awaken to some of the dangers which confront our Government.

Mr. Lincoln said:

"All the armies of Europe, Asia, and Africa combined * * * could not by force take a drink from the Ohio or make a track on the Blue Ridge in a trial of a thousand years.

"At what point, then, is the approach of danger to be expected? I answer, If it ever reaches us it must spring up amongst us; it can not come from abroad. If destruction be our lot, we must ourselves be its author and finisher. As a nation of freemen we must live through all time or die by suicide.

"I hope I am overwary; but if I am not, there is even now something of ill omen amongst us. I mean the increasing disregard for law which pervades the country—the growing disposition to substitute the wild and furious passions in lieu of the sober judgment of courts and the worse than savage mobs for the executive ministers of justice. * * *

"I know the American people are much attached to their Government; I know they would suffer much for its sake; I know they would endure evils long and patiently before they would ever think of exchanging it for another; yet, notwithstanding all this, if the laws be continually despised and disregarded, if their rights to be secure in their persons and property are held by no better tenure than the caprice of a mob, the alienation of their affections from the Government is the natural consequence; and to that, sooner or later, it must come. * * *

"When I so pressingly urge a strict observance of all the laws let me not be understood as saying there are no bad laws or that grievances may not arise for the redress of which no legal provisions have been made. I mean to say no such thing. But I do mean to say that although bad laws, if they exist, should be repealed as soon as possible, still, while they continue in force, for the sake of example, they should be religiously observed. * * * There is no grievance that is a fit object of redress by mob law. * * *

"But it may be asked, 'Why suppose danger to our political institutions?' * * * We hope there is no sufficient reason. We hope that all danger may be overcome; but to conclude that no danger may ever arise would itself be extremely dangerous. There are now, and will hereafter be, many causes, dangerous in their tendency, which have not existed heretofore, and which are not too insignificant to merit attention. That our Government should be maintained in its original form, from its establishment until now, is not much to be wondered at. It had many props to support it through that period, which are now decayed and crumbled away. * * * Then all that sought celebrity and fame and distinction expected to find them in the success of that experiment. Their all was staked upon it; their destiny was inseparably linked with it. * * * If they succeeded, they were immortalized; their names were to be transferred to counties and cities and rivers and mountains, and to be revered and sung, toasted through all time. If they failed, they were to be called knaves, and fools, and fanatics of a fleeting hour; then to sink and be forgotten. They succeeded. The experiment is successful, and thousands have won their deathless names in making it so. But the game is caught. * * * This field of glory is harvested, and the crop is already appropriated. But new reapers will arise, and they, too, will seek a field. It is to deny what the history of the world tells us is true to suppose that men of ambition and talents will not continue to spring up amongst us. And when they do, they will naturally seek the gratification of their ruling passion as others have done before them. The question then is, Can that gratification be found in supporting and maintaining an edifice that has been erected by others? Most certainly it can not. Many great and good men, sufficiently qualified for any task they should undertake, may ever be found whose ambition would aspire to nothing beyond a seat in Congress, a gubernatorial or a presidential chair; but such belong not to the family of the lion or the tribe of the eagle. What, think you these places would satisfy an Alexander, a Cæsar, or a Napoleon? Never. Towering genius despises a beaten path. It seeks regions hitherto unexplored. It sees no distinction in adding story to story upon the monuments of fame erected to the memory of others. It denies that it is glory enough to serve under any chief. It scorns to tread in the footsteps of any predecessor, however illustrious. It thirsts and burns for distinction; and if possible it will have it, whether at the expense of emancipating slaves or enslaving freemen. Is it unreasonable, then, to expect that some man possessed of the loftiest genius, coupled with ambition sufficient to push it to its utmost stretch, will at some time spring up among us? And when such a one does, it will require the people to be united with each other, attached to the government and laws, and generally intelligent, to frustrate his designs. Distinction will be his paramount object, and although he would as willingly, perhaps more so, acquire it by doing good as harm, yet that opportunity being passed and nothing left to be done in the way of building up, he would set boldly to the task of pulling down."

How prophetic those words were can easily be illustrated by something which happened a few years ago. Plans were initiated for the remodeling of the White House, known officially as the Executive Mansion. Conferences were had between the then Executive, former President Roosevelt, and the Congress as to the extent to which the remodeling should go. As a result of certain conferences a memorandum was prepared by the architect selected for the purpose of making the changes in the White House, and the memorandum covered not only the plans for the reconstruction, but a provision for the so-called executive offices, which at that time were built. Under the head of "Temporary Executive Offices," the memorandum transmitted from the White House to the Capitol for the information of Members of Congress has a statement, and the entire page is herewith reproduced in facsimile:

PAGE ——

Memorandum in regard to the White House.

The White House was planned and constructed as a residence. The office features of the house are maintained at the expense of space which should be at the disposal of the President's family; and at the same time the public business is done in the present cramped quarters with serious inconvenience, and under unhealthful conditions for the secretaries and clerks.

TEMPORARY EXECUTIVE OFFICES.

The problem of the location of a permanent building for the offices of the President involves many considerations as to the amount of accommodation needed and the scope and variety of the functions to be carried on in such a building. Provision for temporary quarters for the Executive offices is comparatively a simple matter. A building of brick, one story high, and containing from 50 to 75 per cent more room than the offices now occupy, can be constructed in the grounds of the White House, opposite the entrance to the Navy Department. The building would take the place now occupied by a brick wall, which screens a number of hot-houses and forcing beds for plants——functions which may well be provided for elsewhere, in connection with the propagating gardens.

The temporary building would include:

1. A Cabinet room.
2. President's office and retiring room.

The problem of the erection of a permanent building for the offices of the President involves many considerations as to the amount of accommodation needed, the scope and variety of the functions to be carried on in such a building. Provision for temporary quarters for executive offices is comparatively a simple matter.

The word "temporary" was underscored by President Roosevelt, and on the margin of the memorandum, in his own handwriting, is this statement: "To be permanent during my lifetime. T. R." It will be noticed that the word "my" is underscored.

If anybody misunderstands the purposes of this gentleman, so accurately pictured by Abraham Lincoln in 1837, he need but refer to this document, which perhaps will become historic, to see what he had in mind just 10 years ago. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. LITTLEPAGE having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Stuart, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 6964. An act authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to make certain provisions for the care of the participants in the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg, at Gettysburg, Pa., on the 1st, 2d, 3d, and 4th days of July, 1913, and making appropriation of a sum sufficient to carry out the provisions of this bill; and

S. 6925. An act to authorize the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Co. to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River near the city of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution (S. Res. 325):

Resolved, That the Secretary notify the House of Representatives that the Senate has elected AUGUSTUS O. BACON, a Senator from the State of Georgia, President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold and exercise the office in the absence of the Vice President on Thursday, May 30, Friday, May 31, Saturday, June 1, and Monday, June 3, 1912.

BUREAU OF MINES.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. POWERS] expressed some doubt as to whether the enactment of this legislation would bring about conditions satisfactory to those responsible for it. He suggested that the framers of the measure would be disappointed in its administration, in that the authority conferred is not as wide as it is supposed to be. I am glad that, to a certain extent, that in a certain sense, the fears of the gentleman from Kentucky are justified. I am heartily in favor of this legislation. I believe it is wise, but I should hesitate to vote for it if it proposed some things that some gentlemen supporting it suggest that it does propose. I should be inclined not to support the bill if I thought its provisions were as broad as some gentlemen have suggested they are.

We all understand that the Federal Government has in the ordinary sense no police authority or powers in the States. We can not confer upon the Federal Government any such power or authority. We ought not do it if we could, because to do it would be to relieve the people locally of those duties and responsibilities in the performance of which alone can a free government be founded and maintained. But fortunately we can not do it. The fundamental law prohibits us from doing it. The people have conferred no such powers on the Federal Government. Nor is there anything in this bill that warrants any suggestion that it proposes to attempt to extend the police power, authority and control of the Federal Government.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. POWERS] is correct in saying that all of the power conferred on this bureau is conferred in section 2; that section 3 adds nothing to the jurisdiction of the bureau, but simply is declaratory on the matter of reports. What the act proposes is that the bureau shall make inquiries and investigations of mining and of the preparation, treatment, and utilization of mineral substances, and what for? For the purpose of improving health conditions and increasing the safety, efficiency, economic development of mines, and the prevention of waste in mining, quarrying, metallurgical, and other mineral industries.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I can not yield at this time. That is an enlargement of the present authority of the bureau. It does enlarge the scope of its operations, but does not enlarge the scope of those operations by pretending or attempting to do the impossible thing of extending within the States police powers to be exercised by the Federal Government. All that the Federal Government should do in these matters is to aid and stimulate the people locally to live up to their responsibilities to do their duty and to perform the proper and necessary functions of a local government.

That is all this proposes to do. It is legislation providing for a bureau to stimulate and inform and disseminate information. So that it does not, fortunately, go as far as some gentlemen seem to think it does. On the contrary, in my opinion, it goes much further in other directions than the gentleman from Kentucky imagines it does, and I do not think it is open to the criticism or objection that he makes, and if the gentleman will allow me I will now refer to that matter.

The gentleman from Kentucky objects to section 2 on the ground that it does not enlarge the present scope and authority of the bureau. I think it does. He thinks it leaves out some things that are now contained in the fundamental law of the bureau.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. That it does not confer all the jurisdiction that the law now does, particularly with regard to reducing accidents in mining operations, as I understand it. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. POWERS. I suggest to the genleman that the Foster bill does enlarge the powers of this bureau along certain lines, but it restricts the power of the bureau along the lines for which the bureau was originally created.

Mr. MONDELL. My opinion is that the gentleman is entirely mistaken. Certainly the inquiries, the investigations concerning mining with a view of improving health and increasing safety herein provided for cover all that is covered by the language of the present law. In other words, not only is the scope of the bureau enlarged by this legislation, but it retains all the authority that it now has, and particularly in regard to the matters referred to by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The enlargement of the scope and authority and jurisdiction of the bureau is a very important one. The enlargement is particularly in the field of investigation and inquiry relative to metalliferous mining, quarrying, and operations of that character—operations over which the bureau, except by the very broadest interpretation of present law, has no jurisdiction whatever. It is exceedingly important that a mining bureau shall have authority to make investigations and inquiries with regard to all classes of mining and allied industries. I congratulate the committee that in doing this they have accomplished all that ought to be done without so supplanting or reducing the necessity of local control or activity as to leave the entire responsibility in the hands of the Federal Government. That could not be legally done. It ought not to be done, for within the States is the sovereign control over all these matters. The operations of the Bureau of Mines since it was established have fully justified the expectations and the hopes and confidence of those who were instrumental in the enactment of that legislation. They have been wonderfully effective in the best possible way in awakening the people of the States and of the communities to their duties and responsibilities and in quickening them in the discharge of their duties and responsibilities in bringing the mining companies and those operating mines to adopt improved methods of safety in mining operations and in educating the miners in methods and practices which will reduce the danger of accidents. We look forward to still wider activities on the part of the bureau in the interest of our miners and our mining industries.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NYE].

Mr. NYE. Mr. Chairman, I take it that this is an excellent bill, and I think we are unanimous in our support of it, perhaps, with some amendments; but it only occurred to me to say in connection with the bill that there is a subject to come before this House—I hope very soon—which is so closely allied to this bill that I thought it proper to mention it.

That is the subject embraced in the bill known as the workmen's compensation act. I am very much in hope that that will come out of the Committee on the Judiciary within a few days, although I understand there will be some opposition. I attempted to say the other day when I had the floor that I believed there is an indication of better feeling between the employers and employees of this country than there has been heretofore, and from what I can learn of the hearings before the distinguished commission that have had this bill under consideration I understand that those hearings were remarkable in that there was an evident purpose down deep in the hearts among the employers and employees to come to a better understanding than they have ever done before. I believe this legislation which I have mentioned and which I trust the House will pass this session is a door and avenue through which greater things will be done in support of friendly legislation for the benefit of both capital and labor, employer and employee. People are thinking as never before, and this bill now before the House indicates that we are recognizing that all industrial legislation should have primarily at its base the interest and welfare of the workingman. I simply want to say I hope that the report which I have heard that the bill will be opposed by prominent gentlemen on the other side of the House is not correct; that the bill will be reported by the committee, and, if necessary, I should be glad to support a special rule by which it could come before the House and be passed. The commission which has had it under consideration are among the ablest men in the Nation, in both the Senate and the House, and representatives both of labor and capital have given their thought and best energies to a solution, at least for the present, of a question which will be for the common good of our people, industrially and socially. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Curtiss, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bills of the following titles:

H. R. 16690. An act for the relief of scientific institutions or colleges of learning having violated sections 3297 and 3297a of the Revised Statutes and the regulations thereunder;

H. R. 23837. An act to authorize the Clinton & Oklahoma Western Railway Co. to construct and operate a railway through certain public lands, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 21290. An act to amend an act to authorize a bridge at or near Council Bluffs, Iowa, approved February 1, 1908, as amended.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill and joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 6459. An act for the erection of a public building at Waynesville, N. C.; and

S. J. Res. 111. Joint resolution to convey the thanks of Congress to Capt. Arthur Henry Rostron, and through him to the officers and crew of the steamship Carpathia, of the Cunard Line, for the prompt and heroic service rendered by them in rescuing 704 lives from the wreck of the steamship Titanic in the North Atlantic Ocean.

BUREAU OF MINES.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. FOSTER. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR].

[Mr. FARR addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. FOSTER. I do not care to consume any more of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for general debate having expired, the Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That it shall be the province and duty of the Bureau of Mines, subject to the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to conduct inquiries and scientific and technologic investigations concerning mining, and the preparation, treatment, and utilization of mineral substances with a view to increasing health, safety, efficiency, economic development, and the prevention of waste in the mining, quarrying, metallurgical, and other mineral industries, and concerning explosives and fuels and unfinished mineral products belonging to, or for the use of, the United States, with a view to their most efficient use; and to disseminate information concerning these subjects in such manner as will best carry out the purposes of this act.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 16, strike out the word "increasing" and insert in lieu thereof the word "improving."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 16, after the word "health," insert the words "conditions and increasing."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, that comma should go out after the word "health."

Mr. FOSTER. I think we should take up the committee amendments first.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment which has been read.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, lines 19 and 20, strike out the comma after the word "industries," in line 19, and the word "concerning," insert a semicolon, and add the words "to investigate."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAKER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the comma after the word "health," on line 16 of page 2.

Mr. FOSTER. Let us have that reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman moves to strike out the comma after the word "health," on line 16 of page 2.

Mr. RAKER. It does not mean "health." It means "health conditions." That is what the language is intended to mean.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; "not health," but "health conditions." The comma was printed there inadvertently.

Mr. RAKER. The comma was there when the amendment was made, and of course it remained there when the bill was reprinted. If you strike out the comma, you carry out the intent and meaning of the committee by taking up the subject of the health conditions.

Mr. CANNON. I think it is broader than that. I am not much on punctuation. I frequently have great trouble with badly written manuscript, in telling a comma from a fly speck, and after all, the punctuation does not control. But is the gentleman correct? Let us see. The language reads, "with a view to improving health, conditions."

Mr. RAKER. Conditions of what?

Mr. CANNON. Conditions of increasing safety.

Mr. RAKER. That is all right; but that condition would mean nothing if it is left in there, if it stands alone.

Mr. LOBECK. It might be "improving conditions."

Mr. MONDELL. It seems to me, if the gentleman will yield to me——

Mr. CANNON. Certainly——

Mr. MONDELL (continuing). That the comma might either remain or be stricken out, depending on the intent of the House. If the comma remains, then the proposition is that these things are to be done for the purpose of improving health, for the purpose of improving conditions, and for the purpose of increasing safety. But if stricken out, then these things are to be done for the purpose of improving health conditions.

Mr. RAKER. From a reading of the report of the committee and the hearings of the committee, the gentleman will notice that this was so intended, and the language was put in for the purpose of improving health conditions.

Mr. MILLER. There can not be any difference between "improving health" and "improving health conditions," can there?

Mr. RAKER. Possibly not.

Mr. MILLER. Undoubtedly it was meant that the comma should go out.

Mr. RAKER. Yet, when the distinguished gentleman from Wyoming and the distinguished ex-Speaker take up a matter like that here, I think it is worthy of the attention of the House.

Mr. CANNON. Let me read it with the comma in: "With a view to improving health, conditions, and increasing safety, efficiency, economic development, and the prevention of waste in the mining, quarrying," and so forth. Now, reading it with the accent which I have given it, it has a meaning, and the comma ought to be there.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. RAKER. While the House can readily and fully appreciate the emphasis of the gentleman from Illinois, the public and those construing this act will never have the benefit of that emphasis.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, but anybody that reads it correctly, with the comma in, will read it just as I have read it.

Now, then, as the gentleman claims it should read, without the comma, "improving health conditions." "Health" is not improved by putting on "conditions." "Health conditions"—the word "health" qualifying "conditions"; "improving health conditions and increasing safety," and so on. I think the gentleman perhaps punctuates better than I do, but I doubt the wisdom of striking out the comma.

Mr. FOSTER. I will say to my colleague that before this bill was printed as it is here, in reference to striking out the word "increasing" and putting in the word "improving," it was thought it would be better to use the word "improving" instead of "increasing."

Mr. CANNON. I think that is wise. That we have agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, the word "increasing" is changed to "improving health." Leaving the comma there was all right, but after we struck out the word "increasing" and inserted the word "improving" and inserted also the word "conditions," of course the comma was overlooked. It seems to me what we are trying to get at here is improving the health conditions of the miner.

Mr. CANNON. Yes. That is the only kind of conditions you could improve—health conditions. But if you should say, "with a view to improving health, conditions, and increasing safety," then "conditions" would add something. But you limit it by striking out the comma to improving health. That is just one subject.

Mr. MILLER. What conditions?

Mr. CANNON. Any possible conditions.

Mr. MILLER. Convenience and enjoyment of work, and things like that?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Does not the word "conditions" cover all that is contemplated by the committee?

Mr. FOSTER. No. The intention is that only the conditions under which the miners work, as affecting health, shall be investigated by this bureau.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Either would suit me; but if you strike out the word "conditions," you accomplish all that is desired. What is the difference between "improving health" and "improving health conditions," as contemplated by the committee?

Mr. FOSTER. The conditions under which the miners work as they affect health. For instance, in some mines of the country the miners contract hookworm disease. Now, if you can improve the conditions under which a miner works, that is what is intended in this provision.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Does it mean sanitary conditions?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; sanitary conditions surrounding the mine, but not outside of it.

Mr. KOPP. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the work of improving health would properly be something for a physician. It would be very improper for a bill to attempt to do that. But improving health conditions is improving the conditions under which health can be had.

Mr. FOSTER. I think there is something in what the gentleman says—that a physician improves the health; but the conditions under which workmen operate is something that this bureau can consider.

Mr. CANNON. Apollos may water, but the Lord giveth the increase. The physician may prescribe, but nature does the work.

Mr. FOSTER. With all his other accomplishments, I see that my colleague knows something about the healing art.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], being a friend of the bill, and the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] being also a sponsor for it and having its well-being in keeping, I suggest to them that they limit its operation by striking out the comma; but I give way to their superior investigation of the subject.

Mr. FOSTER. I will say frankly to my colleague that I think it ought to be restricted to just those conditions, and I believe it is proper that it should be done.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I am sure the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] is absolutely correct in his reading of this paragraph, because if you leave the comma there, as suggested by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KOPP], you will perhaps extend this power to the right to employ physicians to go and minister to the sick. If the representative of the bureau finds a man sick in a mine, he will have a right to go and employ a physician. He would have the right to minister to the patient, if the patient was willing to take the medicine. So the result would be that it would broaden the power of the department to the extent that they would have regular hospitals established by the Federal Government for the purpose of caring for the sick in the mines.

Mr. MILLER. I call the gentleman's attention to the previous part of the sentence, of which those words are a constituent part, which would rather preclude the idea he presents. It would not permit them to employ a physician even in that case. It would permit them to employ a physician to conduct an investigation to ascertain whether or not the man was sick.

Mr. SISSON. It is very doubtful whether it would be limited by the language that precedes it or not.

Mr. MILLER. Oh, yes. It says—

Inquiries and scientific and technologic investigations concerning mining, and the preparation, treatment, and utilization of mineral substances with a view to improving health conditions.

Mr. SISSON. Improving the health of whom? Of the miners.

Mr. MILLER. That is evidently what was contemplated, of course.

Mr. SISSON. If you place that power in the hands of the bureau, why would they not have the right to employ a physician?

Mr. MILLER. They might order a physician to go and conduct an investigation to see whether a man was sick or not, but he could not prescribe for him.

Mr. SISSON. If the man was willing to take the medicine prescribed, unquestionably the physician could prescribe for him, and he would have the right to visit the patient; but I do not understand that to be the purpose of this bill. The purpose of this bill is to improve the conditions in the mines, so as to make a comfortable and healthful place for men to work.

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman is undoubtedly correct.

Mr. SISSON. Then, why leave the comma there?

Mr. MILLER. I think the comma ought to go out.

Mr. SISSON. I support the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I move that all gentlemen be allowed to extend their remarks regarding this comma.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, sometimes a punctuation mark is very important. And I think that we are under obligations to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] for having called our attention to this superfluous comma. It is not only superfluous, but if left in it would be unfortunate in its effect on this legislation. The striking out of the comma has the effect, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has stated, of limiting the authority conferred by the language in the bill. If the comma remains in the bill, the bureau might conduct inquiries and investigations with a view to improving health. In other words, it could conduct medical investigations with a view to improving the health of those who might be found to be suffering from one disorder or another.

Of course, nothing of that sort is contemplated, for this is a bureau of mines, not a bureau of health. But more than that, if the comma remained in the bill, it would authorize the bureau to investigate all sorts and kinds of conditions in and around and pertaining to mines, which would clearly be an attempt to invade the police powers of the State and to legislate in the direction of giving Federal control over all the operations of mining, never contemplated by the legislation.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman claim there is any provision in this bill which, if it was forced and there was not consent given, does not invade the police powers of the State?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not understand the gentleman's question.

Mr. CANNON. This bill is a mere matter of investigation to disseminate knowledge. What would happen if any State should say to the Federal Government, "You shall not go into the mines"?

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman listened to my remarks a short time ago, he will understand that I am supporting the bill, because I do not understand that it invades the jurisdiction of the States. Yet if this small and relatively insignificant but still important comma were to remain in, I think it might be interpreted as an attempt to invade the jurisdiction of the States in certain matters.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] to strike out the comma in line 16, on page 2.

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 20, after the word "and" and before the word "fuels," insert the word "the."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 20, after the semicolon, insert the following: "to inquire into the economic conditions affecting these industries."

Mr. FOSTER. That is intended so that the Bureau of Mines might inquire into the economic conditions as well.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What does the gentleman mean by inquiring "into the economic conditions"?

Mr. FOSTER. That means in reference to the best use of them, so that they may conduct a line of investigations in that respect.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In what respect? The Bureau of Mines is supposed to do a definite and understandable work in connection with investigations. Now the gentleman puts in language "to inquire into the economic conditions." Just what line of investigation does that contemplate?

Mr. FOSTER. It might be determined the better way of mining coal, a cheaper way, and to study a cheaper way of mining metals, so as to show these conditions.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The trouble will be that the gentleman will divert the Bureau of Mines from its original purpose of making investigations to add to the safety of miners into a bureau that will be utilized by private enterprises of the country in determining the best and cheapest method for them to pursue their work for the purpose of making a profit.

Mr. FOSTER. No; this is specially confined to fuels for the use of the United States.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. FOSTER. My amendment is to line 20, after the semicolon, and it says "belonging to and for the use of the United States."

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the gentleman's amendment precedes that. How would it read if the gentleman's amendment were adopted?

Mr. FOSTER. It is intended——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I know what is intended if the amendment be adopted, but I want to know whether the gentleman from Illinois has the particular thing in mind that he wants to do?

Mr. FOSTER. Let me say this that there is another matter in which there might be an economic use of a mineral product, like lignite, how to burn it, and get the best use of it. For instance, the briquetting of that product; that is very important to some States. For instance, it is found that aluminum can not be melted without great loss except it is put into certain forms. That might be a matter of investigation to this department.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Should it?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know whether it would or not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. You will put this bureau in a position where the original purpose is completely lost sight of, and it would be made an adjunct to the private enterprises of the country to do the work which they are now doing, and have it done hereafter at the expense of the Government.

Mr. MILLER. Does the gentleman from New York advocate that private interests should make tests of soil and plant industry?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not going to discuss what the Department of Agriculture is doing.

Mr. MILLER. If it is important for the Department of Agriculture to conduct these investigations in order to disseminate the information throughout the United States for the benefit of the people, is it not proper for the Bureau of Mines to carry on these investigations? To illustrate. I am more familiar with the mining of iron ore than anything else.

I happen to know that the Bureau of Mines has been conducting investigations respecting the way that iron ore is mined in different parts of the United States, not exhaustively but tentatively; and to their great surprise they found that it was carried on at certain places at enormous expense and cost, ridiculously large, so large that the product was almost valueless. I will not mention the exact spot, but they found in North Carolina a place where by the most crude and antediluvian methods—if I may use such a term—they were laboriously getting from the earth iron ore and finally selling it at a cost that barely made it possible to mine some of the very best of that ore. The quantity of ore that was merchantable at that place was not one-twentieth of the great body of the ore there, and which was valueless because the men in that locality did not know of a way that it could be mined under modern conditions. By making investigations of the most modern methods of mining of various kinds of ore, embodying those investigations in a report and promulgating it to the world, it will bring to the use of mankind and make property for mankind immense wealth now sealed up. I am in favor of it, and I know that no other bureau or individual would do it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think it would be very desirable if I had property that might be utilized and I had neither the enterprise nor the industry, or was unwilling to expend my own capital for ascertaining the means to utilize my property, if the Federal Government in a purely paternal spirit came upon it and conducted all the investigations at the expense of the country and gave me the information that as an enterprising person I should do for myself. You might just as well confer on some bureau the power to investigate methods of the great department stores, the way their business is conducted and show that it is conducted in an inadequate and antiquated way, and that if it were conducted by more modern methods those engaged in such enterprises could greatly profit thereby.

I am not in sympathy with that sort of government at all. I believe the Bureau of Mines and Mining has a useful function to perform, but if it is to be diverted from such functions, to be utilized for the private purpose of those who own mining properties, it is a very dangerous thing.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the gentleman from New York is entirely mistaken about that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, I am not; because I intend to offer an amendment in a few moments in which I shall point out that that is the purpose proposed under this particular paragraph of the bill.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, I think the gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not; because I have been in communication with gentlemen who own such properties and who would much prefer to have these investigations made at the expense of the Government rather than by themselves. I can mention one company. It is notoriously a fact that it has discontinued certain investigations which it very gladly made, because it is now having them made for its benefit at the expense of the United States Government.

Mr. FOSTER. I will say to the gentleman from New York that these matters taken up under this section of the bill will be only general——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no; the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. FOSTER. Wait until I get through. I like to hear the gentleman from New York talk, but I wish he would wait for a moment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not blame the gentleman for preferring to listen to himself. [Laughter.]

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, this is not intended, and would not be, I take it, to go into the matter of ores that come from mines that are privately owned.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. I understand the amendment proposed is to inquire into the economic conditions affecting these industries. What does this add to the bill? You have already in here a provision for inquiry into scientific and technologic investigations concerning mining and the preparation, treatment, and utilization of mineral substances, and so forth, with a view to economic development. What does this add to it?

Mr. FOSTER. I think it broadens it somewhat.

Mr. RAKER. In what particular?

Mr. FOSTER. They might be able to go into a general line of investigation—for instance, in a great field of ores—not in any particular mine; but, for instance, if it were found in certain Government land that there existed certain ores or minerals or oils or gases they might be able to determine in a general way how the economic use of them might be brought about—in improving that condition.

Mr. RAKER. It does not go any further than that?

Mr. FOSTER. No; I think not.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that the Geological Survey as now constituted has entire control of that subject matter, and have they not made maps and issued bulletins on these subjects, and are not those bulletins and maps in the folding room to the credit of every man who wants them? This information is available for the very purpose the gentleman designates here as desirable to put in this bill, and if put in the bill it would be a complete duplication of the work already done.

Mr. FOSTER. I think not. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that, because if the Geological Survey is doing that they are going beyond their province and are duplicating the work that ought to be done by the Bureau of Mines. The Geological Survey has only to do with the topography and geology of the country and has nothing to do with mining or the economic use of those substances.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Several books have been written and published by that department with reference to where the various minerals of the country can be found and the kind of minerals to be found in every part of this country, and they have had expert men all over the country engaged in securing the information found in the geological publications. I know that is true in New Mexico and Arizona, because I have met these experts in the field and have talked with them.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, the gentleman is right about that, if that is what he means.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And they publish bulletins and make maps and reports, I understand, on these various districts.

Mr. FOSTER. I will say to the gentleman that he is entirely right. I misunderstood him; but it is the duty of the Geological Survey to have charge of the topography and the geology of the particular land under investigation. Their work ends there. If they have determined out in Texas or Wyoming or some other State that there are certain minerals located in that particular region, their work ends there, and they have nothing more to do with the mining of it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is that not just as far as the United States ought to go?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I should like to inquire under what rule we are proceeding.

The CHAIRMAN. We are supposed to be proceeding under the five-minute rule, but debate is now proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] is entirely mistaken as to what this clause means if it goes in his bill. If the clause would limit this bureau to the line of work which is in his mind, and in the committee's mind, there would perhaps be no objection to it, but this certainly does not confine it to that line of work at all. On the contrary, if I owned a mine or mining land and was unwilling to make experiments for the purpose of ascertaining whether it was valuable or not, the Bureau of Mines and Mining could be requested by me to go and inquire into the economic conditions affecting these industries, and I would be engaged in that industry, and the language is so drawn and so broad that the man who drew that clause knew exactly what he was about.

I do not know whether he is connected with the Bureau of Mines and Mining, or whether he is a miner, but if he had a mining lawyer to draft the clause he could not have put more into this bill in 10 or 12 words than he has put in here. It means that after the Government shall have investigated and examined the conditions for that particular industry, if it has come and reported that he is mining this particular mine in a perfectly satisfactory way, and that he has mined it economically, it becomes a certificate for him to sell stock upon. It becomes a certificate from the Federal Government that his mine is all right. If he is mining on land about which he is doubtful, he then could go to the Bureau of Mines and Mining and have the investigation made at the expense of the Government and thereby exploit his mine.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the gentleman yield? I think the gentleman means exactly what he says, but I want to call his attention to this: That the Bureau of Mines does not go out and give a cerificate of any mining property. Then, further than that, they would only examine as to the general conditions of mines; not as to this particular mine, but as to the condition of mines—affecting a whole range of mines. For instance, there might be 100 or more mines that would be affected in the particular way in which that particular mine would be affected.

Mr. SISSON. I have no doubt that what the gentleman proposes is perfectly sincere. I have no doubt on earth that the gentleman means absolutely what he says about it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I suggest to the gentleman that they can not do that particular thing under the present law, but they could under this provision.

Mr. SISSON. Practically, there is no limit under this language to the energies of this particular bureau. There is no limit to the amount of money that they might expend under this clause if it is put there without any limitation.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman explain to the committee how the Bureau of Mines can make a single investigation of one single mining property in the way in which it is said it can be done?

Mr. SISSON. Under this clause it can be done.

Mr. MILLER. How?

Mr. SISSON. Under this clause, containing all of the industries enumerated here, both concerning mining and the preparation, treatment, and utilization of mineral substances, and so forth. It says they are to investigate into the conditions affecting these industries. Which industries?

Mr. MILLER. But not to a mine, but the whole mining industry of the United States.

Mr. SISSON. But in investigating the whole mining industry of the United States they examine one mine at a time.

Mr. MILLER. That is true; but I do not see how they can be said to give a certificate in reference to any particular mine or——

Mr. SISSON. I think it shows so by its terms. I have no doubt in the world but that the Bureau of Mines is like every other bureau of this Government. They are anxious to extend their activities and extend the influence of the bureau over which they preside. I have no doubt in the world that the Chief of the Bureau of Mines and Mining is anxious to have this clause, because he knows that with this clause in the bill he will be permitted to go over the whole entire mining district, metalliferous, and everything in the United States and make a universal investigation.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Let me say that for 20 years the Western States have been trying to get recognition by this Government for the metalliferous mining industries. We worked for 10 years or more before we were able to pass the law which established the Bureau of Mines.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman is occupying my time.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I will try to have the time extended. Now, I want to suggest after we accomplished that, after we succeeded in getting the Bureau of Mines, the authorities that be, the Interior Department and the Appropriations Committee of the House, thought it was not broad enough to apply to metalliferous mining at all, and we were completely left out after working for 15 or 20 years. And I may say frankly that these amendments are at the instance of the metalliferous mining industries of the West. That is to assist them. We ask merely that the authority of the Bureau of Mines be so enlarged that they may take in investigations for the development of those other industries similar to the way they do the industries they do investigate.

Mr. SISSON. I am glad to get that information, because I was sure that that did not originate in the mind of this committee. I am glad to get that information because it carries out just exactly the idea I had in the very beginning, that the miner of this country and the people who own the mines in this country want these investigations made at the expense of the taxpayers and not at their own expense. They want their property developed at the expense of the Federal Government of this country.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Has the gentleman ever investigated the subject very carefully as to what attention the Government has ever given to the consideration of mining interests of the West from which it has received millions upon millions of dollars?

Mr. SISSON. I have not.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Now, do not you believe honestly and frankly, having the amount of land we have, that we ought to develop the best method we could for the purpose of advancing the mining interest the same as many other interests have been developed?

Mr. SISSON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am not in sympathy at all with the idea that the Federal Government should become a wet nurse to every industry, nor do I believe that the activities of the Federal Government should be extended so far as to aid and assist in the development of private enterprises that will inure greatly to the interest of the people who own the mines. I do not believe that the taxpayers of this country ought to be called upon to do that; if so, they ought to be called upon to make investigations for the purpose of helping the railroads, helping the banks, and as the gentleman from New York suggested, the department stores. It is a tendency dangerous in this country, and I am not at all in sympathy with it.

The Bureau of Mines and Mining, as originally created, was established for the purpose of aiding and benefiting the health conditions of the miner; and when it was called for and demanded it was urged by men like my friend WILSON of Pennsylvania, who was interested in labor and in the men who labored in the mines. It was not intended that it should be exploited for the purpose of developing that particular industry for the benefit of the mine owners, the property owners. It was never intended that that should be the scope and work of this Bureau of Mines and Mining when the matter was originally contemplated, and for a number of years they fought for it, because the laboring men wanted to have their conditions investigated in order that they might be helped.

But with these amendments you begin to suggest what conditions of labor shall be investigated and what economic conditions shall be investigated, and the energies of that bureau will be multiplied many times in looking into the conditions of profits and the economic conditions maintained in this country, instead of confining its energies within the lines that would benefit purely the labor of the country.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado and Mr. KOPP rose.

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I will yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KOPP. I will not interrupt the gentleman now.

Mr. SISSON. Then I will yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I would like to ask the gentleman if he thinks the health of the coal miners is more sacred than the health of the metalliferous miners, and whether ther are more deaths occurring in the coal mines than there are in the metalliferous mines?

Mr. SISSON. I have no objection to appropriating enough money to investigate the health conditions of all the mines in the United States, whether coal mines or metalliferous mines.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. That is what we are trying to accomplish.

Mr. SISSON. That is not the amendment under discussion here, and if it is intended for that purpose it is drawn by the man who is interested in the mine property and who is not interested in the workingman and the people.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman from Mississippi has no right to make a statement of that kind, that this bill is drawn in the interest of the mine owner.

Mr. SISSON. There are provisions in the bill here that give you all the power you want for an investigation of the health conditions, whereas this particular provision is to investigate the economic conditions, and those affect the profits; and that fact suggested to my mind the statement that this must have been drawn in the interest of the mine owner, and not in the interest of the miner.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. Does the gentleman think we ought to appropriate $200,000, or any other sum, to investigate the best method of dealing with the boll weevil?

Mr. SISSON. I did not understand the gentleman's question.

Mr. MILLER. I say, does the gentleman think we ought to take the taxpayers' money and appropriate $200,000 or some such sum to investigate the boll weevil?

Mr. SISSON. I have no objection to doing that. Has the gentleman any objection to the investigation of the gypsy-moth proposition in the United States? I will say for myself that I have no objection to the investigation of these conditions, because these things affect every man who labors in the field and who labors in the orchard. But this provision now under discussion is solely for the benefit of the mine owner.

Mr. MILLER. Is it the health of the workingman of African descent who toils in the cotton fields in which the gentleman is interested?

Mr. SISSON. It will help them and all others who work in the cotton fields; and if you destroy the cotton section of my country you will have thousands of smokeless factories and turn thousands of people out of work.

Mr. MILLER. Oh, as to that, I could say you would turn thousands of men out of employment in the mines in this country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McKENZIE. The gentleman has just stated that, in his judgment, this bill is drawn in the interest of the mine owner.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAKER. Under what rule are we working—the five-minute rule or the hour rule?

The CHAIRMAN. The five-minute rule, plus. [Laughter.]

Mr. McKENZIE. I want to ask the gentleman if he knows whether or not the miners of this country are opposed to this bill?

Mr. SISSON. I do not know whether they are opposed to it at all, but I do not think they would be opposed to it if you put in it a few more clauses like this.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the amendment that is proposed here deals not only with the economic conditions in the mineral mines of the West, but economic conditions in the coal mines of the East as well. It deals not only with those economic conditions as they affect the owners of the mines, but also as they affect the employees in the mines, and the economic conditions as they affect the entire people.

I have personally little or no experience with mineral mining. My experience in that line has been very limited. But I do know something about the waste in the mining of coal, and wherever waste of that kind occurs it not only injuriously affects the owner of the property, but it injuriously affects the community at large. You may take a crop from a piece of land and next year grow another crop on it. You may even take a crop of timber from land and in the course of a few years take another crop of timber from the same land. But when you have once taken a crop of coal out of the land there is no method known to man by which you can produce another crop of coal, and so it is important that the economic conditions under which coal is mined should be the very best that can be determined upon.

In the mining of coal there is at the present time an enormous amount of waste. Approximately there are some 1,750 tons of coal per foot in thickness per acre in coal land. Coal weighs about a ton to the cubic yard. It may vary a few pounds more or less. The operation which succeeds in getting 1,400 or 1,500 tons per acre per foot out of the land is an exceptionally fine and well-conducted operation. There are more operations where not more than 1,000 to 1,200 tons per acre per foot are secured than there are that secure 1,500 tons per acre per foot.

Now, gentlemen, all of that coal that is lost in the mine is a loss not only to the owner of the coal land but a loss to the entire community. And what is true of coal lands is true, possibly not to the same extent but still true, with regard to mineral lands. When you find a seam of ore existing anywhere where the percentage of metal in the ore is low, or the means necessary to extract the metal from the ore is too expensive to make it profitable, then that ore is not available for use for the entire community.

If by the investigations proposed in this amendment you can determine more economical methods by which those ores can be extracted, then you make available not merely for the individual owner of the ores, but to the people at large, a greater supply of ores than you now have. There are underlying nearly all the Appalachian chain iron ores with a percentage of iron not sufficiently high to make them valuable at the present time under existing methods. If by the adoption of an amendment of this kind and the work on the part of the bureau in developing methods we are able to secure a method of converting those low-grade ores into iron and steel, which method is cheaper than the present method of converting them, then you will make all those ores available not only to the owners of the ore bed, but to the entire people at large, and you get away from the claim that has been made that the ores are being monopolized by a few companies or individuals. In my judgment, this amendment will not detract any from the bureau in its work with reference to the safety of those engaged in mining. The prime purpose of the bureau and the power that it now has under existing law is to promote the health and safety of those engaged in mining. That will continue to be its prime purpose, the fundamental reason for which it was established. But there is no reason why, in addition to that purpose of promoting the safety and health of those engaged in mining, we should not also empower the bureau with the related subject of taking care of the waste that occurs in mining.

Mr. KOPP. Mr. Chairman, I wish to submit a few observations on the words "economic development," in connection with the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois. It seems to me that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] is too narrow in his construction of its effect when he claims that the economic investigation referred to would be of benefit only to the mine owners. It seems to me that in all this work of conservation, not, perhaps, in the general acceptance of the term, but whenever we do anything for the saving of our timber, for the saving of our metals, for the saving of our lands, our crops, or any of our natural resources, it is not for the benefit alone of the community where these resources are located. When we destroy the boll weevil and preserve a good cotton crop it surely inures to the benefit of all of us, and it is for that reason also, I take it, that we spend millions of dollars in investigating many subjects relating to our agricultural and commercial life. It is because the net result will benefit all of us. That being true, it seems to me that we ought not to object to the Government going on and looking after these questions of conservation, so to speak. Why is it that in Germany before any man can cut down a tree he must plant another near it? It is because they want to save the forests for all the people of Germany for all time. Why is it that in Switzerland before any farmer can cut his grapes and make wine he must have the consent of his Government? It is simply because Swiss wine has a reputation throughout the world, and in order to preserve that reputation for all the people, in order that these resources may remain available for all the people, the Government prohibits any man from cutting his grapes until they are ripe and have reached the proper stage of development.

Now, in the bowels of this earth are wrapped up millions of dollars in wealth. Many things are there of which we know little, and of whose use and value we know little. As an illustration, if you will pardon a personal reference, in my home town where I live there was a printer, Mr. R. I. Dugdale, the proprietor of a little newspaper, who in a little addition he built to his kitchen started to experiment with what is known as oil rock.

There are unknown quantities of oil rock, so called, scattered through this country, but no one has yet found any practical use for it, or, at least, discovered a method of utilizing it. This printer, experimenting with that oil rock in an old kitchen stove and a homemade retort, succeeded in working it up until he produced a powerful gas. That was only a few months ago. He is now working on it. I have no doubt he is going to develop a process by which we can use oil rock, which up to this time has been absolutely useless, and serve us for fuel and light, and this will be a benefit to the people in my State, and in Missouri, Oklahoma, Colorado, and Idaho, where vast quantities of it are to be found; but it will benefit not only them, but all the people of the whole country.

Mr. Chairman, it does seem to me that it is a narrow construction for us to say that if the Government, in its laboratory investigations with reference to unknown metals and minerals, discovers a process whereby we can add millions to our wealth—I say it is a narrow construction to say that it is of benefit alone to the man who may happen to have a piece of land upon which is located some of these deposits. For one, I favor the adoption of the language just as it is. I favor legislation which will give the National Government jurisdiction to inquire into the great unknown resources of nature which are locked up in the bowels of the earth, that we may find out where they are, what they are good for, and bring them out and make them of some benefit to mankind. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the amendment providing for an investigation of economies in mining for the reasons given by the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from Wisconsin and others that I shall give myself. The question of whether or not it pays to mine a 2-foot vein of coal or abandon it, or to go down a particular depth for a given quantity of ore, is the question involved. The economic question, whether or not it is a good thing to leave a 2-foot vein of coal or a quantity of ore forever in the earth or to inaugurate a process of mining that will make it feasible to get these products to the surface and to make them marketable and of use to the people, is the question.

To illustrate, in my own section of the country we have great zinc mines. For a time we mined it from great pockets. The miner was in luck who found a pocket, and made his fortune out of it. Practically all these pockets have been mined out, and the question of continuing zinc mining in that section of the country is one of economic policy. Whether or not we shall do deep mining, much deeper, much more expensive mining, and bring the ore from a sheet vein to the surface at a much greater cost than it took to get it out of the pockets, is one of economic policy and has recently affected the economic policy of the United States.

I, with others, had some difficulty in convincing Congress some three years ago that it was wise to make it possible for American-owned property of that kind to employ American miners at American wages to bring ore out of the earth at a greater expense and place it on the market formerly supplied from pocket ore in competition with pocket ore from other countries mined at a much lower cost. That policy was then adopted, but I regret to say that it was receded from by this House within the last few months. It is a question of economic policy, and this Congress decided that it did not pay to develop and operate American mines and that it was better to leave these large quantities of ore in the earth and leave thousands of laborers out of employment in the United States, leave the property undeveloped and untaxed in the community in which it is located, and let the benefit go to other property and labor employed at lower wages in other countries. The question was decided without scientific investigation and without considering the waste of leaving property unused and abandoned.

I think as an economic proposition there is nothing more valuable in this bill than to develop the best methods of mining coal and ores of all kinds where it has heretofore been regarded as existing in unpaying quantities and to bring it to the surface under a policy to be developed by new and scientific methods and to make it valuable to the people of the United States. I am heartily in favor of the amendment.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I can not contribute anything to the knowledge of my mining friend from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON], having only been in the business myself for 35 years. I know he is interested and that he is moved and actuated by saving to the Government a few dollars. Now, if you will view this bill properly you will see that it is sufficiently guarded in the interest of the Government.

I want to say to my friend that the laws of the United States provide just how one may get title from the Government to a mine. The difficulty has been for years and years that the court, wherever a contest was between the parties, had to determine whether there had been in the first place a discovery of ore within the statute. Assuming that was true and it was decided in favor of one party, the second question was, Was it of commercial value? And therein is the importance of the provision in this bill, for the tests provided will determine that.

Again, hitherto we have always been able to determine our controversies over the question of discovery by decisions of the courts. Now it is practically taken away from the courts, and the department, the Secretary of the Interior, questions the fact of whether you have discovered ore of an economic value. And hence in the interest of the Government, because the Government is interested in disposing of this vast area in the western country that is supposed to be of a mineral character, if it is of a mineral character the Government wants to dispose of it; and the Government has the means wherewith, under the provisions of this bill, to determine whether it is of a mineral character and of sufficient commercial value to permit it to sell it to an individual.

So it is not the individual miner altogether that is getting the benefit under this bill, but it is the Government determining what is the value of its own property, and to encourage being brought out of the bowels of the earth a hidden dollar and put it into the channels of trade, where it will become taxable property and add to our national wealth. The Government—the people—the whole of us are vitally interested in getting it out. If you pass this bill you enable the Government to determine what of this vast area of unoccupied land is of value for mineral purposes, and it will bring the prospector and the Government on better contractual terms, facilitate the disposal of these areas, enabling the Government to cover so much more into the Treasury, save to the miner unnecessary expenditure of money and labor, and finally, if the value is there, add to the taxable wealth of the State and turn into the channels of trade this hidden treasure to the advantage of the Nation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the organic act of the Bureau of Mines provided:

> It shall be the duty of the Bureau of Mines to make diligent investigation of the methods of mining, especially in relation to the safety of miners and the appliances best adapted to prevent accidents; the possible improvements of conditions under which mining operations are carried on; the treatment of ores and other mineral substances; the use of explosives and electricity; the prevention of accidents and other inquiries and technologic investigations pertinent to said industries, and from time to time to make such public reports of the work, investigations, and information obtained as the Secretary of said department may direct, with the recommendations of said bureau.

This proposed paragraph provides that it shall be the province and duty of the Bureau of Mines, subject to the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to conduct inquiries and scientific and technologic investigations concerning mining and the preparation, treatment, and utilization of mineral substances with a view to improving health conditions and increasing safety, efficiency, economic development, and the prevention of waste in the mining, quarrying, metallurgical, and other mineral industries. It would seem that that would be about as comprehensive as anybody could frame a provision in the English language, but the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] now proposes to add:

> And to investigate the economic conditions of these industries.

If it does not mean the broadening of this most comprehensive power, then it has no meaning at all; and if it is to broaden this power, I should be pleased to have somebody state what has not yet been stated, what is to be done under that power. I have the impression that one of the purposes of this provision is to do what I have already said, to put upon the Federal Treasury the cost of a large number of things that should be borne either by the States or by private individuals.

I have here a letter from a chairman of a committee appointed by the Denver Chamber of Commerce in which he calls my attention to the fact that the State of Colorado has already appropriated $125,000 for an ore-testing plant at the Colorado School of Mines, at Golden, which plant would be at the disposal of the United States Bureau of Mines in its metallurgical research work in the western field. So that the State of Colorado with a school of mines, having expended $125,000 for a testing plant in that school, is prepared and willing, if some of the things in this bill be passed, to permit the United States to pay the expense of operating and maintaining the testing plant. I am not surprised that gentlemen from Colorado are so anxious to have these amendments incorporated in this bill. I am not surprised that gentlemen who have ore-bearing properties which they should like to work at a profit desire to have the Federal Government do what has hitherto been done by those owning those properties, spend the money of the Federal Government in these preliminary examinations, which are necessary in order to determine whether the property is of value.

This information is not culled from my imagination. It is based upon statements made to me by men owning such properties, calling upon me to support appropriations for work of such a character, the statements to me being that the United States can so much more easily and better do it, and the cost should not be borne by the person interested.

The Bureau of Mines has an important work to do under the organic act. If any construction has been given that act which makes it impossible to do the work in metallurgical-mining regions that is being done in the coal-mining regions under that, it should be changed; but a number of things they have done and that are desired to be done should not be permitted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that at the expiration of five minutes debate on the amendment close.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that at the expiration of five minutes debate on the pending amendment close. Is there objection?

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate be closed on the pending amendment in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, before the Bureau of Mines was created the work was conducted under the Geological Survey. Before the restrictions were placed upon it one of the investigations conducted was to determine the relative efficiency of certain kinds of engines using alcohol or gasoline as a fuel. An investigation was conducted with an attempt to determine the value of ethyl alcohol for fuel purposes, which would have been of value to those building and perfecting engines for use of these fuel substances. Unless an amendment which I propose to offer is adopted, there is no limit to the extent to which these investigations can be carried. It is an important thing to determine to just what an extent the Federal Government is to assume the burden of these investigations.

Some three or four years ago the Frick Coal Co., of Pittsburgh, conducted a number of very important investigations to determine a number of matters of vital interest to the company in the conduct of its operations. It does so no longer. It permits the Bureau of Mines, at the expense of the Federal Treasury, to relieve it of the burden which formerly belonged to it.

The primary object of the Bureau of Mines, one which should be kept in mind and from which we should not permit it to be diverted, is the protection of the men engaged in the mining industry, and by investigations to determine the causes of mine accidents, to outline methods by which accidents can be prevented, not only by the use of explosives that will not be hazardous to handle, but in proper shoring and working in the mines. But to investigate the economic conditions of these industries is to go much further.

A gentleman interested very largely in an industry, which I think might more properly be put under the head of quarrying than anything else, pointed out to me a short time ago that it would be very beneficial to his company to have certain investigations made by the Bureau of Mines. It would be expensive to make those investigations. That expense would be borne by the company, but if certain changes could be made in the organic act of the Bureau of Mines, the Federal Government would very kindly relieve the company of the necessity for bearing the expense of such an investigation. There is such a broad field into which it would be possible to go that we should be careful before we put in language which is so general as to be indefinite.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I would like to have the gentleman's view of this amendment. I believe I am in accord with the gentleman. Does he believe that this particular amendment does enlarge the scope of this bureau?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not sure. The paragraph provides:

To conduct inquiries and scientific and technologic investigations concerning mining, and the preparation, treatment, and utilization of mineral substances with a view to improving health, conditions, and increasing safety, efficiency, economic development, and the prevention of waste in the mining, quarrying, metallurgical, and other mineral industries.

I supposed that that was about as comprehensive as it would be possible to express the purpose and object of this bureau, but when it is found necessary now to add—and to inquire into the economic conditions affecting these industries—

it seems to me it is intended to make it a catchall, so that any possible inquiry or investigation that might be suggested under a liberal definition of the word "economic" could readily be brought within the purview of this amendment. I believe, under the circumstances, it should not be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Even to settle a contention as to whether it is protective in its policy?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I take it under that language that we might inquire as to the wisdom of a protective tariff, for instance, as to iron ore.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 22, strike out the following words: "with a view to their most efficient use," and insert the following: "with reference to their mining, preparation, treatment, and use."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let that be again reported.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. FOSTER. The intention of this, as I take it, is to mean that these mineral products belonging to or for the use of the United States, having reference to the mining of these, if belonging to the United States, and the preparation of products belonging to the United States, the treatment or use for the United States, this simply confines it to those products belonging to or for the use of the United States. It does not go beyond that scope.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It changes entirely the purpose?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The investigations heretofore conducted of the mineral substances or fuel supply belonging to or for the specific use of the United States were such investigations as would demonstrate the most efficient use to which they could be put by the United States; but this enters into an entirely different domain.

Mr. FOSTER. I will say to the gentleman from New York that this is confined particularly to those products which belong to the United States. It does not go beyond that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It does say for the use of——

Mr. FOSTER. Or for the use of the United States; certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then whenever it would be proposed, for instance, to purchase coal for the use of the Capitol——

Mr. FOSTER. What about it?

Mr. FITZGERALD (continuing). It would open up the way of the possibility of going to the mine and making the most comprehensive investigation possible as to methods of preparation and use. I am familiar with that, because that very question has been called to my attention in connection with the purchase of fuel for the Capitol.

Mr. FOSTER. I will say to the gentleman there is a way of mining coal belonging to the United States or for the use of the United States in which you would not get the best use of that coal. That is true; and I think the gentleman from New York will readily understand.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I accept the compliment.

Mr. FOSTER. I would refer that matter to my friend from Pennsylvania, who probably knows more about the mining of coal than any other Member here.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does this have reference only to coal?

Mr. FOSTER. No; the provision applies to any mine product belonging to or for the use of the United States. I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who is a practical man and has had experience in the coal-mining business and has seen more coal mined, possibly, than any other man here, will realize that there are certain ways of mining coal that are not efficient ways of mining and that there are many in which this could be put to the advantage of the United States.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. The language of the proposed amendment is, "mineral products belonging to or for the use of the United States." Now, the United States owns almost one-half, or say one-third—I will not be accurate—of the area of the United States, and if we count Alaska it will be one-half, and I suppose this bureau would be turned loose on every acre of land for investigation as to the coal or any other product.

Mr. FOSTER. If Congress should say so, I think they would have the right to do it. I will say further to my colleague that this keeps it from the Geological Survey and the Bureau of Standards. Now, this deals with the raw product and not with the finished product. That is one reason why I think that language should be in there, and it is thought so by the Secretary of the Interior, for the reasons which I have given you—to keep it away from the Bureau of Standards and the Geological Survey, so there can be no duplication of work between those different bureaus.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman permit a brief suggestion?

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly.

Mr. MILLER. The Government has on its forest area large quantities of mineral lands other than coal. It has copper, lead, zinc, enormous areas of iron ore. There has been heretofore employed and in some places is now employed what is known as the pillar method. That is a bad method for two reasons. In the first place, it is extremely wasteful, because there is a quarter to a third of iron-ore product which can not be mined by that process. Secondly, it is extremely dangerous, and accidents under that method are frequently occurring. Such an investigation as this amendment contemplates would certainly lead to governmental supervision of mines upon its own area and avoid such a method as that. It seems to me from every consideration of public policy this is a very important and valuable feature of the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is this a committee amendment?

Mr. FOSTER. This is an amendment suggested by the Secretary of the Interior for the reasons I have stated to my colleague from Illinois, that it will prevent duplication between the Bureau of Standards, the Geological Survey, and the Bureau of Mines. It is not a committee amendment, and why this amendment is offered at this time is as I have said.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I inquired because it would not afford me any embarrassment if I did not feel inclined to support the bill in charge of the gentleman if he shows that he has no more affection for it than to offer this amendment.

Mr. FOSTER. I have stated to the gentleman the reason why it is offered.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I regret to oppose an amendment offered by the chairman of the committee, but I hope this amendment will not be adopted. I can not believe that its effect has been carefully considered. I am inclined to think that under this amendment the Government could open up a coal mine or a gold mine or a copper mine on the public lands of the United States. Now, that might be a good thing in the opinion of some, but it is not the sort of thing I am in favor of. This amendment is as broad as a provision could well be drawn, and its effect would be to give the Bureau of Mines a very broad authority and invite the bureau into all manner of active operations in connection with mineral lands owned by the Government.

I do not believe it is wise to do that. I do not believe that the committee intended to do it, and I have no doubt but that this amendment would authorize that to be done. It seems to me that we have gone quite far enough when we have authorized these investigations in a broad way, with a view to the most efficient use of the properties of the United States, and that it is unwise to go as far afield as this amendment does.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. I will be glad to.

Mr. RAKER. What distinction can you make between the amendment now offered and the bill as it now appears if you carry out the full meaning of the words, "with a view to their most efficient use"? First, if you get the efficient use, must you not find out the mining, the preparation, and their treatment to get the most efficient use? In other words, is not this language simply carrying out in so many more words the language that is already in the bill on page 2?

Mr. MONDELL. No; I do not think so, because as the bill stands without the amendment it simply authorizes certain investigations with a view to the most efficient use of the property of the United States. But when you allow these investigations to be made with reference to mining, preparation, treatment, and use, it seems to me you authorize the bureau to go as far as to open a mine, to investigate mining by practical operations on the public lands. And in my opinion if the amendment is adopted the bureau will have authority to do that. I think the bureau has all the authority it ought to have and all that it needs under language as it is now in the bill, and that it can do all that it ought to do without the amendment. I think the amendment is dangerous.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I ask the Clerk to report.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. POWERS].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, section 2, by striking out, on page 2, lines 11, 12, and part of line 13, down to and including the word "Interior."

Mr. POWERS. So that the section will read——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's amendment is just to strike out the language read?

Mr. POWERS. To strike out the language read and insert what I have on the slip there.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will conclude the reading of the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. It shall be the province and duty of the said bureau and its director, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to make diligent investigation of the methods of mining, especially in relation to the safety of miners, the cause and prevention of mine fires, rescue and first-aid work, and the appliances best adapted to prevent accidents, the possible improvement of conditions under which mining operations are carried on, the treatment of ores and other mineral substances, the use of explosives and electricity, the cause and prevention of mine accidents, and.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that my amendment does not affect the committee amendment, as agreed upon by the House. It has the scope and all the authority that the committee and the House has put into section 2. My amendment puts into section 2 the present law governing the Bureau of Mines, with this exception: That it adds to the present law, giving the bureau the power and authority to investigate the cause and prevention of mine fires and make reports on rescue and first-aid work.

Now, that is the only amendment to the original law which my amendment proposes. The gentlemen in charge of the bill believe that the language of the bill is sufficiently comprehensive to cover all the things covered by the present law. In my judgment, with all due respect to the committee and the investigation which they have given to this subject, the bill bearing the name of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] does not cover it. In section 3 of the Foster bill they provide that the Bureau of Mines shall make reports concerning the nature, causes, and prevention of accidents; second, shall make reports concerning safety methods and appliances; shall make reports concerning rescue and first-aid work; and shall make reports concerning the cause and prevention of mine fires. I take the position that there is nothing in the bill of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] which authorizes the Bureau of Mines to make any investigations in regard to these particular subjects. These are the ones for which the Bureau of Mines was originally established, the main purpose being to prevent accidents in mines and to save the lives of miners.

Now, then, my amendment simply puts in the law as it now is on these particular subjects, with some particularity, that enumeration, and leaves Mr. FOSTER's bill in its entirety as about to be passed by the House.

I fear that without this amendment the scope and operation of the Bureau of Mines will be narrowed and contracted along the very lines for which that bureau was originally created.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, when the Bureau of Mines was established I offered an amendment which related especially to the safety of miners and to appliances best adapted to prevent accidents. That was in the original act, and that particular language has not been incorporated in this bill. But I think in this bill we go even further than the gentleman's amendment could possibly go. I think this bill broadens the scope of the work of the Bureau of Mines, and for one, having offered on the floor of the House the amendment which was incorporated into the original bill, I am willing to believe, and I have no doubt that under this provision more work will be done looking toward the safety and better conditions of miners than was done under the old act. While I see the gentleman's idea is that there shall not be any lack of proper precautions for the lives and safety of the miners, while I know that it is the gentleman's idea to secure the greatest amount of precautions in that direction for the benefit of those who work in the mines, yet, in my judgment, there is no question but that all this is taken care of in this section.

When the gentleman speaks of issuing bulletins it simply indicates that they are going to investigate in reference to those subjects, and they would not issue the bulletins unless they had made the investigations. The gentleman does not conceive that they will issue a lot of bulletins with regard to subjects that they have not investigated.

Mr. POWERS. My point is that they can not issue these bulletins unless they have the power to investigate.

Mr. FOSTER. When you say—

To conduct inquiries and scientific and technologic investigations concerning mining, and the preparation, treatment, and utilization of mineral substances with a view to improving health conditions and increasing safety—

That language is broad enough to cover the whole subject of safety appliances that may be used about the mines. I think there is no question about it, and I for one, who take special pride in having placed that language in the original act, am willing to say that this language here is stronger and better than the other language was.

Mr. POWERS. My amendment does not take anything at all from the bill.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand that.

Mr. POWERS. But it meets some conditions which, in my judgment, have been left out.

Mr. FOSTER. I appreciate the gentleman's interest in this matter. Certainly it is and ought to be the great work of this bureau to find out better and safer ways for the miners to work and under better conditions. I want to see that brought about as much as the gentleman from Kentucky does, but I believe that under this section the powers of this bureau are larger than they were under the old law and that the scope of the bureau is better defined.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have an amendment which I wish to offer.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask my colleague a question.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Does not my colleague see that it is perfectly evident that we can not complete this bill to-day?

Mr. FOSTER. I should like, if we could, to go ahead and complete it in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CANNON. I am told by several Members that there are important amendments to be offered in good faith. It is now 20 minutes to 5 and pretty warm. Evidently there is no quorum present. I suggest that the gentleman move that the committee rise.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to have my amendment pending, that is all.

Mr. CANNON. I suggest to my colleague that he move that the committee rise.

Mr. FOSTER. It is now only 20 minutes to 5. It is too early to do that. I think we ought to conclude another paragraph. I could not agree to move to rise now.

Mr. MONDELL. Can not this paragraph be disposed of? Are there any further amendments to it?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. LITTLEPAGE] has sent an amendment to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. CANNON. I give notice to the gentleman. I will not make the point just at this minute, but the committee can not give intelligent consideration to this important measure with less than a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. LITTLEPAGE].

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 22, before the word "and," insert the following:
"To thoroughly investigate the cause of explosions in coal mines, with a view of minimizing and preventing the same."

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Mr. Chairman, this is a very important bill. It seeks to accomplish measures of relief which are very important, especially to the coal miners of this country. What coal miners wish most of all is to ascertain the cause of explosions in coal mines, in order that the necessary precautions may be taken to prevent those explosions, and in that way prevent the loss of life which has happened in so many hundreds of cases all over the country heretofore. If Members will read this bill, I do not think they will find in it any direct instructions to this bureau to investigate the cause of coal-mine explosions. Explosions and resulting loss of life and destruction of property makes the blood of men run cold. The awfulness is indescribable. They occur in all countries where coal is mined. Let us take a step in advance and in the right direction. The operators and miners alike and in one accord will say amen and will blend their energies to facilitate efforts in doing what we can. If the membership of this House could go and investigate in the vicinity where explosions have taken place; if they could see the effects of the explosions and see the mangled forms of miners, in many instances torn limb from limb, hear the screams of women and children, there is not a Member on the floor of this House that would vote against this amendment.

I say to the membership of this House that of all the things the coal miners in this country want, it is some legislation in the direction, at least, that will give them the hope and belief that the Government intends to look into the question of preventing the explosions in the coal mines of the country. My observation and my experience have been that there is nothing this Congress could do that would so please the coal miners in this country as for the Government, as far as it can, to look into and to take a hand in preventing the explosions in the coal mines. That is the dread of the miner every day and every hour of his life, especially in mines generating gas or dust in dangerous quantities. I want to say to the membership of this House that while I am heartily in sympathy with the bill, I do feel that it needs this amendment. In my district there are 30,000 coal miners and mine workers, and I feel that if the Government's attention was directed to giving such instruction and making such investigations and reports as this amendment provides to investigate the other matters provided in the bill, nothing would give the miners more encouragement and more hope than that. I trust that the membership of this House will seriously consider this amendment. [Applause.] Let us do what we can for the relief and protection of these wealth producers. We can let them know and the country know that we want to protect and preserve our coal miners and enable them to live, be prosperous, and happy.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, this is practically the same amendment as that offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, which is now included in the bill.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Where is there any specific provision that the department shall investigate and determine the cause of coal-mine explosions?

Mr. FOSTER. It provides that they may investigate for improved health conditions and increased conditions of safety. I do not think you can get any broader language than that.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. I disagree with you. We can put the matter beyond question here and now. Do not stand on narrow and uncertain grounds. Let us be certain, broad, and liberal.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. LITTLEPAGE].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LITTLEPAGE) there were—ayes 6, noes 18.

So the amendment was lost.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of section 2, at the bottom of page 2, add the following:
"Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed so as to permit the Bureau of Mines to pursue any investigation or to disseminate any information now authorized by law."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I hope the chairman of the committee will accept that amendment. I think it is very necessary. It was stated on the floor that that could not be done, that there would be no duplication of work under the bill, but in order to make assurance doubly sure, I have offered this amendment.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, under the gentleman's amendment every particle of information that is allowed to be disseminated under the laws now existing the bureau will be prohibited from sending out.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Oh, no.

Mr. RAKER. Why certainly; the very purpose of the original bill was to disseminate information, and the gentleman's amendment prohibits that being sent out. You prohibit information that is now authorized by law from being disseminated.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not think that would be the effect of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment: To insert before the word "fuels," in line 20, and after the word "the," which was inserted by amendment, the word "mineral."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 20, before the word "fuels," and after the word "the," inserted by amendment, insert the word "mineral."

Mr. FOSTER. Is that in order to keep away from anything except coal, oil, and gas?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The purpose is not to include wood and alcohol and matters of that character. It is to confine it to mineral fuels. I am trying to prevent such things as was contended for in 1909 could be done—to test wood, to promote the development of the furnace for using wood as a fuel, and the use of alcohol as a fuel. I suppose the gentlemen interested in this bill wish to confine it to coal, lignites, and mineral fuels, and do not intend that the bureau shall go into the business of testing any gases or liquid fuels.

Mr. FOSTER. Oils and gases are considered as mineral substances, and also natural gas.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; the gases are included as minerals.

Mr. MILLER. I think the Government ought to have the authority to investigate peat. I do not know whether the gentleman's amendment would exclude peat or not. Otherwise I am friendly to the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will be perfectly frank with the gentleman. I do not desire in any unfair way to prevent certain things being done.

Mr. MILLER. Would the gentleman modify his amendment so as to say mineral fuels, including peat?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of the committee, might accept the amendment, and if it goes further than it should go it can be corrected. By the time the bill is taken up again it can be ascertained whether it goes too far, and if it does I will not object to a reconsideration.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. RAKER. I understand the purpose of the amendment is to have it apply to mineral fuels entirely.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Then ought it not to read "to investigate explosives"—strike out the word "and"—"the mineral fuels, and unfinished mineral products belonging to"?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think that is a good suggestion.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They are extracting gasoline now from natural gas. Some private inventors have got hold of the use of that method. Would that be covered by the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think that natural gas would be covered.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They extract the gasoline from the gas, and the gas is then used for lighting purposes and the gasoline for all other purposes for which gasoline is now used.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, let us have a vote. I am not opposed to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FITZGERALD) there were—ayes 28, noes 8.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, at the hour of 5 o'clock and with the thermometer at 90 in the shade, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois suggests the absence of a quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Forty-one Members present; not a quorum.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and on a division, at the suggestion of the Chair, there were—ayes 25, noes 25.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers. If gentlemen want to punish themselves without making any headway, that is their own affair.

Mr. FOSTER. I have asked that we stay in session only 5 or 10 minutes more, and then I should be willing to rise. That is all. I do not want to keep the House here unnecessarily. I suggest that it is only 5 o'clock.

Mr. CANNON. But it has developed that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois demand tellers?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Would not the gentleman consent to go on for a little while?

Mr. CANNON. I can not, a quorum not being present.

The CHAIRMAN. As many as are in favor of ordering tellers will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Twelve Members have risen—not a sufficient number—and tellers are refused. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The committee rose; and Mr. HAY having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MARTIN of Colorado, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having found itself without a quorum, he had directed the roll to be called, whereupon 210 Members responded to their names, a quorum, and he returned the names of the absentees.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A quorum being present, the committee will resume its sitting.

Thereupon the committee resumed its sitting.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That the director of said bureau shall prepare, publish, and distribute, subject to the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, under the appropriations made from time to time by Congress, reports of inquiries and investigations, with appropriate recommendations of the bureau, concerning the nature, causes, and prevention of accidents, and the improvement of conditions, methods, and equipment with special reference to health, safety, and prevention of waste in the mining, quarrying, metallurgical, and other mineral industries; the use of explosives and electricity, safety methods and appliances, and rescue and first-aid work in said industries; the causes and prevention of mine fires; and other subjects included under the provisions of this act.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MARTIN of Colorado, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 17260, the Bureau of Mines bill, and had directed him to report that it had come to no resolution thereon.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, the Committee on Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 24699) extending the time for the payment of certain war-revenue taxes erroneously collected, and the same was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have five days after the completion of this bill to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. CANNON. On the bill?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to find out in regard to this. Did the gentleman say all Members or all Members who have spoken on the bill?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I will ask that all Members who have spoken on the bill have the right to extend their remarks on the bill for five days.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that all gentlemen who have spoken on this bill shall have five legislative days after the bill gets out of the House to extend their remarks in the RECORD on the bill itself. Is there objection?

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to make an inquiry, an answer to which I think would be for the general information of the country. This bill will not be in order again, I understand, until next Wednesday. That will be the 6th of June, and five legislative days after that will carry it to the 11th of June. I would like to inquire whether the Democratic majority in control of this House has any plans for adjournment [applause]; and, if so, whether that information could be given us, so that we would know——[cries of "Regular order!"] Mr. Speaker, I am in order. I am asking for information, and I am asking in good faith. Otherwise I shall object to this printing. I want to know whether the request covering five legislative days after this bill gets out of the House—the bill not being in order again until next Wednesday—is buncombe, or whether we will have those five legislative days occurring after that time. Somebody in authority here ought to be able to answer that question.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to withdraw the request for the five days——

Mr. HILL. I am asking the question in good faith.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman is asking the Speaker, the Speaker can not tell him.

Mr. HILL. I did not suppose he could. I was asking the floor leader.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to say this side of the House will be prepared to adjourn very speedily whenever a demoralized and reactionary Republican Senate acts upon the bills sent there for the relief of the American people.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that is a fair answer to the question; for, in view of the votes there to-day, there is no Republican Senate. I think the gentleman's answer is not a fair one. [Applause.] I think a great many of us would like to have the question answered. If this Democratic majority of 63 confesses its utter inability to answer the question, I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. CANNON. The replication having been filed and the issue made, I suppose it would be in order to have a jury to try the issue.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I submitted some remarks to the committee and called attention to a historic document. I desire to ask unanimous consent to have reproduced in the RECORD as part of my remarks a facsimile of the document, with the notation on the margin to which I called the attention of the committee.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, my impression is that that can only be done by the Joint Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the printing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the document which the gentleman from New York [Mr FITZGERALD] holds in his hand?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to have it made in facsimile.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, May 30, 1912.

The Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, who art the Ruler of the nations, our fathers trusted in Thee and were not ashamed, and we in our day acknowledge Thee to be our God and implore Thee to continue Thy favor unto us, even unto us who are their sons and the heirs of all their labors and of all their tears. In ways which we could not understand Thou hast led us and Thou hast guided us in paths which we had not known. Of the little one Thou hast made a great nation and us who were many Thou hast made one. As Thou wast with our fathers, so be Thou with us, we pray Thee. Keep us free and undivided, that by Thy grace we may be that happy nation whose God is the Lord.

And unto Thee, our God, whose we are and whom we serve, will we ascribe praise now and forevermore. Amen.

AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATION BILL (S. DOC. NO. 732).

Mr. BURNHAM. I present a conference report on House bill 18960, the agriculture appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report, the entire report being as follows:

H. E. BURNHAM,
F. E. WARREN,
JOHN H. BANKHEAD,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOHN LAMB,
A. F. LEVER,
G. N. HAUGEN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not understand that my colleague asked present consideration for the report. It seems to me it ought to be printed and go over. I should like myself to look at it.

Mr. BURNHAM. That course is entirely agreeable to me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The conference report will be printed and go over, subject to call.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think the bill as it would stand amended should be printed, showing in italics the changes that have been made in the conference, so that we may have it before us. It is too extensive a bill to undertake to review and criticize in a few minutes or even in an hour.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I ask leave to call the attention of the Senate to the condition we are in about the appropriation bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The matter has not been disposed of which has been brought before the Senate. The Senator from Idaho suggests——

Mr. WARREN. I am talking about the matter now before us.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the Senator is in order.

Mr. WARREN. We are now almost to the 1st day of June. There have been only two of the regular annual appropriation bills of the session which have received the signature of the President, and they are very unimportant as to size of bill and as to their provisions leading to delay and debate. I speak of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill and the fortifications appropriation bill. All the great appropriation bills of the session, except the two mentioned, or all those that have arrived at this end of the Capitol, are here unacted upon as to finality, though under consideration in subcommittees. Some of the annual appropriation bills have not yet made their appearance from committees on the other side, and the more important ones which have been reported are filled from cover to cover with legislation.

Mr. President, if we are going into this easy-going idea of laying aside appropriation bills and apportioning the time here for agreements to this, that, and the other thing, we might as well expect that we are going to spend the entire summer in session and adjourn some time next autumn. There has never been a time in my remembrance when the appropriation bills have been sidetracked, through the good nature, or otherwise, of members of appropriation committees, and given less attention by those not engaged in their preparation and defense than in the present session of the Senate. When we were considering appropriation bills on the last day of the last session, complaints were made by members of the Appropriations Committee that they had not received sufficient notice and they were not present at meetings of the committee, all of which may occur again if too much of the business of the Appropriations Committee is crowded into the last few days.

I want to request the favor of the members of the Committee on Appropriations that they be always ready, at a moment's notice, at any time, if need be, to go into committee or conference, and not to expect two or three days' notice beforehand; and I want to ask of the Senate that no more unanimous-consent agreements be made of any kind or character, except such as may be made subject to consideration of appropriation bills.

I believe I have been patient about it, as we all have at this end of the Capitol. I believe that all those who have a care for these appropriation bills and have them specially in charge have been particularly patient. I know we have been very industrious. But here we are. We have the District of Columbia appropriation bill, with hundreds of amendments which have not been composed, for reasons well understood by those having it in charge. It came over here as the first bill. The Indian appropriation bill has not yet been reported to the Senate.

Mr. CURTIS. It was reported yesterday.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Kansas reminds me that it was reported yesterday. I am glad. We have the Post Office appropriation bill, lately brought here with I do not know how many matters of legislation attached to it or how much money in it. We have the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill now before the committee. It is also filled with legislation, besides the hundreds of differences that must occur over items and amounts, and so forth.

It seems to me it is now time for the Senate to give some earnest attention to the appropriation bills and to the disposition of the conference reports one way or the other when they are presented here.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am not sensitive, and I presume the Senator from Wyoming, who has a great burden upon him, did not mean to criticize me for asking that the conference report on this appropriation bill should go over.

Mr. WARREN. On the contrary, I was drawing attention to the difficulties, and that my colleague on the committee, who is always prompt and effective, has been unable even to get an agreement to compose those District bill differences. Yet he has been industriously laboring, as I know, on that subject.

I only speak of the fact that these great money bills are here without the final composure of differences, and here we are at the time or date when we ought to be adjourning.

Mr. GALLINGER. I greatly sympathize with what the Senator says, and yet, of course, unless this bill, which is an important bill, is explained to the Senate it ought to go over and the report should be printed. I have no desire to delay it a moment.

As to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, I will say, Mr. President, and I say it not in criticism of the other House, because I could not indulge in a criticism of that kind, after that bill passed the Senate with something over 400 amendments it was not acted upon by the other House for two months, and it came back here very recently. An early meeting of the conference committee has been called, and I have no doubt we will get that bill through in due time in some shape or other.

I think the Senator is right in calling attention to this matter. Unfortunately most of these bills are now in committee. They have not been reported to the Senate. As soon as this report is printed we ought to take it up in good faith and pass on it as promptly as possible, and also take up and pass the Indian appropriation bill. The pension appropriation bill and those bills are weighted down as they never have been before with legislation. I do not know how much they have been improved by the appropriate committees. I hope that those which have been acted upon and the one which has just been reported on have been improved in that particular. Some Senators made a suggestion to me that it would be wise for the Senate if it struck out all general legislation on these appropriation bills, but unfortunately we can not reach the general legislation that the other House puts in these bills, and so we are handicapped in that regard.

But I join with my good friend from Wyoming, the chairman of the committee, of which I happen to be a member, in the desire that the consideration of these bills shall be expedited as much as possible.

Mr. WARREN. I am glad to have drawn out the remarks of the Senator from New Hampshire, and I am glad that he stated what is a well-known fact, that attention at another place was not given to the amendments from this side for many weeks.

Mr. GALLINGER. For two months.

Mr. WARREN. But in the enumeration of bills—I wish to cut it short—here is the naval appropriation bill, which involves a large amount of money and I presume will lead to differences of opinion and many amendments. We have in committee the legislative appropriation bill. This day makes two weeks, every day of which and more than half of the nights up to midnight have been occupied upon that bill by the subcommittee, and it is not yet ready to be submitted to the full committee because of the great number of changes that have been made, the legislation that elsewhere has been introduced in various places, and the several pages at the end of the bill that are filled with entirely new matter.

I am informed that we shall have another very large bill shortly, the sundry civil appropriation bill, which is the omnium gatherum of everything left from the others except the deficiency. I understand that that bill will be a category from first to last of the needed legislation of the country. I am not finding fault with that. The House is proceeding under its rules. It has changed the rules, as it has a right to do, and adopted new ones which makes it within the rules, regular and special, to attach any kind of legislation to an appropriation bill; and we have that condition and all that new legislation to meet. The House is a coordinate branch of the Government. Furthermore, we have the heads of the several departments to deal with. Some of them seem to assume that they own Congress, body and mind, and they want everything in the bills left in or taken out to suit their figures. So Senators who are on the appropriating committees are between these fires—the Senate on the one side, the House of Representatives on another, and the departments on still another. Therefore the life of a Senator who happens for the time being to be serving upon those committees is not entirely a happy nor an easy one, especially if he is one of those who are selected as managers of a conference.

I have no objection to this conference report going over and being printed; that is a very proper thing to do; but I want to call the attention of the Senate to the condition of these bills.

I do not believe there has been a time which can be pointed to back in history where there has been at so late a period in the session so few money bills acted on, and yet there is not a single appropriation bill that I know of which has come from the other side of the Capitol to this Senate which has not been directly taken up by our committees and proceeded with as fast as it could be done under the circumstances and in view of all the new legislation proposed in this new and unusual way.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him for just a moment?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator referred to the naval bill. The naval bill only reached the Senate last night.

Mr. WARREN. That is true, and two of the largest annual appropriation bills are not yet reported out of committees of the other House to that body.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, the remarks of the Senator from Wyoming are a very proper and timely warning to those Senators who are charged with the duty of preparing appropriation bills and presenting them to the Senate; but I must say that I do not see any occasion for a criticism of the Senate, as such, for there has not been an objection interposed; there has not been a particle of delay or hindrance in the consideration of an appropriation bill, so far as I can recall. I think the Senate stands ready now, as it has stood ready for a long time, to take up, consider, and dispose of any appropriation bill that is presented to the Senate by the chairmen of the respective committees having charge of those matters.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the order will be entered, under the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire and also the Senator from Idaho, as to the printing of the bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. My request was that the bill be printed with the amendments and changes in italics, so that we could at once see them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered, without objection.

Mr. BURNHAM. I wish to say that at the earliest opportunity I shall call up the conference report on the agricultural appropriation bill, and I hope that its consideration will be continued until it is disposed of.

CONFERENCE OF COMMISSIONERS ON UNIFORM STATE LAWS,
New York City, May 20, 1912.

Hon. ATLEE POMERENE,
Senate Chamber, Capitol, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I write in advocacy and approval of your substitute Senate bill 6810, relating to bills of lading in interstate and foreign commerce.

I consider that it will be of great advantage in advancing the cause of uniformity of legislation in this regard, a work upon which our conference of commissioners on uniform State laws has been engaged for many years.

Trusting that your bill will be enacted into law, I am,

Very faithfully, yours,

CHARLES THADDEUS TERRY.

CHALMERS & KENT,
Phoenix, Ariz., May 15, 1912.

Hon. ATLEE POMERENE,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: As a former member of the board of commissioners on uniform State laws of the Territory of Arizona, I desire heartily to indorse Senate bill 4713, relating to bills of lading in interstate and foreign commerce, which bill I understand has recently been introduced by you in the Senate. It seems to me most desirable that there should be a Federal law in harmony with the uniform bills of lading law now enforced in several of the States, and as the bill introduced by you is in harmony with such law I trust it may pass Congress.

Yours, very truly,

EDWARD KENT.

PEORIA BOARD OF TRADE,
Peoria, Ill., May 18, 1912.

Hon. ATLEE POMERENE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: By action of the Peoria Board of Trade, I am directed to state that we are in favor of the Pomerene Senate bill 6810 and not in favor of Senate bill 957.

We are constrained to take this position after a fair and impartial consideration of both bills covering some length of time. Besides, features in Senate bill 957 which we deem do not properly safeguard the shippers' rights, Senate bill 6810 covers the rights and liabilities as between buyers and sellers of negotiable bills of lading and carriers. This latter feature is very important to the grain trade.

Yours, truly,

C. H. FELTMAN, President.

103 OAK HALL BUILDING,
Pawtucket, R. I., May 20, 1912.

DEAR SIR: As a member of the Commission for the Promotion of Uniformity of State Legislation for the State of Rhode Island, I heartily approve your substitute Senate bill 6810 relating to bills of lading in commerce with foreign nations and among the several States.

I have written Senators WETMORE and LIPPITT urging their active support of this measure, which means the support of the great cause for the uniformity of State legislation and will have a tremendous influence upon the legislatures of those States which have not already enacted the law.

Very truly, yours,

CLARENCE N. WOOLLEY.

Washington, D. C.:

We can not too strongly indorse Pomerene substitute, Senate bill 6810, containing amendments agreed to by bankers and shippers at conference held in Washington May 22. Practical experience convinces us that every section is essential for the protection of an innocent holder of a bill of lading, and we hope action will be taken at this session of Congress removing the unsatisfactory conditions that now exist.

THE VAN DUSEN HARRINGTON CO.,
By H. A. FELTUS, Traffic Manager.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BRANDEGEE, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 5556) to amend "An act to create an auditor of railroad accounts, and for other purposes," approved June 19, 1878, as amended by the acts of March 3, 1881, and March 3, 1903, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 819) thereon.

Mr. DU PONT, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 6798) authorizing the Secretary of War to grant permission for the erection of a hotel on the Fort Huachuca Military Reservation, in Arizona, reported it without amendment.

Mr. JONES, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 20480) excepting certain lands in Lawrence and Pennington Counties, S. Dak., from the operation of the provisions of section 4 of an act approved June 11, 1906, entitled "An act to provide for the entry of agricultural lands within forest reserves," reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 822) thereon.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 16612) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to convey a certain lot in the city of Alva, State of Oklahoma, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 823) thereon.

Mr. HEYBURN. Two petitions relating to labels on manufactured articles were referred on yesterday, or a few days ago, to the Committee on Manufactures, which should have been referred to another committee. I move that the Committee on Manufactures be discharged from the further consideration of the petitions and that they be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

OLMSTEAD LANDS, NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 20738) for the transfer of the so-called Olmstead lands, in the State of North Carolina, from the Solicitor of the Treasury to the Secretary of Agriculture to report it with an amendment, and I submit a report (No. 820) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from North Carolina to the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment of the Committee on Public Lands was to add at the end of the bill a new section, as follows:

SEC. 4. That nothing herein contained shall be construed to affect in any way any private or corporate rights now existing with reference to said lands.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

WHITE RIVER DAM, ARK.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably with an amendment the bill (H. R. 20347) to authorize the Dixie Power Co. to construct a dam across White River at or near Cotter, Ark., and I submit a report (No. 821) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from Arkansas to the bill.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not going to object to the consideration of the bill at this time, but I shall object to any other bills being considered by unanimous consent during the presentation of morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 1, after line 13, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 2. It is understood, and this act is enacted on the express conditions, that the State of Arkansas shall first consent to the construction of said dam and shall have authority to fix from time to time reasonable charges for power and current furnished by the said Dixie Power Co., to regulate the service for the electric current and power produced by requiring that the same shall be furnished to all proposed consumers who apply in good faith to purchase the same without discrimination as to service and charge, and in the order in which application therefor is made, except that in the event power and current sufficient to supply all applicants can not be produced that preference shall always be given to such applicants as shall consume the same within the said State. Upon the expiration of the authorization granted by this act the said dam shall, at the option of the said State, become the property of the State of Arkansas, or any grantee of hers, upon the payment to the said Dixie Power Co. of the value thereof as a structure, disconnected from any license, grant, permission, or franchise, as said value may be ascertained by negotiation, or, in default of agreement, by fair arbitration or by judicial proceeding, as said Dixie Power Co. shall elect.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask for a rereading of the provision with reference to the power company?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator refers to the amendment reported by the committee?

Mr. BORAH. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will again read the amendment.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am not going to discuss this matter at length nor object to the consideration of the bill, but, if I am not misled as to the purport of the amendment, it reserves to the State of Arkansas a right which, in my opinion, the State of Arkansas has absolutely without any act of Congress giving it.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I quite agree with the Senator, but I thought it was better to put it upon the face of the act, so that there can be no controversy about it in this particular case.

Mr. BORAH. What I want to be understood as saying in the RECORD, so that there may be no mistake about it, is that I think that that power now rests in the State, and we can neither take it away nor add anything to it.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. But it is better to have it in the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $100,000 for continuing the extension of the quay wall at the navy yard at Portsmouth, N. H., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill (H. R. 24565), which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GARDNER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,200 for the salary of a shipping commissioner at Rockland, Me., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill (H. R. 24023), which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—WILLIAM J. SEALS.

On motion of Mr. BRISTOW, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers in the case of William J. Seals, which are filed with the bill S. 4120, Sixty-second Congress, there having been no adverse report thereon.

Mr. PERKINS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 326) which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

SENATOR FROM ILLINOIS.

Mr. KERN. I desire to give notice that on Monday of next week, at the close of the morning business, I shall ask consideration of a matter of the highest privilege, the resolution declaring that WILLIAM LORIMER is not entitled to a seat on this floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The notice will be entered.

THE EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

Mr. BORAH. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Calendar No. 545 bill (H. R. 9061).

Mr. SIMMONS. I object.

Mr. BORAH. Notwithstanding the objection, I move that the Senate take up for consideration Calendar No. 545; and upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho——

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is the proposition?

Mr. SIMMONS. What is the bill?

Mr. BORAH. The 8-hour bill. I will say to the Senator that my opinion is it will not take 30 minutes to conclude the bill, but I may be in error as to that.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will say to the Senator that I dislike very much to object, and if he will wait until to-morrow morning, I think there will be no objection to taking up his bill and finishing it. But there are many Senators here to-day anxious to go on with the bill which we have been considering, and they will take time. I hope the Senator will let his bill go over until to-morrow, and I assure him, if he calls it up in the morning hour to-morrow, there will be no objection from this side.

Mr. BORAH. I shall accommodate the Senator if we can dispose of it to-morrow. One day will not make any particular difference. But I remind the Senator that the same statement has been made to me heretofore. I do not want it postponed too long.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yesterday, the Senator knows, we got into other matters——

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator thinks to-morrow I will not be opposed in the request, I will let it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. WARREN. I have no desire to interfere with this arrangement except to this extent: I ask that whatever arrangement is made be subject to appropriation bills, which has always been the rule.

Mr. BORAH. I am not going to make any more concessions. If there are any rules here which will put this bill out of the way, Senators will have to invoke the rule. Whatever rule there is, I will have to submit to. But this is the third time I have been personally requested to let the bill go over, and I do not want to have it occur again.

Mr. WARREN. I have no desire to interfere with the Senator's wishes. I do not oppose his measure. When it comes to unanimous consent or when it comes to a motion to take up the bill, I suppose we will all be allowed to express our opinion yes or no.

Mr. BORAH. I think so.

Mr. WARREN. As I said before, I think in these consent arrangements Senators ought to remember that we may want to report some of the appropriation bills and conference reports and have them considered. I do this only in the interest of the business of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The calendar is in order.

THE METAL SCHEDULE.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent for the resumption of the consideration of House bill 18642.

Mr. HEYBURN. I understood that the Senator from North Carolina moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair misunderstood him if he did. The Chair understood him to make a request.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will withdraw the motion, and request unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina has a right to make the request. If he desires to do that, he can. The Chair understood him in the first instance to ask unanimous consent.

Mr. HEYBURN. I object to its consideration by unanimous consent.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move, notwithstanding the objection, that the bill be taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina moves that the Senate resume the consideration of House bill 18642, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 18642) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from North Carolina. [Putting the question.] The ayes appear to have it, and the Senate resumes the consideration of the bill. The Chair is informed that there is no amendment pending to the bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. The matter has not yet been laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair so understood it by having the title read. The Chair will formally lay before the Senate the bill.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 18642) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, yesterday at the close of the session I was engaged in some discussion that was intended particularly for the ears of the Republican Members of this body. The fact is that any discussion of this question from a Republican is appropriately addressed to the Republican Members of the body.

The matter under consideration is one of political policy, and I use the term "political" as the equivalent of governmental policy. These propositions, submitted by those who are neither Republicans nor Democrats, do not, in my judgment—and I say it in all kindness—come within the same class; that is, of political questions, governmental questions. They originate from the spirit of dissatisfaction and discontent and antagonism in the contest for office. I attack no man's good faith when I say that. Men become obsessed with the idea that they want office, and they come to believe that in order to do so they must stand in a class by themselves; that there is no hope for them within the ranks of party organizations. They are often mistaken. It is often true that men who go outside of party organizations to seek preference in office would succeed better if they adhered to the recognized principles of their party. But their zeal misdirects them, and when they once get a certain distance from the shore it is very difficult for them to swim back, and very often they attempt to go toward the other side, and drown on the way. Can anyone cite me to an instance in the political history of this country when he did not drown on his way in the attempt? I say it in all kindness. Has there ever been one of these freaks that started from the Republican Party and started to swim out into the ocean of controversy and contest who reached either shore, and did not despair? I recall none in the history of the party, and I have taken that question up with some degree of care, and now I make the statement and the challenge to anyone to point to a single instance where a political offshoot ever started from either side where it was not lost between the lines and sunk into oblivion as a political organization. It has been going on all of my lifetime, and history records that it has been going on since the beginning of the Government.

I may be engaging in a vain enterprise when I am talking to the men who represent that place in politics.

But there are present some members of this party who entertain discontent, combined with ambition. They are personally up to the standard of the Senate so far as their individual honesty is concerned, but I can find no better word than to say that they are obsessed. They see one thing. They fix their eye upon it. It is an ignis fatuus. It is a star of deception, but they will fall into a thousand ditches in trying to walk directly to it, and by and by they walk into some ditches that are so deep that they drown and you just see the bubbles rising where they have gone down.

Is it possible that men are going to follow that in the hour of responsibility, with the lessons of the past in front of them?

The Republican Party is going to a great national contest. It is strong enough and right enough to win. It is entitled to the support of Republicans, and those Republicans should face the flag at the head of the column. The only possible thing that can defeat the success of the Republican Party is that these dissatisfied elements will undertake to march in a different direction from that being taken by the Republican Party.

The Republican Party is not always perfect. It is not always up to the high standards that should control it, as I spent some time yesterday in pointing out, but it is better than any other party, and the only field of hope lies within the scope of its horizon. There is no hope out in the floundering, wallowing ditches; there is no hope in a single sail upon the ocean; there is no fleet of strength and concentration of principle that will take it up in the midst of the ocean and rescue it from the waves and the turmoil that surround it in its loneliness, to which to say, "Lead us; become our leader." There is no hope for such a condition as that.

There is no moral reason why such a condition should exist. Every code of morals of a community in government or individually is against such a probability. Why should they? They have run away from the body of responsibility. They may be sailing in fancied sunshine and smooth waters, but to what end are they sailing? They have deserted the ship, the fleet to which they belong. Do you think you can go over into the Democratic fleet, take the leadership there, or ever be recognized as anything more than a useful adjunct to that party for temporary purposes? Do you believe in the principles of the Democratic Party? Then go there and do not claim to be Republicans hyphenated and multiplied. Old John Hickman, who sat in Congress 60 years ago, in a political speech made when I was a boy—and it made an impression on me, and, of course, it was not then new—described that kind of politics as assuming the cloak of virtue for the purpose of enabling you to do that which you dared not do openly. I recall another man who sat in Congress who said it was stealing "the livery of the court of Heaven to serve the devil in." Either of those expressions covers the field.

Senators who profess to be Republicans, who go into Republican caucuses, whose names are listed among the Republicans of this body have no right to go out of caucuses and disregard the rule of the majority of the Republican caucus. They have no right to do it in dealing fairly among men. The only thing they have to do, if they can not agree with their party as an organization, is to sever themselves from it, either refrain from activity in political life or join the other party or attempt to make a new party and go down among those I have described. But do not claim to be Republicans and to write that honored and honorable name upon your banners unless you are going to be Republicans.

Mr. President, I have it in mind to draw some comparisons, without going into specific figures, on the tariff question as it affected certain industries within this schedule. But before I enter upon that subject I desire to refer to a memorandum I have made, without detaining the Senate. Inasmuch as I have it in my mind to complete my remarks today, I will refrain from the temptation of dealing in specific figures, because this question should be decided upon principle, with due reference to figures. It is a question between the producer and consumer in this country primarily. I am not going to compare the American producer with the producer of any other nation in determining as to the measure of prosperity that our people are entitled to. A man is entitled to make a thousand per cent in this country, if he can do it without disregarding the rights of another person, and I would not admit that because that person could supply himself from Germany or some other country with the commodity involved in the purchase Congress could put a penalty upon our own citizens who would prefer to deal with our own citizens.

We use our foreign commerce for the purpose of producing a margin in our favor and drawing money from abroad. We have $2,000,000,000 invested in foreign commerce. I say "we"; I mean the people of the United States have $2,000,000,000 invested in that kind of commerce.

Mr. President, we have a great many times that sum invested in our own home business. We can cut the foreign commerce off and be always a solvent people. We can cut it out entirely, disregard it, and be a solvent people. We would not accumulate wealth as a whole. That is only accumulated by drawing upon the wealth of the outside world, with the exception of the production of gold and silver. We have added to our wealth, regardless of foreign trade or commerce, something over $3,000,000,000 by the production of money metals. That represents half of the wealth of the United States. We produce that from the ground. Producing agricultural crops or the forest proceeds add nothing to our wealth, because we consume it. We keep nothing of it except the buildings made from the lumber and the improvements upon the land, and that class of things, but from that which we eat or consume we gain no added wealth.

What has this to do with the tariff question? It has this: A people who can do that are entitled to the opportunity to do it without encroachment or competition or resistance from outside the country. That is what the protective tariff stands for. It stands to keep out of our field of production the people of other countries. We have no responsibility for them whatever. It is utterly immaterial to the people of this country from either a moral or a physical standpoint whether the people of Germany or England or France or any other country prosper or not. I am speaking now from a sense of governmental responsibility. We have no responsibility whatever for those people, and we have a responsibility for our own people and their success.

I was speaking yesterday toward the close of my remarks about the lead industry, and I was speaking of it as a text, because the rules and principles that apply to it apply generally. We have a community in Idaho where 31 or 32 years ago there was an absolutely unsettled country that produced nothing. It was not even a grazing field for cattle. It was a county. A vigorous, industrious old man, then long past the ordinary age at which men engage in any kind of endeavor, but who had been mining and prospecting during his life, went into that field and discovered gold in small quantities at first. It was all by his own personal endeavor. He was a crippled old soldier. He had received his wounds in battle, and barely recovered from those wounds so that he might go out into the frontier, from which he had come to engage in the war. He went out there, and he could only travel a few miles a day. He had an equipment of his own, a few pack horses and a saddle horse. He had heard from the Indians that there was gold in that country. He went to that section and camped at a place called Evolution—he called it Evolution; it had no name before. It was in the Bitter Root country. He went into camp there, and he found some gold in the stream by panning the sands. It was a little gulch; I know it well. It is called Prospect Gulch, because it was the first place of prospecting in that country. He worked there a while, and would take out enough gold—which is coin in that country, or equivalent to coin—to buy provisions. He would make a trip for provisions with those animals down to what was then Fort Sherman on the Coeur d'Alene Lake. He went down there and got provisions enough to last him a season and came back upon the encouragement he had received from that small stream.

He started over the range to see if there were any other gold-bearing sands on a larger scale. The old man's wounds were such that he would have to camp sometimes for a day or two and lie under a tree until he could gain strength enough to resume his journey. He was alone. He had only a portion of his pack train with him. But he made the journey. After a few days he reached Pritchard Creek, named after the man. Andrew J. Pritchard was the man to whom I refer. When he arrived there he was so exhausted that he had to lie idle for several days under a tree and allow his stock to find a living picking and grazing about. But as soon as he was able he took his pick and shovel and gold pan and explored the creek immediately around where he was camped and discovered that it was very rich in gold. He sent word to the outside world to his friends, "I have found rich gold diggings." I heard of it thousands of miles away. After he had written his friends personally, he published a statement in the newspapers in order that the whole world might know of the opportunities, and they flocked in there by the thousands. Some of them the first thing they did when they went in there was to jump the old man's claims, notwithstanding the fact that there were hundreds of thousands of acres adjoining them that were just as good and offered just as good opportunity as did Mr. Pritchard's. But with that disposition which unfortunately some possess they jumped his claims, and they wanted to hang him. There was an outfit that came in there that proposed to hang the old man, and if you could have seen him rise up and defy those people and offer battle to them you would have seen the kind of a man who goes to the front in this country and is the pioneer upon which the civilization rests. They did not hang him.

I am only giving you an idea of the way the development of this country came about. There seems to be an impression throughout this eastern country that a man goes there and pulls golden apples off of trees. Why, the hardship that precedes the discovery of these mines is inconceivable to those who have not come in contact with it. That man had to go into court and for years and years contend for his rights, and he won them. He lost them first before a jury of the same class who had participated in jumping his claim, but the cases went to the supreme court of the State and they gave him his claims, because he was entitled to them under the law.

Now, that is up to the point of the prospector. Of course, then the people went in there and they took millions and millions of dollars of gold out of those placer claims. The placer claims are the grubstake of a mining country. Without any exception the placer claims have been the foundation of the quartz or lode claims. While men are digging placer and the ground is being covered by claims, other men coming in with the intention of participating in the benefits of the placer claims, finding that the ground is taken out, wander out into the hills and mountains around and they find the lode claims.

Now, while those placer claims were in their prime, so to speak, this class of men who came in there expecting gold placers went out and discovered the great lode claims of that country; they discovered lead, silver-bearing ores, and zinc and copper. They discovered the country that has produced over $400,000,000 in metal values. It added that much to the value of the country. It was a substantial addition, not one that was eaten to-day and forgotten to-morrow, but a substantial wealth that entered into the building up not only of that country, but all the United States, a substantial wealth that avoided the necessity of paying the prices of the foreign producer because he was the only producer. Not only those mines have made a market for the proceeds of the hundreds of thousands of acres of land, but because those mines were there homemakers came to produce the necessities of life—wheat in the Palouse country lying adjacent and vegetables growing in the valleys in quantities inconceivable to those who have not specific knowledge, and a population incident to the production, until to-day, dependent entirely upon these mines, gathered around the original discoverer of them, we have a population of 100,000 people, who are there because the mines were there; and, in addition to that, we have the legitimate products of the mines, which taken altogether in that State of Idaho equal more than $500,000,000 in substantially indestructible wealth.

We lose sight of the distinction between destructible and indestructible wealth. The wealth that enters into the building of permanent things, that last practically forever, is more desirable than the wealth which goes into the daily comfort and livelihood of mankind. One gives comfort temporarily and necessarily; the other is the foundation of government. Government, reduced down to the last analysis, is substantially located and occupied humanity. Humanity unoccupied and unlocated does not and could not constitute government. It would be the government of the Arab in his tent, the government of the Indian on the trail, and that is not government in the sense that we use it. What we want is government fixed to the soil, with its houses, its fences, and its barns, and, above all, its titles, because that is the basis of right.

Out of this little beginning we have that civilization, and as we have it, so have all the people of this country, from the landing of the English at Jamestown, the Pilgrims in Massachusetts, the Swedes on the Delaware. We have the same class of beginning of a settlement as was represented by the old man, Andrew J. Pritchard, when he went into that country. The ore had been there since the very beginning of time; the opportunity had existed since the beginning of time; but here was a connecting link. Man's energy and the ore must be connected or based upon man's rights. Had it not been that Mr. Pritchard knew that upon the discovery of those mines he had rights connected with the discovery he would not have gone there. So there must be as a basis for government man and man's rights. Neither can stand alone. The right disassociated from the man is like the sunshine of the bygone centuries; the man disassociated from rights is helpless; he is in the same position as the Indian on the trail or the Arab in the desert. No government can rest upon such conditions; none could be founded.

That is a very fertile source for useful consideration when we are dealing with these questions, because I am talking for the rights of citizenship at home as distinguished from any possible responsibility that we may have for the consideration of the citizenship of other countries. I have attempted to picture the beginning of the homes of this country. Those people are a part of the Government, not ornaments. They bear the relation to the Government that the most responsible wheel in its machinery bears. They are the producers.

We have heard a great deal about the consumers here. Speeches have been made covering days in talking about the rights of the consumer. There would be nothing to consume if it were not for these producers. People could not live in the country as consumers except that the producing element is protected and sustained that it might produce; and I am talking about producers.

I am talking about sections of this country and interests and enterprises of this country that produce that which the consumer must have, and if we are let alone, if we are protected in the right that comes from settlement and the building up of government, we shall produce all that the people need in this country, and we shall produce a great deal more. Is not that a better presentation of the question under consideration than was the presentation based upon the consumer? That based upon the consumer is like the cat and the cook. The cat thinks the cook is of much more importance than the master of the house. Senators are not hungry, but they conjure up in their minds a condition of starvation and hunger, and then plead for it. It is basing your argument upon a dream; and when you wake up the dream and the argument have both passed away. My idea is to build up production, to encourage it so that the consumer will never lose a moment's sleep as to whether or not he is going to have enough to eat to-morrow. That is the ideal condition of government. The idea of discussing this question from the standpoint that we are at the mercy of the world and must have its products does not appeal to me. We are not. We can build a wall higher than the imaginary tariff wall around this country and multiply it many times, and we shall have within that wall the raw material for government and prosperity and greatness and happiness. If in the division of the water and the land there had been only this country above the water, it would have been a world equal to every opportunity and every demand of mankind; we would have been as prosperous and as happy had we never known of any other country than this. If between now and to-morrow morning you would cut the cables and sink the ships that connect us with other countries, we would be sufficient unto ourselves. We lose sight of that and assume that we must of necessity have the help of some other country and some other people in order that we may exist at all. It is that basic error that lies at the bottom of all this talk and the cheeseparing and hairsplitting that we have heard here as to the probabilities and the possibilities that if Germany should do this and Italy should do that and England should do something else, what would happen to us? Nothing would happen to us that would tend to our destruction or discomfort. Our own side of the House has fallen into that mistake to some extent. They have considered how intolerable it would be to lose the results of German labor and of German enterprise, rather than how tolerable it would be to produce the things ourselves. That we get the right point of view is important.

I was starting to say that I have here a statement from the head of the labor organization in our immediate mining country. It is not the American Federation of Labor or any of its branches, but it is an orderly organization of our miners that succeeded the disorderly organization that we drove out. I will show you what he says as to the effect of existing conditions upon actual business affairs. His name is John A. Rock, of Kellogg, Idaho. He is at the head of the organization of those who labor in the mines. We work about 4,000 men in those mines, and they produce from $15,000,000 to $22,000,000 a year. It is wealth that is never destroyed. It is not eaten up; it will be in existence—that is, the result of the labor will be in existence—when we are all gone, as a part of the substantial equipment of the affairs of men. That is the kind of industry that we especially want to protect, but we must protect them all.

Appearing before the committee, Mr. Rock said:

The miners of the Coeur d'Alene district feel that the proposed lead schedule of the Underwood bill is a grave menace to the present prosperity of the district; and they feel that if a change is made that causes a drop in the lead market they will be the first ones to suffer.

He is talking about the miners, the men who work in the mines.

I take it, gentlemen, that you will be interested in the number of men employed, their wages, and their living conditions.

In the Coeur d'Alene mining district of Shoshone County, Idaho, there are between 4,500 and 5,000 men actually engaged in mining.

That is, in productive mining.

The company that I am working for—one of the largest in the district—employs about 600. Of this number 60 per cent are American born. The foreigners we have are mostly Norwegians or Swedes or Cornishmen, all of whom have declared their intention to become American citizens or are already naturalized. The district is particularly free from Austrians, Italians, and Greeks. Considering that it is the American miner who usually does all the prospect mining at the smaller properties, I believe the average of 60 per cent Americans is maintained throughout the entire district.

Fifty per cent of the men who work for the same mine that I do are married men; and I believe this ratio is easily maintained throughout the district.

Board and room throughout the district is firmly fixed at $30 to $35 a month.

The wages of the men employed are as follows: Muckers, $3 and $3.50.

Those are what you would call shovelers; those are the men who go in after the blasts are fired and fill the cars with their shovels, who do that class of work in the mines. They are called "muckers"; in other words, they clean up the drift or the tunnel, or whatever it may be.

Machinemen, $3.50 and $4.

Those are the men who handle the drills. Whatever the class of drills happens to be, they are all of the same general character and, of course, these men must have certain skill as mechanics.

Timbermen, $3.50 and $4.

Those are in effect carpenters. They frame the timbers and put them in the mines. The timbering of one of those mines would probably be an interesting problem to one who had not seen it. They build them up thousands of feet in depth and length with the same care and precision with which you would build a house; they do not merely drive timbers into the ground to hold up a piece of rock, but they timber that mine so that if the timbers were taken out of there the structure would stand as firmly as a house. Then they generally fill in the waste between the timbers, unless they have some special reason to leave it open. Those are skilled workmen, and they get from $3.50 to $4 per day.

All underground helpers, such as skip tenders, car trammers, nippers, and timber rustlers, $3.50 to $4.

Those are the ordinary men who work as the names indicate.

Hoist men, motor men, and pump men, $4; millmen, blacksmiths, and machinists, $3.50 to $7.

They are paid according to the skill necessary to perform their duties.

Everywhere in the district the men underground are paid at least $3 a day. No one works for less than that, and the average price is at least $3.50. Everywhere men underground work only eight hours for a day's work.

There is another thing that I should like to have you know. The mining companies confine their business to mining. There is no mining company in the district that forces its employees to board at a certain company boarding house in which it has an interest or forces its married men to live in company houses. The residences of the different towns, which vary from $500 to $1,500 in cost, are quite generally owned by the miners themselves. In fact, I may say that the companies help their men in this way: That they will build a house for them and allow them to make payments on it until it is their own.

I pause there to say that the condition of affairs that makes this necessary is the direct result of the sustained market for the products of those mines, and it is sustained by reason of the tariff duties that discriminate in favor of the American product, because I need not bring proofs to establish the fact that Mexico can produce all the lead we produce and multiply it and that Mexican lead is produced under conditions where no man owns his own home, where the standard of living is at the lowest, where the wages are from 30 to 50 or 60 cents a day, and they produce lead under conditions not known in this country; that is to say, in many instances the lead is produced in connection with a higher percentage of silver than ours and at infinitely less cost both of production and of transportation and smelting or concentrating.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] offered an amendment to this bill in which he proposed to reduce the duty on lead bullion $5 a ton. That would only mean that they would smelt their lead ore on the Mexican side of the line—across the Rio Grande River, if you please, or wherever it was convenient—and ship it in with the advantage of $5 a ton against our mines producing lead in our country. The result is obvious.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. In this connection I would like to call the Senator's attention to the fact that when the miner who produces lead sells that lead to the smelter the settlement is made not upon the price of the ore, but it is made upon the price of bullion.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was just coming to that.

Mr. SMOOT. And if the rate upon the lead bullion is reduced, it would mean a reduction to the producer and not altogether to the smelter.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah has stated the situation accurately. I was proceeding to state it. There is no value in lead ore so long as it remains ore, any more than in building stone or road-making material. It has no value at all except for the bullion that it will produce. If you reduce the duty on bullion $5 a ton—and that is a very large reduction—you give the Mexican miner and ore producer the advantage of $5 over the American producer. The result would be that the smelters now operating in America upon the product of the American mines would go south of the line—and some of them have only to cross the river—and they would smelt Mexican ores produced by Mexican labor instead of smelting American ores produced by American labor. The result would be that the wages paid for mining ores would be paid in Mexico to Mexicans, and there would be comparatively no wages paid to American lead miners. The money paid for smelting ores and the capital invested in smelting would be a Mexican investment; and, of course, the corresponding value would be lost to the American side of the line. If you invest a million dollars in a mining and smelting plant in Mexico, it is of no benefit to those on the American side of the line, except that they may buy machinery on this side of the line, and that advantage is growing less and less all the time, for they can buy machinery in Germany or in England; and the Mexicans are just as close to those people in a business way as they are to us, and a little more so.

Now, there is the situation as affected by the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa which proposes this reduction on lead bullion. They came pretty near slipping it into the Payne-Aldrich bill, but I discovered it before it got too far and pulled it out. Of course there are always combinations of men and capital waiting for an opportunity of that kind.

I will proceed a little with this statement, because it is authentic and absolutely accurate. I have dealt with the question of the independence and freedom from control of monopoly or trusts that is enjoyed by the workmen in the lead mines. They do not have to live in boarding houses owned by the mines and have the price taken out of their pay roll; they do not have to deal at company stores and have the amount of their bill taken out of their pay roll; they get the amount of wages they have earned clear and free from everything, except that they themselves may have given orders against it. So that there is no grinding monopoly or trust over these men, who are strictly the product of the protective tariff policy of the Republican Party. During the time when we did not enjoy the benefit of that protection we did not have these conditions.

There is another point in connection with that. It seems to be assumed here that the product of the mines is uniform. Any mine and all mines will produce different qualities of ore. If the duty on lead is reduced to the level of the tariff duty under the Wilson-Gorman bill, lead goes down to 2½ cents a pound, because foreign competition can bring it in. In the last days of that system of tariff duties lead in the Coeur d'Alene country, the largest lead-producing country, was worth only 2½ cents a pound. That is $50 a ton. In order to get that ton of lead you had to mine 5 tons of rock, and it costs as much to mine a ton of rock as it does to mine a ton of solid ore or any other valuable thing. You had to mine 5 tons of the crude, as we called it, and you had to take that to a concentrator, which is a very expensive instrumentality, and concentrate it 5 into 1. That 1 ton would contain 60 per cent lead and the balance would be waste, except for the silver that was in it. In the average mine the ore would carry about 30 ounces of silver, 60 per cent lead, and the balance is waste. Now, that had to be shipped to the smelter and freight paid on the waste just as well as on the metal value.

That was the condition, and when you reduced the tariff so that the lead was worth only 2½ cents a pound after all this expensive process or treatment we had to leave 3 tons of ore on the dump to 1 that we could send to the mill, because those 3 tons that we left behind were not quite rich enough to yield any profit. Sometimes we could not send into market at all ore that required the reduction of 5 into 1. We kept it on hand, either in the mine or on the dump or in ore bins, because it would not pay the cost of production. So we had to do what we called rob our mines, taking out the high-grade ore that would bear the expense of treatment and shipping. It results not only in robbing the mine or else suspending operations, but it results in the waste of a very large percentage of the real quantity and value of the ores.

However, I will pursue this testimony a little further, and then I will take up another branch of it. Of the wages that were paid to these miners in this camp, in just one branch of this camp, one town, we have a record. He says:

The stores of the different towns are in the hands of men who have made their money by saving their wages when working for mining companies.

Then the witness says:

Within the last year in my home town there have been erected an $18,000 bank building, a $16,000 grocery-store building, a $36,000 hotel, and a $15,000 furniture store, all of which are owned by private parties who have saved their money.

We have a $40,000 Y. M. C. A. building in Kellogg, which the Bunker Hill Co. built, and toward which the treasurer's report for the year just ended shows they donated $3,232.78 for current expenses, against which the membership fees of men employed by the company amounted to $2,209.

That gives evidence of the relation which exists between these high-class men, living under protective conditions, and the companies they work for, and yet men writhe in agony and wring their hands over the oppressed and downtrodden workingmen of this country. As is true of that particular section, so it is true of all our great mining sections. It is because the conditions are such that they can exist and do these things that they do them. It is proposed to change those conditions and render these people unable to live thus.

In the community of Wardner-Kellogg—

That is a town that merges, runs together—

In the community of Wardner-Kellogg we have five churches, which support three ministers independently and two more in connection with Wallace.

The whole district supports five different high schools, all of which prepare the pupils to enter the university. A boy can stay at home, passing a grade a year, until he is 18 years old. There are 700 children of school age in the Wardner-Kellogg school district, 600 in the Wallace district, 300 in Mullin, 250 in Burke and Mace, and 200 in Murry.

Then he gives the cost of maintaining these various institutions, which statement I will ask to put into the RECORD without reading it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter is as follows:

I have here some of the costs of maintenance:

The average cost per pupil for the last three years in Wardner was $48.40 per annum; in Kellogg, $47.87; in Mace, $82.20; in Wallace, $42.50. These figures do not include money expended on buildings. The present average monthly salaries in Wallace are $2,350; in Mullan, $1,250; in Mace, $650; in Burke, $780; in Wardner-Kellogg, $2,500.

This information is given me by the State superintendent of schools.

The district at Burke has recently built a new $21,000 concrete high school, and Nyhone district has voted, no more than a month ago, $25,000 for a new high-school building. Whether that will be put up or not I think depends on the price of lead.

Now, gentlemen, I have shown you some of the things that the miners of my district are doing. I take pride in adding that the local union to which I belong has donated over $1,000 to the churches of the town, has built a pavilion at a cost of $2,000, and equipped a lodge room over the Y. M. C. A. at a cost of $2,500 more in a little more than a year. The fact that we can afford to do these things shows that labor is in good, healthy circumstances.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then he calls attention to another feature:

Another thing I should like to bring to your attention is this: The mines are particularly liberal in helping anyone who wishes to secure a college education. I came to the Bunker Hill and Sullivan mine with a high-school education, and was able, through my own efforts and because of the way they helped me, to work my way through three years of the University of Idaho. I know of practically hundreds of other boys who have secured a college education by working in the Coeur d'Alene mines. The mine owners are very liberal in every respect, and help as much as they can men who are trying to get an education.

Then he says, in answer to a question which I asked him—and I read the question:

Senator HEYBURN. Right there, let me ask this question: It is customary, is it not, for the young men from the university to engage in these mines in various capacities during their vacations every year?

Mr. ROCK. Yes, sir.

Senator HEYBURN. And it has been the custom for years?

Mr. ROCK. Yes, sir.

Senator HEYBURN. It has been the means of their earning enough money to go through the university?

Mr. ROCK. Yes, sir. These universities are scattered all over the United States, and we have men there from the eastern universities as well as the western ones. Every summer boys come there from Yale, Harvard, Princeton, Columbia, and the various universities that have mining schools in connection with them.

Senator HEYBURN. They come to the mines and spend their summers there?

Mr. ROCK. Yes, sir.

Senator HEYBURN. Receiving employment as well as practical experience and education?

Mr. ROCK. Yes, sir.

There is another feature—

He says—

There is another feature that I wish to mention in passing, gentlemen. I was in the Coeur d'Alene mining district in 1907, during the panic, when the price of lead went down. Two or three of the largest mines there were forced to close at that time, and practically every mine in the district was forced to curtail the number of men it employed. It is a general assumption among all the men of that district—it is common knowledge, in fact—that when the price of lead in the New York market goes below 4 cents most of the mines can not run.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Cummins	Lodge	Shively
Bacon	Curtis	McCumber	Simmons
Bailey	du Pont	McLean	Smith, Ariz.
Borah	Fall	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ga.
Brandegee	Fletcher	Myers	Smoot
Bristow	Gallinger	O'Gorman	Sutherland
Bryan	Gronna	Oliver	Thornton
Burnham	Heyburn	Overman	Tillman
Burton	Hitchcock	Page	Townsend
Chamberlain	Johnson, Me.	Perkins	Watson
Chilton	Johnston, Ala.	Pomerene	Wetmore
Clark, Wyo.	Jones	Reed	Williams
Clarke, Ark.	Kern	Root
Cullom	Lippitt	Sanders

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The Senator from Idaho.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I have read that it was the custom at sea, when one vessel captured another or when a vessel earned prize money, in determining the portion of it that should go to the captain and the portion of it that should go to the sailors, they threw it up on a ladder, and that which adhered to the rounds of the ladder went to the seamen and that which fell through belonged to the captain. The success of a division was estimated by the result of that rule.

Mr. President, I really have something to say that I want to say to Senators in regard to this proposition. I want them to give me their attention, if they will, for a few minutes. We have heard much talk about the production of the mines and the division of the result of that production between labor and other costs and profits. There is a vast field of mining in which it is all outgo and no income for years and years. Some of the largest mines in the United States expended hundreds of thousands of dollars, extending over years and years of working and waiting, before they realized a dollar.

Mr. THORNTON. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator from Idaho, I will say I am leaving to attend a committee meeting. He said he would like to have the attention of Senators. I am only leaving in order to attend a committee meeting.

Mr. HEYBURN. I would not have the Senator remain against his interest and wishes.

I want to call attention to the fact—and it is a fact—that the mines of the United States have cost more than they have produced; that is to say, the cost of making mines is greater than the production from mines. But do not make the mistake of thinking that that is a reason for abandoning the search for mines. It is loss to one man and gain to another. The nonproductive mine that buys machinery contributes just as much to the labor and cost of making that machinery as the productive mine that buys it contributes. The nonproductive mine has furnished employment to just as many men as the productive mine has furnished employment to. The nonproductive mine pays out in wages practically as much as the productive mine, and thus the country is benefited to the extent of the application of the wages so paid to the commercial business of the country. The man who works in a nonproductive mine receives the same wages as the man who works in a productive mine. He expends just as much or as great a proportion of his wages with the store for the various purposes. He lives in a home and has a family and contributes to the commercial life of the country. He is doing it because it is through that process that the productive mines are ultimately produced.

I have in mind one of the very great mines of the world. These things occurred under my observation. Men with a reasonable amount of money took a bond on it, agreeing to pay so much at a certain time at their option. They expended over a hundred thousand dollars—and I think I might multiply that—equipping the mine with a plant—the machinery and all the appliances for mining. Finally they had reached a point where they had lost confidence in their investment. Having expended this money and maintained a whole community, on the last shift of work, the last row of holes they ever intended or expected to put into that mine broke into the ore bodies of the Standard mine.

They took up the bond. They have produced and paid in dividends millions and millions of dollars, and it has furnished employment to hundreds and thousands of men. It built a town about it. It built up a citizenship; it built schools; it built churches; it educated the children. I know boys who went from there to the university who are to-day serving the Government of the United States as accredited officers.

All these things came from what was for years a nonproductive mine. All nonproductive mines do not become productive mines in the way of producing ore for the owners, but they are productive mines to the community. We expend just as much money in that Coeur d'Alene country on nonproductive mines in the year as we expend upon productive mines, and the community derives the benefit from it. A fair percentage of them become productive mines—sometimes at the end of a month, sometimes at the end of a year, and sometimes at the end of 10 or 20 years. We have mines that for 20 years were merely a matter of expense to the owners until on some fortunate day the ore was found and the story was rewritten. Now, do not imagine for a moment that it is only the people in that environment who benefit from those mines. Much of the merchandise that they purchase comes from the looms of this coast. The iron that they furnish a market for is made in your foundries, mined from your mines by labor paid and expended here in this country. You have whole towns and communities that exist because of the nonproductive mines in the United States.

How long do you suppose those nonproductive mines would pursue their quest for ore if you would remove the duty or reduce the duty on lead below a protective basis? They are mining there and staying by their endeavor in the confidence that Republican tariff duties will be maintained, and they would not remain there, they would not go there, except for their confidence in the stability of the Republican administration and a government in accordance with Republican principles. They represent hundreds of thousands of men engaged directly and indirectly in those enterprises. They went from your firesides, many of them; they went out there because you had no opportunity open to them. You had nothing to offer them that, in their judgment, was equal to the opportunities of that country. Do you want us to send them back to you broke, because you have made unprofitable the occupation that they went out there to engage in?

Then, again, hundreds of thousands of men and women in these eastern countries have interests in those enterprises, productive and nonproductive. They are genuine, substantial investments. Do you want them to have the evidence of their interest sent back to them stamped "of no value," because you have destroyed and stricken down the interest in which they were engaged?

When they come back to you, what will you do with them? Will you put them to work in your mills and factories? You are proposing with the same stroke to strike down the mills and factories, and if the disengaged and unemployed people from the West and from the East were to start they might meet in the great Mississippi Valley. What would they do with them? What have they to offer them? They have not the land any more. The land is occupied. They would go to the land in our country, but you have tied it up. You have made it so burdensome and onerous for a man to get a home on the public domain that few will attempt it. They ridicule the idea. They say, "Do you think I am going down here to run the gantlet of a lot of inspectors who are seeking not how to make it possible for a man to find a home, but rather how to prevent him from finding a home?" So they will not turn toward the land. You have tied up the forests so that they can not work in the forest. What are you going to do with the unemployed?

Recently I saw the captain of the unemployed, and I take the liberty of mentioning his name, because it has been mentioned so often here. He is Col. Coxey. He represents the inevitable result of legislation that stops industry or discourages it. It may not cause every man to be idle. I do not undertake to say that every machine shop would stop work, that every factory and foundry would be closed. I only undertake to say that that would result to the extent that a very large proportion of those now having employment would not have it, and you can not answer me as to what you will do with those people. I challenge anyone here or elsewhere to tell me how you would dispose of the unemployed that would result from the passage of this measure. You can not take care of them at home in any section of the country. Would you try to foist them on some other part of the country? You would send them from the eastern town into the wheat fields if it was harvest time, and if it was winter you would try to send them into the lumber, but you would find no employment for them, because those industries, too, would have received a blow to which the chestnut blight is ambrosial.

You have got a serious question, and we are not treating it as seriously as it should be treated. I do not say we are jockeying with it, but some are proposing to jockey with it. I am not going to join in such a process or proceeding. Before we do that which will inevitably result in stagnation of business and opportunity and pass generations over unprovided for I want to know the alternative. If we had a great war, we might send regiments by the thousand away and let them be shot or take the chances of it. You might as well do so as to send them out into that field of the unemployed that we once saw. I saw them. I happened to be here when they came camping and marching down here.

I first saw them when they started on the first car loaded with Coxey's army at Oakland, in California. I followed that car until it came East. It came up over the railroad to Portland, Oreg., and then up the Columbia River. I saw them paddling their way across the Coeur d'Alene Lake on logs, sitting there like frogs, each man on a log, some logs with two men on them, trying to get across the lake. Then I saw them capture the freight train. They kept losing after that. The conditions were not as pleasant as had been promised them. I said to one of them when I saw him in Oakland, "Where are you going?" He says, "We are going to Washington," in just as cheerful a mood as though he were going down to a camp fire to have a good time. I said, "What are you going to Washington for?" "Oh," he said, "we are going down there to adjust things." He said, "We have a large organization, and we have a great man at the head of it, and when we get there they will pay attention to us."

I did not care to enter into an argument with him, but I remembered it, and when I saw that same man in Spokane I talked to him and asked him, "How are you getting along?" "Oh, we are getting along all right, but they are making it very hard for us—the railroad companies." So I said, "Why not get tickets and ride in the car like other people?" He said, "Oh, well, that is against our principles. We are not going to do that. We are exercising a right of citizenship." And he delivered a lecture on the Constitution of the United States and the inalienable rights a man has under it. I went up home. My residence then was at Osborne, which is a suburb of the city in which I now live. I saw that man when he came along. He had paddled himself across the lake on a log and had had many vicissitudes and some hunger. I said to him, "Do you not think you are about tired of this?" He said, "I am getting pretty tired of it." I said, "If you will look around here I can get you a job." The result was that he got a job driving a team and in six months he owned that team. He bought it, and it was the foundation of his business as a teamster in that country, and he never got to Washington.

But I saw them here, some of them. Now, are you going to bring about those conditions? That has been charged with being sensational, but like conditions produce like results. The question is, Are you going to turn a lot of men loose to look for employment where there is no employment for them? Are you going to do it in the interest of the laboring men of Europe or the laboring women of Europe? Are you going to take the chances on doing it? That is more important. It is easy enough to say, "We are not going to do that; our policy will afford these people just as much opportunity to labor and prosper as that which you propose."

But you have only to read back within your own easy recollection; and I ask you, Are you going to take a chance on it? Have you a right to take the chances? You came here to represent those people. They individually are not capable of running a government. They are capable of exercising the rights of citizenship, and those rights vary according to the capacity of the citizen. It is all nonsense to say that one man is as capable as another to engage in the direct election of a President of the United States, or of a United States Senator, or of any other officer. They are capable to perform that part of the duty adapted to their ability; that is all.

I have seen a lot of twaddle in the papers, and have heard a lot of it in speech, condemning men who dared to say that all men are not equally capable of being judges, or Senators, or Presidents, or bricklayers, or carpenters, or any other labor. Yet you are going to try—I hope you will not succeed—but you are going to try to take away from these people the opportunity. Because you want to give it to the foreigner? Would you rather have foreign goods than home-made goods? No matter how cheaply you could buy them, would you rather buy your coat of a foreigner and thus deprive your own fellow citizen of the right, at least, to contribute toward the making of it; to furnish something that went into it?

You will say that you would not prefer to see a foreigner make your coat than to have it made at home. Would you rather have a coat made of foreign wool than of domestic wool, if you could get it for the same price? Yet you have said in defense of the measure that you are urging that you want to put them on an equal footing. Even one of the foolish platforms upon which the Republican Party went down to defeat said that. The people said, "No; are we not any better or have we not any more rights than a foreigner? Has the Republican Party reached that stage of degradation that it would put us only on an even footing with a Mexican or a foreigner of any country?" Is there nothing to be proud of in the fact that you are an American citizen? Are you not distinguished above all men on earth because you are an American citizen? Then why be content with saying we shall be exactly on an even footing with foreigners in the great household of the government of production and consumption?

Now, if you put our mines where we will be in competition with Mexican miners you will close our mines. That is no idle boast, because men are not going to mine ore merely for the sake of being industrious. I have said about all I desire to say in regard to the lead subject.

The conditions that exist in Idaho in regard to this matter are not dissimilar to those that exist in Missouri, or in Colorado, or in Utah, and some other leading mining sections. The result of a reduction of the duty upon the product of these mines will be about the same, varying only according to the variance in local conditions. I do not imagine that any one of those who are acting with the Democracy in regard to this matter will strike this blow at lead and the lead-mining industry. Yet it rests exactly on the same principle as other articles.

Mr. President, it was not my intention to confine myself to a discussion of the lead schedule. What is true of the lead schedule is true of the zinc schedule, or the items of zinc and lead in Schedule C. Zinc is mined under the same circumstances. The wages of the miners are the same, the cost of production is the same. We have zinc mines and zinc concentrating mills right in the midst of our lead mines and lead mills.

Mr. Samuels, who is the principal owner of one of these mines and mills, appeared before the committee and made a statement that is unanswerable in favor of his contention that a reduction of duties would close the mill. Senators have doubtless given attention to it in reading the report of the proceedings before the committee. The zinc industry is very new in that country, but its possibilities are unlimited, and the question is whether the mines will lie there in idleness or whether they will be developed, whether they will produce occupation for labor, whether they will afford opportunity for commercial investment and business enterprise, or whether they shall lie there as they did for unknown centuries. The real wealth of this country is in the ground, and the people have a right to have the opportunity to avail themselves of the benefit of that wealth. It is a right. It is not something to be doled out to them at the pleasure of a coterie of men. We are sent here to protect the people in their rights, and it is a duty that rests upon us.

I have taken a single State merely as a text. We have other industries resting upon the same basis. We have spent millions of dollars to irrigate our lands, in order that they might produce crops. That is in southern Idaho, in what is known as the semiarid region. Of what avail is it to have expended that money if we destroy the market for the crops that grow upon the land by reason of the expenditure of that money? If you are going to destroy the market—that is, the market for the American product—of what avail is it to those people that the factories can run on foreign raw materials?

When we come to discuss the wool bill we will be confronted with that proposition. When we come to discuss the lumber schedule we will be confronted with an equally important one.

But it is the schedules in the aggregate that count and that are important. No greater evil was ever inflicted upon the country than this idea of revising the tariff by schedules. There is no possible opportunity to balance them one against the other. There is no single schedule in our tariff law that does not bear directly a responsible and dependent relation to every other schedule. The men who work in the mines are the market for the men who work on the farms. The men who work in the foundries are the market for the men who till the land, who make the shoes, who weld the iron, who mine in the ground. How can you intelligently establish a schedule involving a class of articles without considering at the same time the effect that it will have upon every other schedule? I have stood here for years contending against this fragmentary way of dealing with the tariff law. The Republican Party has denounced it as impracticable and impossible. Of what avail is it to make rules that would insure prosperity to the iron and steel schedule unless we at the same time take into consideration the rates and duties that affect the men who are engaged in the enterprises that foster and support and make a market for the products? What matters it if the Steel Trust can produce a thousand tons or a million dollars' worth of an article or commodity if it has no market for it? How can it have a market unless the people to whom it would sell have prosperity and money enough to buy their product? How can those people have prosperity and money enough unless they too in their turn are protected against the encroachment of foreign competition in what they produce and what they use? Of what avail is it if we protect the farmer if the farmer has no market? How can the farmer have a market among unpaid and unemployed people? How can he have a market among those who have nothing wherewith to buy? I am simply illustrating the fallacy of this idea of revising a tariff by schedules.

If we pass this steel schedule and have done all the harm that we can to those who mine ore and convert it into articles of usefulness and then do not revise any other schedule, we have destroyed the balance in the commercial law between those commodities. Suppose we revise the steel schedule or the metal schedule, and then revise the lumber schedule, we have put in antagonism two of the greatest industries of this country, an antagonism that they themselves are powerless, under the law which we have laid down for them, to adjust. Suppose that we open the competition of foreign production to the products of the farm, as was sought to be done in the Canadian reciprocity bill, so that the farmers of this country have not sufficient protection to keep out the products of their neighboring countries, where is the market for the products of the people of this country? Will they sell to the operatives of the metal schedule and those who make iron in its various forms? They will be out of business; they will be closed up; the owners will be off enjoying the spas of Europe while the workingmen will go home wondering and waiting when they will again be employed. The farmer will have no market for his products in a bankrupt community of laboring men. I repeat that it is impossible intelligently to reform the tariff laws by schedule, and especially do I insist on that to the Members of this side who have been carried away with such a theory.

Mr. President, I desire to place in the RECORD a table which is found on pages 769 and 770 of the testimony of Mr. Burbidge. This table gives the statistics in regard to the production of mines and wages and other matters directly applicable to this question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho ask permission to have the table printed in the RECORD?

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unless there is objection, such will be the order.

The table referred to is as follows:

Mr. HEYBURN. For whom is it we are proposing to make this sacrifice, Mr. President? We are proposing to give employment to men who neither owe nor contribute to citizenship of this country in time of war and who fight it in time of peace. The other day, in one of the courts in the State of Washington, a man applying for papers of citizenship was asked by the judge whether in time of war he would fight for Italy or the United States. He was a candid man, and he said, "I would fight for Italy, of course." And the judge refused to grant him citizenship. We are proposing to take these nonproductive people and give them an advantage, I will say, in order to be conservative, equivalent to our own citizens without imposing upon them any of the responsibilities or burdens of citizenship. Will we do it? That is the question. If Congress does it, will the American people sustain them in doing it? The American people never have sustained them when they have attempted to do it. It has always been a single lap with the party that did it.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. NEWLANDS. May I ask the Senator from Idaho whether, in his investigations in committee regarding the tariff, he has found any duty which can be safely reduced without injury to the American workingmen or without turning over their jobs to foreign workingmen?

Mr. HEYBURN. First, by paring down the profits in this country.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will ask the Senator whether, in his investigation, he has found any such duty?

Mr. HEYBURN. I have found a great many duties that might be pared down by paring the individual down to fit the duty; but I was opposed to that. I am not in favor of paring the American citizen down to the size of a foreigner.

Mr. NEWLANDS. What I wished to ask the Senator was, whether, consistently with the protective principle and with the full protection which he stands for of the American workers, certain reductions could not be made in what are regarded as the excessive duties of this tariff and whether any such have come under his observation?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I saw no place where the paring down of the duty would not pare down the prosperity of the American citizen.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator, then, regards the existing tariff as a perfect tariff and one not requiring any change or alteration?

Mr. HEYBURN. Perfect? No; no law was ever perfect.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Well, I will modify it.

Mr. HEYBURN. Satisfactory.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator, then, regards it as satisfactory, and one that does not require any change?

Mr. HEYBURN. As satisfactory as any tariff law could be, especially one enacted under the circumstances that surrounded the enactment of that law. There should have been no revision of the tariff at that time. Conditions had not changed between the making of the Dingley law and the time when we took up that question under a threat of the Democracy. The Democracy can look fiercer and its threats can be more terrifying sometimes than the nerves of a certain class of Republicans can stand, and they get nervous and confused and yield when they ought not to.

Mr. NEWLANDS. May I ask the Senator another question, and that is, whether the reductions made in the Payne-Aldrich bill from the Dingley tariff have, in the judgment of the Senator, proved prejudicial to the interests of the American workingman?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; I answer that unhesitatingly.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I should be very glad to have the Senator suggest some instances of that kind.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is for the Senator from Nevada to suggest any instances in which they have proved beneficial. That is the side to reason on. We are not here to experiment on how close we can cut to the nerve; we are not here in the position of a vivisectionist standing over a tied animal to see how nearly we can extinguish his life without doing it; but we are here to see how strong we can make the workingman and to add to the strength, to the possibilities, and to the conditions of prosperity.

Prosperity seems to be a beast of hideous mien to a Democrat. My attention has been most forcibly called to that. I am not making any invidious comparisons when I say that. I am speaking of the Democrat who is the composite of all Democrats, so that he has no personality about him, and I can say what I please about him. In 1884 Republican prosperity had resulted in a large surplus of $60,000,000. We would think it large now, and I heard those figures rolled out in oratorical beauty up in the country where I live. Men were going up and down talking about the surplus. It surprised them. A Democrat had never seen a surplus, you know, at all. I could name a lot of them who were old dyed-in-the-wool Virginia and West Virginia and Kentucky Democrats. That surplus made them miserable. They would sit up nights and worry about the surplus. That was their whole argument—surplus prosperity to the whole people. Now, their cry is the same in that it is that the individual is too prosperous. You want to shave him down to fit within the armor of the antiquated Democracy. It is just like we see to-day men trying to put themselves into the armor of the days of the Lilliputians. We will not engage in that with you. We will stand out in the opposite direction, and not try to see how closely we can pare the prosperity of American citizens, but will see how broad we can build them and what margin of expansion we can give to them. We are not content ever with the prosperity of the American citizen. We want him to have the opportunity to increase it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to know whether the Senator from Idaho agrees with ex-President Roosevelt, who will possibly be the next presidential candidate of the party to which the Senator belongs, when that ex-President intimates that the workingman in America does not receive in his pay envelope the benefit of the protective tariff for which the Senator from Idaho is speaking?

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not give heed to the nod and beck of monarchs. The Senator from Nebraska uses the words "when that ex-President intimates." The intimation of no man controls or influences my judgment. I require him to put the responsibility of formulated speech behind the principle that he advances.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will quote the language, if the Senator from Idaho will then reply to it. I have here an extract from what the ex-President has recently said.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I would allow almost anything, from an editorial in the Age of Reason up—I start at the very bottom—I would allow almost anything to be read into my speech but that kind of a document. I do not desire that to be read into my speech because I shall send out the message, which I am uttering here to the extent of my ability, in order that at least a portion of the people of the United States may have the benefit, if it is a benefit, of my views; and I do not propose to pay for the expense of printing and sending out that document nor any like it. I am not distributing that kind of literature this season. [Laughter.]

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield further to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. HEYBURN. I object to that document being injected into my speech. I do not object to things that the Senator may say on his own responsibility, but I do not care to have any speech injected. I like to be interrupted by Senators, because it enables one to meet the thoughts that otherwise we would not have any opportunity to know.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let me ask whether the Senator objects to having quoted the statement which has just recently been made by the great Republican leader who will be the standard bearer to lead the Senator from Idaho in the approaching campaign?

Mr. HEYBURN. The Republican Party has not yet selected its leader, and the Democrats are enjoying considerable unction in selecting leaders for the Republican Party. After the Republican Party has selected its leader and said to that leader upon what principles he shall stand I not only will welcome, but I will rejoice in having the Senator inject it into my speech, but let us——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I want to remind the Senator——

Mr. HEYBURN. Let us mark time, now, for awhile until the Republican Party has organized its army.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I want to remind the Senator from Idaho that after his party has selected this eminent ex-President and leader it will then be too late for me to inject this quotation into the speech which the Senator is now delivering.

Mr. HEYBURN. That may be something in favor of my present attitude. [Laughter.]

I was talking of the market of the producer. The market is as variable as the product. What relation do our citizens bear to this Government? I hear it discussed here every day from the standpoint that the citizen is a vassal and that the Government is a master. Many men have gone on the rocks upon that mistake. The men who grow comfortable and smug in office are dangerous to themselves and to the people, because no man has title to an office except at the will of the people.

I am not inclined to indulge in this talk about the common people. From the standpoint of citizenship there are no common or uncommon people in this country. From the standpoint of personal equipment there is every grade of person in this country. Some are competent to perform the highest duties, and some are competent to perform no duties.

Now, we have a school growing up—I will not use that word "growing"; it attempted to grow—that would contend that all men are equal in their ability to participate in government, and that seeks to endow them with the opportunity. Nothing could be more dangerous in the world. They harp upon the expression in the Declaration of Independence and in their own imagination upon the phrase "All men are free and equal." Many of them do not know where the expression originated. Free and equal before the law in their rights; yes; and I would stand for that always, and the Republican Party stands for it.

All men have equal rights before the law, and it is upon that basic principle that this Government was founded. Whether they are allowed to exercise them or not is a question that I will not at this time enter upon. They have that right; but it does not follow that all men are equal to the performance of the duties of citizenship. There is a political school that contends that they are; that contends that the man who lives back in the clearing district and reads one paper or none is as capable of voting on the choice of a President by direct vote, or on the selection of a Senator, as the man endowed with the ordinary equipment of intelligence and education. I will never consent to such a doctrine.

The question of the direct election of Senators by the vote of the individual citizen is as rank a fallacy as ever was undertaken to be incorporated into a great system of government. They are capable of selecting a neighbor who shall speak for them. A man needs a very much less degree of intelligence and capacity to select a man whose judgment is to represent a question. He does not need to know about the question itself. Every day you hear men say: "Well, I do not know anything about that question; I leave that to your judgment." You hear it here in the Senate; you hear it in the committee room. Men say, "I have not given attention to that; but if you have looked into it and investigated it I will accept your judgment." And yet they would take a man who has no capacity to judge, who has the same rights under the law, but who is incapable of exercising the rights, and they would put him where he might, by a rank want of knowledge, destroy the Government. I only say that in passing, in speaking of this question of citizenship, and I am not afraid to say it. If a man came to me and reproached me for having said it, and claimed that he had been misjudged, I would put him on the defensive; I would say, "All right; do you know this candidate? Have you ever seen him or read a word that he has written or heard a word that he has spoken?" "No." "Do you know men who know him and who know as to his capacity?" "No; I do not know anybody who knows him." "Well, how is it that you are going to cast your vote for him?" "Well, he is an insurgent"—he would not say that; he would say, "He is a progressive, and I am going to vote for him."

I am tired of this word "progressive." I am tired of hearing men usurp the use of a word as a watchword to which they are not entitled. Is it progressive to attempt to change the organic law of the land by destroying a part of it? Is it progressive to take away from the judgment of the courts that finality that has stood as a bulwark of our institutions? Is it progressive to turn over the exercise of representative government to the hands of an irresponsible democracy? Is that progress? I said they have usurped the word. They have undertaken to usurp a great word as a name for their proposed action to be written upon their banner. I will not concede it to them.

Is not a party progressive that has administered the affairs of this Government from the days of its puny existence until this time, with the results that confront us? Would you dare say that the great Republican Party has not been progressive when it has shown itself capable of saving the Nation from destruction and reorganizing it, of reorganizing the great financial system of this Government, of inaugurating a settlement system that has resulted in the population of a vast territory that was vacant when they found it, and of bringing about the prosperity of the individual and the combination of individuals? Do you say that is not a progressive party? We are doing what we have done too often. Merely because somebody claims something we are conceding that they are entitled to it, because we are too tired to combat their contention; and it is to this element that we are to-day indebted for the difficulty that confronts us in enacting this legislation—the element that has arrogated to itself the right to be termed "progressive" and that has denounced the Republican Party as being retrogressive. This organization has no record to stand on; it never accomplished anything. Compare its record with that of the Republican Party and the comparison becomes odious. I want to locate the trouble this afternoon and place the responsibility upon it, and say to men, "Are you going to insist on the stand you have taken, or are you going to be manly and say, 'We were mistaken; we thought we had correct ideas of government, which, if applied, would be beneficial; but experience has taught us that our wisdom, measured individually or in the aggregate, is not the equal of that of the organized Republican Party.'"

The Republican Party is a principle; it is not men. Men come and go; they live and die; and it makes no difference what name a man bears who is chosen to speak for the principles of the Republican Party, just as our Government itself has stood for a principle from the beginning.

I read a speech of a man within a day or two who spoke of the origin of the United States of America. He said that the origin of the term "United States of America" was in the Constitution. The United States of America existed by name before the Constitution was framed. It was the United States of America that made the Constitution. The term "United States of America" was used in the Articles of Confederation. We did not form a new Government when we made the Constitution; we adjusted the instrument to the changed conditions; and in that instrument we declared for the preference rights of American citizenship.

I am not making these animadversions upon those who have undertaken to build up a new party with any spirit of malice or disdain on my part. I recognize the fact that we are confronted by a grave situation, and we come to you with pleadings, with respectable and respectful insistence, and ask you to stay the hand that would despoil a great party with a great history; to be patient in the councils of that party; and to yield to the majority of it. That is all we ask of you. We ask of you not to give aid and comfort to the enemy of the Republican Party. Is that an unreasonable request? Suppose you are right, you are more likely to obtain what you seek in the Republican Party than you are out of it.

I see Senators looking up the question as to the origin of the name "United States of America." I trust they have found that I am correct.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator was quite correct, but he did not go quite far enough back for it. He should have gone to the Declaration of Independence.

Mr. HEYBURN. No; they were merely free colonies then.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Declaration of Independence in the concluding paragraph says:

> We, therefore, the representatives of the United States of America—

And so on.

Mr. HEYBURN. Well, I may not have been broad or wide enough or long enough in my statement, but I certainly was correct so far as I stated it upon that view without refreshing my mind.

There is not a Democrat on the other side who will change his views on the tariff question because of anything said on this side, and while I am pleased to give them the benefit of what I may say, I am not hoping to obtain any converts. But I do hope and I do pray that those who would resist the Republican principle of protection, which is protection which protects, will see the error of their way, come into the Republican Party, and stay there; and if you do not get what you think you are entitled to just as soon as you arrive, wait and labor and fight within your own party.

The situation is like a man who, belonging to one army in struggle with another, goes out between the lines and jumps up and down and hollers, denouncing both, one at one time and another at another time, and lands nowhere, while he is liable to fall between both fires. Stay by the army that you enlisted with. If your cause is just, you are more apt to win in the Republican Party than anywhere else, and if it is unjust you ought not to win anywhere. There is no place in the world that will more nearly convince a man of his errors than in the party; but he does not want side conferences.

When a tree is growing, in its early stages or at almost any stage, we often see sprouts that go up from the roots—suckers, they call them—and if you leave them on the tree they draw from the life of the tree. When you go out to look for fruit, you do not look on the sprouts for it; you expect the fruit to be on the tree. There is no hope for the sprout. There never comes a time when the sprout accomplishes or amounts to anything. You have to depend upon the tree, and that is all that this movement means.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Suppose that in the course of time the main trunk, the original tree, becomes diseased, and limb after limb falls off; then what becomes of the sucker, so called?

Mr. HEYBURN. I presume probably it would die when the roots die.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. No; the sucker establishes a new root for himself, and becomes the dominating power over the old stump. I say, with all due respect to the distinguished Senator, that that is about the condition of the Republican Party.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes, Mr. President, I know that is the opinion of some Democrats about it. I know some Democrats who have real respect for the Republican Party as the result of experience.

The Senator from New Jersey was dealing rather in poesy than in wisdom when he made that comparison. The idea of one standing up in this hour and comparing the Republican Party to the rotten old hulk of a tree.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I beg the Senator's pardon——

Mr. HEYBURN. It seems to me it does not call for any defense on my part.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I did not draw the simile between the tree and the sucker. It was the distinguished Senator from Idaho who drew the parallel between the tree and the sucker. I am only citing to the Senator a condition that occurs every day in tree and plant life, and since he made the simile he should not find fault with its application.

Mr. HEYBURN. The explanation is entirely satisfactory.

I feel that I am not spending my time in vain. I am going to sow seed, some of which may germinate and grow. I would not assume the position of a critic. I am criticizing not men, but men's acts and deeds. I have seen good men, men for whom I have a very high personal regard, attempt this on several occasions before.

I remember, when the Greeley movement came along, hearing Gov. Curtin, of Pennsylvania, try to argue my father into the belief that the Republican Party had performed its mission, and that there was nothing left of it than just a hulk, as described by the Senator from New Jersey, and the only way to be a man at all and have a right under the law was to join that movement. My father said to him, "Governor, it is easier to get out of the Republican Party than to get back into it. Just take warning." And history has proved that to be true.

I afterwards lived to see Gov. Curtin sit in Congress as a Democratic Member from Pennsylvania. He got so far from the shore that he could not swim back. There is a wide ocean lying between the Democratic Party and the Republican Party, and if a man just goes plunging forward on the waves from the Republican Party long enough he will wind up in the Democratic Party.

I want Senators to think of it. I feel that I have a right to submit this proposition to them. I prefer to do it in open council rather than to assume to talk to them individually about it. I do not regard their position as a private affair when it is attempted to be applied in legislation. I regard it as entirely a private affair when you converse in private life, and therefore I would not feel at liberty to reason or argue with Senators on these questions except as I do here in connection with the performance of a duty which I regard as a great one. I do not assume or presume that I have the power to convince or to convert men, but I have the power and the right, which I am exercising, of putting before the Senate and before the American people for comparison these two positions. That is all.

I would offend no man by criticizing his conclusions or his actions from a personal standpoint. We go before the people—Senators among those whom I refer to—and plead with men for their support of certain principles, and we are here in the position that any of us would stand in if we were before the people discussing political questions. We may argue and we may plead as we might not have the right to do under the rules of propriety in individual conversation.

I want to see the Republican Party have all the strength and power and wisdom in unity of council rather than counciling in bunches here and there. There is no greater danger to a political organization than the connivance and council of a few. Men conceive that they are leaders, and they will select two or three men or Senators and get them off in a coterie and agree upon something without knowing whether or not other Senators agree with them. They can not make it work. There will always be found in the party men who can be Republicans without the support or without the consent of any other man, who do not need the approbation of any men or any man or any coterie of men to be loyal and true Republicans.

I have seen it in other days in this body when just a few who had made the mistake of thinking that they were—what was it they used to call themselves; they had a name, topnotchers, I guess—conceived the idea that they were running the Government. I have seen them go down to defeat many and many a time because of it. I want to know something of the idea of every man with whom I am to act in cooperation in politics. I do not allow any man to go off by himself and formulate the destiny of any measure and carry it out. I may agree with him, and if I do I will not vote against my judgment because he has offended, but I will be on the alert.

Mr. President, those remarks are addressed to those who are responsible for the prophesied defeat of the Republican Party in the vote that will come to-day. It is said that they will vote against the Democratic bill and then the Democrats will condemn their bill openly and candidly and come back and take the bill that they voted against only yesterday and enact it as a Democratic measure—condemn it to-day and approve it to-morrow. For what? How? Is power to be desired above principle? Consider that. There was a scene enacted here not long ago similar to the one I have described. Do you suppose that the country—the thinking, intelligent people of this country—approve of that? That is jockeying, political jockeying, and it is just as reputable here as it is on the race course, and no more so. It is high time we understood it.

In the best days of this Government, in the most responsible days of this Government, it would not have been tolerated for a moment. The opinion of the Senate would have condemned it as the opinion of the country would have condemned it. I am now talking to all the Republicans and all the Democrats. I am not talking against time. I propose that whatever may happen in the vicissitudes of life to leave permanently here a condemnation of that kind of legislation. I intend to leave of record here my appeal—and it comes from my heart and my judgment—to those who are stepping out of the Republican organization, to do what? To lay the foundation of a new party? Great heavens, they certainly have not so wild a dream as that! A new party made of what? Made up of Republicans? Such a thing is absolutely impossible.

There is no possible destiny for that movement but oblivion. There is the possibility remaining to those who have engaged in it of regaining and holding and attaining in the Republican Party the place and power and eminence for which their natural qualifications fit them well. The party in its time has overlooked the political lapse or transgression of many a man. We have had great leaders who in hours of unwisdom came pretty near making mistakes, but I will tell you that an honest confession of error is one of the best recommendations to a man in public life.

I may not be able to have any influence on this vote; I do not know; but I will not believe it until the vote is cast; I am not going to lose my faith in principle arrayed against whatever else you may call it until the evidence is made of eternal record and the final judgment is entered. There are men engaged in this defection for whom I had estimated leadership and high honors; they are not men whom I condemn personally or individually; I could name many of them, and they have the capacity for great positions. The question is, Are they going to throw it away?

The position to-day is like that of 1872. There is no monument in this country to the achievements or memory of Mr. Forney, who owned, edited, and conducted the Philadelphia Press during the war, that brought such distinguished honor to him, and who aspired to be a Senator of the United States, and who, because of his discontent, followed off in the Greeley movement. There is no monument to Gov. Curtin, of Pennsylvania, who had won a high place in the estimation of the American people by his splendid administration of the affairs of the State during the great crisis, and yet he started out to sea in his little boat. He was going to draw the continent after him. He was going to compel the approval of men. He went down into oblivion.

Mr. President, I wish there were weeks instead of hours to elapse between this time and the vote upon the pending bill. I wish that men might go into council with themselves and thrash it out, as we all must do at intervals in our life great questions that affect our destiny. But unfortunately this is the hour of passion. It is not the hour of judgment. Many a man, if he could have thinking time, would save himself and his position and his party against error.

Mr. President, I heard the testimony of these representatives of industry before the Committee on Finance of this body, and it was nearly all directed to the large producer. I was impressed with the mistake at that time, as I have always been impressed with it. I have in my library all the hearings and proceedings in connection with the great McKinley bill, and with the Dingley bill, and I read them from end to end—every one of them. I first commenced my studies of this question of political policy under the tutorship of Henry C. Carey, than whom no greater disciple of Republicanism ever lived.

When I was a boy I read his book until I wore it out, and I have followed all that has followed on that subject—the proceedings in Congress and out of it—and I know that when we abandon that principle even a little we are giving away just that much of the rights of the American people.

It is with a feeling of dread that I see this measure come to a vote—not this first vote; this first vote will be harmless, but it is with a feeling of dread that I see the Republican Party fluke in the hour of responsibility and put itself in the position of explanation when it ought to be the master and recognized as such. That is true not only with this schedule, but those that will come teeming up like horrors to confront us throughout this session. It gives me a feeling of dread to know that there is a policy here as to which the Republican Party is going to take to the woods. It is going to get behind trees so that it shall not be seen when the hour of responsibility comes. My dread is not for the future so much as the present conditions by which we must be confronted within a few brief months, because I know that there are Republicans in the United States intelligent enough and brave enough to fight for the principles of their party as they did in 1896, when the leaders who sent the party down under the waves of defeat in 1892 were drowned in the sea of political—pretty near, cowardice, under the threat of the Democracy; and I know that when the old ship comes up again there will be new commanders on her deck, new men at her wheel and at her guns, and that the chart and the compass will be in the hands of men who know how to point the Ship of State to the destiny of success.

But between now and then what confronts us? A condition of legislation that is not only a menace to-day, but will be a realization when the Democratic Party shall have compared American citizenship and American industry with those of other lands and rendered their judgment in favor of those of other lands, and when there will be an interrogation point before every proposition of industrial enterprise. I can see that confronting us, with all the consequences that will follow the four years. At my time of life I look upon it as a desperate situation—and that it should be brought about in the face of a Republican majority by a defection of men who have no substitute to offer, only just that the tantalizing wedge may slip on either bevel to one party or the other, voting with the Democrats to-day and against them to-morrow and with them another day and so on—when there is no necessity for such a desperate condition to arise, to see it pressing on us, as the hands of the clock move, we have only the satisfaction—aye, we have no satisfaction, except in the knowledge that at the end of the administration that is to follow there will come the redemption of the people.

PROPOSED TARIFF LEGISLATION.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, during the consideration of the metal schedule I presented an amendment providing for a sliding reduction in all tariff duties at the rate of 10 per cent the first year and 5 per cent per annum for the four years following, making a total reduction of 30 per cent. That amendment was provided with a brake intended to stop the reduction whenever the importations reached a certain percentage.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] requested me to withdraw the amendment and to present it to some other revenue bill, in order that it might be considered by the Finance Committee, and I took action pursuant to his suggestion. I now offer that amendment, which is intended to be proposed to any revenue bill or bill amending the present tariff act, and I will ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would suggest to the Senator from Nevada that it will be necessary to state some bill to which it is proposed as an amendment. Otherwise the amendment could not have any status.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Well, I will offer it to the excise bill.

There being no objection, the amendment was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. NEWLANDS to the bill (H. R. 21214) to extend the special excise tax now levied with respect to doing business by corporations, to persons, and to provide revenue for the Government by levying a special excise tax with respect to doing business by individuals and copartnerships.

Whereas certain of the duties heretofore levied by law on articles imported from foreign countries into the United States are so high as to encourage and facilitate the imposition of excessive prices for similar articles of domestic production; and

Whereas such excessive duties fail to produce sufficient revenue; and

Whereas both the Republican and Democratic parties have, by declarations in their respective platforms, committed themselves to a revision of tariff duties, the former to a revision based on the ascertainment of the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad with a fair profit to the manufacturer and the latter to a revision and gradual reduction of the tariff to a revenue basis; and

Whereas both parties have declared that such revision should be accomplished with a due regard to the interests of domestic workers and without destructive readjustments of domestic industries; and

Whereas neither of such parties is in complete control of legislation and either party is able to prevent the other from carrying out completely its principles and policies, and compromise is therefore desirable and necessary, in order to prevent a deadlock in legislation prejudicial to the interests of the United States: Now, therefore,

Be it enacted: SECTION 1. That on the 1st day of January, 1913, a reduction of 10 per cent shall be made in the duties now imposed by law on articles imported into the United States from foreign countries, and that on the 1st day of January of each year thereafter for the period of four years a further reduction of 5 per cent shall be made on such duties until a total reduction of 30 per cent in such duties shall be made: Provided, however, That such reductions shall not apply to duties on articles which have been specifically fixed by law at this session of Congress or shall be hereafter specifically fixed by law: And provided further, That such reductions shall not apply to duties on articles the importations of which during the previous fiscal year have equaled one-tenth of the production of similar articles in the United States.

SEC. 2. That the ascertainment of the facts upon which the foregoing provisions shall take effect shall be made by a tariff commission consisting of five members, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, of whom no more than three shall belong to the same party; that the terms of the commissioners shall be one, two, three, four, and five years, respectively; and that the President in appointing such commissioners shall designate the terms of each; that at the expiration of such terms the term of each successor shall be for the period of five years.

Mr. NEWLANDS submitted the following amendment, intended to be proposed by him to House bill 21213, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. NEWLANDS to the bill (H. R. 21213) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909. Insert the following:

Whereas certain of the duties heretofore levied by law on articles imported from foreign countries into the United States are so high as to encourage and facilitate the imposition of excessive prices for similar articles of domestic production; and

Whereas such excessive duties fail to produce sufficient revenue; and
Whereas both the Republican and Democratic Parties have, by declarations in their respective platforms, committed themselves to a revision of tariff duties, the former to a revision based on the ascertainment of the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad with a fair profit to the manufacturer and the latter to a revision and gradual reduction of the tariff to a revenue basis; and
Whereas both parties have declared that such revision should be accomplished with a due regard to the interests of domestic workers and without destructive readjustments of domestic industries; and
Whereas neither of such parties is in complete control of legislation and either party is able to prevent the other from carrying out completely its principles and policies, and compromise is therefore desirable and necessary in order to prevent a deadlock in legislation prejudicial to the interests of the United States: Now, therefore,

Be it enacted: SECTION 1. That on the 1st day of January, 1913, a reduction of 10 per cent shall be made in the duties now imposed by law on articles imported into the United States from foreign countries and that on the 1st day of January of each year thereafter for the period of four years a further reduction of 5 per cent shall be made on such duties until a total reduction of 30 per cent in such duties shall be made: Provided, however, That such reductions shall not apply to duties on articles which have been specifically fixed by law at this session of Congress or shall be hereafter specifically fixed by law: And provided further, That such reductions shall not apply to duties on articles the importations of which during the previous fiscal year have equaled one-tenth of the production of similar articles in the United States.

SEC. 2. That the ascertainment of the facts upon which the foregoing provisions shall take effect shall be made by a Tariff Commission consisting of five members, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, of whom no more than three shall belong to the same party; that the terms of the commissioners shall be one, two, three, four, and five years, respectively; and that the President in appointing such commissioners shall designate the terms of each; that at the expiration of such terms the term of each successor shall be for the period of five years.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 18985) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes. I think it will take only a few moments to get the bill through.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Pensions was, on page 2, line 2, after the words "one hundred and," to strike out "fifty-two million dollars," and insert "sixty-four million five hundred thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available," so as to make the clause read:

For Army and Navy pensions, as follows: For invalids, widows, minor children, and dependent relatives, Army nurses, and all other pensioners who are now borne on the rolls, or who may hereafter be placed thereon, under the provisions of any and all acts of Congress, $164,500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be immediately available: Provided, That the appropriation aforesaid for Navy pensions shall be paid from the income of the Navy pension fund, so far as the same shall be sufficient for that purpose: Provided further, That the amount expended under each of the above items shall be accounted for separately.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 13, to strike out:

For salary of one agent for the payment of pensions, $4,000; and from and after the 1st day of July, 1912, there shall be only one agent for the payment of pensions to be appointed in the manner now provided by law and who shall receive a salary at the rate of $4,000 per annum; and section 4780 of the Revised Statutes of the United States authorizing the appointment of agents for the payment of pensions is repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 22, to insert:

For salaries of agents for the payment of pensions, at $4,000 each, $72,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 3, to strike out:

For clerk hire, and other services, pension agency, including not exceeding $10,000 for expenses of consolidating and removing records and equipment of pension agencies, $350,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That estimates in detail shall be submitted for the fiscal year 1914 and annually thereafter for clerks and others employed in the pension agency, and the amounts to be paid to each.

And to insert:

For clerk hire, and other services, pension agencies, $385,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That the amount of clerk hire, and other services, and the salaries paid shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 14, to insert:

For rent of pension agency at New York, N. Y., $4,250, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 4, line 13, after the word "That," to strike out "hereafter" and insert "not later than January 1, 1913," and in line 18, after the word "depositary," to insert "except in the case of any pensioner in which the law authorizes the pension to be paid to some person other than the pensioner, or in which the Secretary of the Interior may consider a voucher necessary for the protection of the Government," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 3. That not later than January 1, 1913, pensions shall be paid by checks drawn, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in such form as to protect the United States against loss, without separate vouchers or receipts, and payable by the proper assistant treasurer or designated depositary, except in the case of any pensioner in which the law authorizes the pension to be paid to some person other than the pensioner, or in which the Secretary of the Interior may consider a voucher necessary for the protection of the Government. Such checks shall be transmitted by mail to the payee thereof at his last known address.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 5, to insert:

That postmasters, delivery clerks, letter carriers, and all other postal employees are prohibited from delivering any such mail to any person whomsoever, if the addressee has died or removed, or in the case of a widow believed by the postal employee intrusted with the delivery of such mail to have remarried; and the postmaster in every such case shall forthwith return such mail with a statement of the reasons for so doing, and if because of death or remarriage, the date thereof, if known. Checks returned as herein provided on account of the death or remarriage of the pensioner shall be canceled.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 19, to strike out:

SEC. 5. That in case of sickness or unavoidable absence of the agent for payment of pensions from his office, the Commissioner of Pensions may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, authorize the chief clerk of his office or some other clerk employed therein to temporarily act as such agent for payment of pensions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 6, to strike out:

With the approval of the Commissioner of Pensions and the Secretary of the Interior, the agent for payment of pensions may designate and authorize the necessary number of clerks to sign the name of the agent for payment of pensions to official checks.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 5, to strike out:

The official bond given by the agent for payment of pensions shall be held to cover and apply to the acts of the persons authorized to act in his place.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 9, to change the number of the section from 6 to 5.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. On behalf of the Committee on Pensions, I send to the desk an amendment which I ask to be inserted on page 3, after line 17.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 17, it is proposed to insert:

For examination and inspection of pension agencies, as provided by the final provision of the act of August 8, 1882, amending section 4766, Revised Statutes, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ERSKINE R. K. HAYES.

Mr. CULLOM. I rose to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, but I yield to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. BURTON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3459) for the relief of Erskine R. K. Hayes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. I shall not object to this bill, but I shall object to taking from the calendar any other bill to-day.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 1, line 6, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "five," so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Erskine R. K. Hayes, the sum of $5,000, in full compensation for injuries received on the 16th day of December, 1902, while in the performance of his duty as an employee of the Bureau of Printing, Treasury Department, in the city of Washington, D. C.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I wish to inquire of the Senator from Ohio how it happens that a bill can be reported for this Government employee who was injured allowing $5,000 for the injury when the policy of the committee appears to be to pay a sum equal to one year's wages.

Lest I might be misunderstood, I want to say before I take my seat that I did not rise for the purpose of opposing this bill; I do not know what its merits are; but I am curious to know why a bill which I have before the committee is, I am informed, to be reported allowing a sum equal to one year's salary, and that that is to be done upon the basis that the committee has determined upon a policy of that kind.

If the committee have determined upon that sort of policy, it ought to be applied to all; if they have not determined upon it, then these cases ought to be settled upon their merits. I want to get some light, if possible, from the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BURTON. I will state, Mr. President, that the action of the Committee on Claims was no doubt prompted by the extremely serious and painful quality of this injury. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], who reported the bill, is present, and I think perhaps he can explain more clearly than I the policy of the committee in this regard.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, the committee has on several occasions during this session of Congress, and I think perhaps during other Congresses, taken up cases which seem to possess peculiar merit by reason of the fact that the injuries received and the condition of the claimant were about as bad as it was possible for them to be, and considered some of those cases on their peculiar and special merits.

The Committee on Claims has not been favorable to reporting claims that were not founded on a legal right or some equitable right which seemed to require the recognition of Congress.

This particular case is one where the claimant was in the employ of the Government operating the electrical machine attached to an elevator in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. It was his duty to go into the basement early in the morning and set in motion the motor for the purpose of operating the car. It appears that the Government had been making repairs in the basement and for that purpose had taken up a portion of the floor, some 10 or 12 feet in length and 3 or 4 feet wide, and had made an excavation of the earth below. Then they had thrown in some loose earth and covered it over temporarily with boards extending above the floor about an inch. There was a space affording an opportunity for the employee to have gone around the ends of the boards without crossing them; but they had been in that condition for something like four months, and the Government had left them there.

In the meanwhile they had warped up at the end. This man on the morning in question went down into the basement to perform the work, tripped on these boards, and fell in such a manner as to break his leg and injure his back. He laid off for a while and was treated in the hospital. He finally supposed that he had recovered. He left the employ of the Government and went to Ohio, where he took a position as deputy or assistant in the clerk's office of a county town there, the name of which I can not now recall. He continued that work for a while, until he began to get worse. His back commenced to trouble him. The upshot of it is that he is now one of the most hopeless cripples it is possible to imagine. He has an abscess on his back which has been discharging constantly for years; he has decreased in weight from something near 200 pounds until his weight is now about 100 pounds.

When he was better for a while after he was injured he was married, and a child came as the result of the marriage. So that he has a child now; but he has no means, and his wife has to care for him. It is a dreadful care, because the stench which comes from the discharge is almost unbearable. This man placed a claim before the Government when he was injured, and then dropped it because he thought he was not injured so badly as he had at first supposed. Afterwards, when this condition developed, which no one doubts was caused by the accident, he again presented his claim to the Government. He asks for $10,000. He owns a home worth $1,600, upon which there is a mortgage of $1,000; he has no means of support, and no relatives upon whom he can depend.

When his case went to the Court of Claims the court held that the Government was not negligent because he had previously passed around and over these boards and knew of the condition—that is, he contributed, the court held, to his own injury—but the same court holds that the Government itself was negligent in view of the fact that it left this hole in that condition for so many months. Your committee believed that these were peculiar circumstances, similar to those, perhaps in degree, if not quite the kind, which attached to the young lady who was injured at the Census Bureau when her scalp was torn from her head, where the Government was not at fault, and yet this Congress believed it was but the right thing for us to do to contribute to her support, and perhaps compensate her in some degree for the terrible calamity which had befallen her. Your committee reduced the amount to $5,000, and provided that $3,000 could be used immediately, $1,000 to pay for the mortgage on his home and the other $2,000 to assist him in the care which he needs, the medical and surgical aid which he might possibly obtain, although all the evidence is that it is absolutely a hopeless case. Your committee provides that the balance of the $2,000 shall be paid in monthly payments of $100 until the full sum of $5,000 shall have been paid.

I sympathize with the notion that this Congress ought not on every occasion to contribute money because a claimant asks for it. I understand, as the committee understands, that we must view these cases with great care; but precedents have been established which seem to me to warrant this Congress in granting this amount of relief. A year's salary under the law, while it would be of some value, would scarcely be of sufficient worth to render the aid which this man and his family need at the present time. For these reasons the Committee on Claims has felt that this matter ought to be passed upon affirmatively by the Senate. The case has been considered by the whole committee, and has the unanimous report of the committee in its favor.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I would not on any account be understood as opposing this appropriation. I tried to make that plain a moment ago. I am not opposing it. I believe that the committee would not, after an investigation of the facts, have recommended this award and done so in an improvident manner. I think that it is only proper and right, if any employee of the Government is injured in a serious way, and the acts of the Government of a negligent character have contributed to that injury, the Government ought not to visit the entire calamity upon the head of the unfortunate who was himself only guilty of a portion of the negligence; but what I am trying to get at, Mr. President, is this: There is a claimant here, the bill for whose relief went through the House of Representatives, as I understand—at least the bill is here. He lost his hand.

Mr. TOWNSEND. May I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. What is the name of the claimant?

Mr. REED. His name is Cole.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not recall the claimant. I do not believe we have passed upon that case.

Mr. REED. I am going to try to make it plain, if the Senator will pardon me.

This man lost his hand while employed on the Panama Canal, under circumstances which would probably permit a recovery in a court of law if he had been working for a corporation or an individual. The bill was turned over to one of the members of the committee as a subcommittee, and the information which came to me was that your committee had determined upon a policy of paying but one year's salary; and that because of that the most this man could expect would be a sum equal to one year's salary.

The case does not come strictly within the terms of the bill which was passed providing for compensation. In company with some four or five others, his injury occurred just prior to the enactment of that bill, and is referred to in a special message of the President recommending that relief be granted.

If we are to have a hard and fast rule fixing one year's salary as the limit in this case, and that is to apply, it ought to apply in all cases, or else we ought to settle these cases—each one of them—upon their merits. I agree that $5,000 is not too much to allow in this case. I insist, however, that if an exception ought to be made, it ought to be made in all cases, and that all of these cases ought to be determined upon their particular merits. That is the reason for this inquiry, and not to stop the passage of this bill.

I now understand from the Senator who has just spoken that his committee does not have a rule—that is, at least, a hard and fast rule—in regard to these matters.

Mr. TOWNSEND. We have a rule, if the Senator will permit me——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSEND. We have a rule that we try to apply in order to cover as many cases as we can. We cover all cases, except those, perhaps, where the situation is so peculiar and so serious that it has seemed best for us to make an exception.

The rule has been adopted, but there have been two or three exceptions. I will mention one to the Senator. One was the case of the young lady who had her scalp torn from her head this year; another I do not now recall; and it seems to me there was still a third that was reported at this session, but we have adopted a rule, perhaps not a hard and fast rule, because we have made these exceptions.

Mr. REED. In the case of the young lady to whom the Senator refers, as I understand it, there was clearly no liability. The Government made the appropriation, however, in the interest of humanity. In this case there was no liability, but the Government is asked to make the appropriation, because of the seriousness of the injury and the unfortunate condition in which this man is placed. In the case I speak of the man lost his right hand, and a year's salary at the small wages he was earning would be utterly inadequate as compensation.

I ask that all these cases be considered on their merits or that none of them be considered on their merits; that we either adopt a rule and adhere to it, or that we take the broad grounds, which, I think, is the proper ground, that every case shall be considered upon its merits by the committee. I have made the inquiry and have elicited the information, and I have no objection to this bill, but shall be glad to vote for it.

Mr. OVERMAN. I desire to say to the Senator from Missouri that all these cases are usually referred to a subcommittee, and each particular case is first considered by the subcommittee. There are hundreds and hundreds of these claims pending. If the Senator will suggest to the chairman that the bill to which he has alluded be referred to some member of the committee, the bill will certainly be considered on its merits.

Mr. REED. I think the Senator from Kentucky has it as a subcommittee of one man.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I was not present in the committee when this particular bill was considered, and I have not had time to read the report, but I have listened to the statement of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND]. I believe in following the rule that the committee has followed for a number of years past in all of these personal-injury cases. It is true that in one case of late, that of the young lady who was injured at the Census Bureau, the claimant was paid more than a year's salary, and yet very little more when the expenses attached to her sickness are taken into consideration.

I am not going to object to the consideration of this bill at this time, because of the fact that I have not had time to look into it and was not present in committee when the report was made, having been called to a meeting of another committee of the Senate; but I want to say to the Senator from Missouri that so far as I am concerned as a member of the Committee on Claims I shall with every vote at my command follow the rule in all personal-injury cases that we have followed for a number of years past; and I will say that in this particular case, no doubt, I would have voted that way in committee, although there may have been a majority of the committee who would have voted otherwise.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if I may inquire, upon what ground is such a rule established as that regardless of the character of the injury one year's salary shall be held to be compensation? Why one year, instead of two years, or instead of two months? Upon what is such a rule based?

Mr. SMOOT. In answer to the Senator, I will say that about four years ago there was a law passed by Congress giving one year's salary to employees engaged in the construction of the Panama Canal who were injured. Since the passage of that law—and that seems to be the only expression we have had from Congress upon this particular personal-injury matter—the committee followed the expression of Congress, and has in nearly every case given one year's salary to those who have been injured. That is the basis of it, I will say to the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is another amendment reported by the committee, which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 10, after the words "District of Columbia," it is proposed to insert "$3,000 of said sum shall be payable upon the passage and approval of this bill, and the balance shall be payable in monthly installments of $100 until the full sum of $5,000 shall be paid."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE CHEMICAL SCHEDULE.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 20182) to amend "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I take it that the Senator is not going to ask for the consideration of the bill at this time, but will ask that it be laid aside after it becomes the unfinished business.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am not going to ask for its consideration at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the motion of the Senator from North Carolina.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. Just a moment, if the Senator please. Before asking to lay the bill aside temporarily, I wish to state that I shall not ask for the consideration of this bill until Monday. I hope that to-morrow and Saturday we will be able to dispose of some bills that are pressing, so that on Monday we may be ready to enter upon the consideration of this measure and continue its consideration to a final vote. I now ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, the unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside, as requested by the Senator from North Carolina.

CHARLEY CLARK.

Mr. NELSON. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 6153) for the relief of Charley Clark, a homestead settler on certain lands therein described, to report it without amendment, and I submit a report (No. 824) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill reported by him from the Committee on Public Lands. The Secretary will read the bill for the information of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am not going to object, but I simply want to make an explanation. I gave notice that I would object to the consideration of any further bills upon the calendar, on the ground that I understood the Senate desired to go into executive session, but as I am now informed that an executive session will not be held this evening, I have no objection to the consideration of this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill be read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It provides that the homestead entry of Charley Clark for the west half of the northeast quarter of section 31, in township 153 north, range 40, in the Crookston land district, Minnesota, under the act approved February 20, 1904, entitled "An act to authorize the sale of a part of what is known as the Red Lake Indian Reservation in the State of Minnesota," upon which final proof and payment was made, but which was held for cancellation by the Secretary of the Interior for want of qualification to make the same, shall be allowed and permitted to remain of record as of the date of the entry, and patent shall issue in the name of Charley Clark for the land.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALVA, OKLA.

Mr. GORE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 16612) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to convey a certain lot in the city of Alva, Okla. The bill was reported to-day.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the bill which I reported from the Committee on Public Lands this morning, is it not?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course it is not yet on the calendar.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment on page 1, line 13, after the word "specified," to insert "or if at any time thereafter cease to be used as an armory by said Company I, First Regiment Oklahoma National Guard," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to convey to Company I, First Regiment Oklahoma National Guard, the following tract of land, in the city of Alva, Woods County, State of Oklahoma, to wit: Lot No. 19, in block No. 41, according to the original plat thereof, which patent shall be issued upon the express condition that Company I, First Regiment Oklahoma National Guard, must erect an armory building upon said lot within two years after the approval of this act: Provided, however, That if said armory building shall not be erected upon said lot within the time specified, or if at any time thereafter cease to be used as an armory by said Company I, First Regiment Oklahoma National Guard, title to said lot shall thereupon, without further action, revert to and be in the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT NOGALES, ARIZ.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6565) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon in the city of Nogales, in the State of Arizona.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment on page 2, line 2, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevator, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post office, customhouse, and other Government offices in the city of Nogales, county of Santa Cruz, State of Arizona, the cost of said site and building, including the above-mentioned apparatus, not to exceed the sum of $120,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of pension bills on the calendar, beginning with Calendar No. 665.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest that the Senator ask unanimous consent. He can not well make a composite motion covering several bills.

Mr. McCUMBER. Very well, then, I will ask unanimous consent that pension bills on the calendar be considered, beginning with the number I have indicated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the pension bills indicated by him in the order in which they appear on the calendar. ORDER OF BUSINESS—STATISTICS OF CORPORATIONS.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it is now 20 minutes to 5 o'clock, and I notice there are 10 other pension bills on the calendar. It will be quite late before they are all disposed of; a number of Senators desire to go to their offices and do work which is demanding their attention; and I should like to have unanimous consent that no other bills than the pension bills be considered this afternoon. I ask unanimous consent that that be the understanding of the Senate.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I have been waiting for some time to get up, by unanimous consent, the little call for information which was crowded out the other day. If the Senator will permit me to pass that resolution, which I think will require no further discussion——

Mr. SMOOT. I have a number of bills that I, too, would like to have the Senate consider, but I will say to the Senator that no doubt we will go on the calendar to-morrow; I know there are a good many Senators here who would not——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The urgency of this is that if this information amounts to anything it will be of some value in the consideration of tariff legislation.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no doubt the Senator will find plenty of time to-morrow to pass his resolution. I hope he will agree to the request I have submitted, because it will only——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If the Senator will let me present my request at the present time, I think the resolution will be out of the way inside of two minutes. I understand from conversations with Senators on the other side that there is no objection to it.

Mr. SMOOT. That is something I know nothing about; but we have a unanimous-consent agreement now that we will go on and pass these 10 more pension bills, which will take us quite late in the day. I do not think the Senator will gain anything by objecting to my request. I assure him I will not object to the consideration of his resolution to-morrow, and there is no special bill that will take precedence of it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have already made several attempts to get up the resolution; I feel that it is an urgent matter, and I am waiting patiently until the pension bills are out of the way, and I am perfectly willing to wait until they are out of the way. I deferred to the Senator from North Dakota that he might get these pension bills out of the way.

Mr. SMOOT. Then the Senator objects to my request?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Utah will not object to the consideration of the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska. I am sure it will not take two minutes to dispose of it. We discussed it the other day pretty thoroughly, and just as we were about to take a vote on it the hour of 2 o'clock arrived and it went over. The information sought to be gathered by the resolution I believe will be very valuable to all of us in the consideration of the tariff bills.

Mr. SMOOT. If there is no objection, I will include the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska in the unanimous-consent agreement for which I ask.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I trust that request will be acceded to. The Senator from Nebraska interrupted me a couple of days ago, when I was making a little offhand talk, with the suggestion that he would like to have the resolution passed. I did not feel that I could permit it right then. I think the Senator's resolution ought to be considered, and I have no doubt it will be promptly passed. So I hope it will be included in the understanding.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah asks that no other business shall be transacted this afternoon except the pension bills, which has already been consented to, and Senate resolution 321. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is ordered.

RECLAMATION OF SWAMP AND OVERFLOWED LANDS IN THE SOUTH (S. DOC. NO. 734).

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I desire to present some resolutions adopted by and a petition of the Southern Commercial Congress as a part of the resolutions of that Congress, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD. The resolutions and petition have reference to the subject of the drainage of swamp and overflowed lands. It is a very important matter to the whole country, and a valuable contribution to that subject was made by Mr. J. O. Wright, who was for some years connected with the Department of Agriculture and the drainage operations in that department, and at present is the chief drainage engineer for the State of Florida. It is an address delivered at the Southern Commercial Congress at Nashville, Tenn., April 8, 1912. I ask that the address, along with the resolutions and accompanying petition, be printed as a public document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator also makes a request for printing in the RECORD.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask that the resolutions and petition be printed in the RECORD, and that the resolutions, petition, and address be printed as a public document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions, petition, and address will be printed as a public document, unless there be objection. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. There being no objection, the resolutions and petition will be printed in the RECORD.

The resolutions and petition are as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

At the Fourth Annual Convention of the Southern Commercial Congress, held in Nashville, Tenn., April 8 to 10, 1912, a resolution, introduced by John M. Parker, of New Orleans, La., first president of the Southern Commercial Congress, was adopted by the section on drainage and reported to the convention and adopted by it, as follows:

Whereas there are in the United States 80,000,000 acres of swamp and overflowed lands that are not only nonproductive but a hindrance to the general welfare and a menace to the public health; and

Whereas practically all of this land is held in private ownership and it is necessary to have the consent and cooperation of the owners of this land in order to inaugurate a complete system of drainage and reclamation; and

Whereas the reclamation of these swamp and overflowed lands will be of great benefit to the owners thereof, to the State in which the land is situated, and also to the Federal Government, because of the improvement in the public health and in the construction of public highways and in the increase in the agricultural products of the country: Therefore be it

Resolved: 1. That an educational campaign be inaugurated to set forth to the people of the United States, and especially to the owners of swamp and overflowed land, the economic value of reclaiming these lands to make them fit for agriculture.

2. That a commission be appointed to simplify and standardize the drainage laws of the several Southern States; a simple and direct method of procedure applicable as far as possible to all the States should be prepared and its adoption secured by the legislatures of the several States.

3. That the Southern Commercial Congress petitions the Congress of the United States to make a complete survey of all the swamp and overflowed lands in the United States and work out a plan for draining each individual project as a part of a complete system; and that this plan embrace an examination of the soil of the swamps, showing its value from an agricultural standpoint and its adaptability for the growth of profitable crops.

4. That we urge and solicit the cooperation of all commercial organizations, railroads, banks, and business interests in general located in these States in carrying out these principles.

In pursuance of the foregoing the Southern Commercial Congress petitions the Congress of the United States to enact such legislation and make such appropriation as may be necessary for the purpose of authorizing and making by the proper department a complete survey of all the swamp and overflowed lands in the United States and working out a plan for draining each individual project as a part of the complete system, such plan to embrace and such work to include an examination of the soil of the swamp and overflowed lands, showing their value from an agricultural standpoint and their adaptability to the growth of vegetable crops, and to include plans and estimates for reclamation in each instance.

Respectfully submitted.

SOUTHERN COMMERCIAL CONGRESS.
DUNCAN U. FLETCHER, President.

CLARENCE J. OWENS, Secretary.

AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURNHAM. I move that the Senate take up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 18960) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire moves that at this time the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report upon the agricultural appropriation bill. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I should like to have the morning business finished, the introduction of bills and other matters. There is a rather lean attendance of the Senate this morning, and we have morning business to transact.

Mr. BURNHAM. There is some uncertainty as to the length of morning business, and I should like very much to have the report considered.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, my attention was diverted while the matter was being taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would state to the Senator from Idaho that the question was put on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire and declared carried. Does the Senator from Idaho desire to move to reconsider the vote?

Mr. BORAH. I do. I will say to the Senator who has charge of the bill that I suggested yesterday morning I would call up House bill 9061, if I could, to-day. I do not think it will take long to dispose of that bill, and I want to dispose of it, if I can, this morning. For that reason I am making this objection.

Mr. WARREN. The motion was made to take up the conference report, and the motion was carried.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has already so stated, and the Senator from Idaho desires a reconsideration of that action.

Mr. WARREN. I shall be very sorry to have it reconsidered. I say this without any wish to delay or to oppose the bill the Senator from Idaho has in charge. On the contrary, I should like to have his bill passed.

Mr. BORAH. I will say to Senators they will not make any progress if the conference report is taken up at this time under the circumstances.

Mr. WARREN. If I am to accept that as a challenge, I might say to the Senator that he need not expect to make very much progress with his bill if he antagonizes all the appropriation bills.

Mr. BORAH. I suggested yesterday morning that I would desire to take up House bill 9061 to-day.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. BORAH. I simply meant to observe that at this time there will be no considerable progress made by proceeding with the conference report.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator says there was an understanding yesterday to take up House bill 9061, it was just that mention that brought the comment from me that if taken up it should be subject to conference reports and appropriation bills. There was no agreement that it should be considered to-day. It was simply a suggestion by the Senator from North Carolina to the Senator from Idaho, as I understood it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut suggests the absence of a quorum.

Mr. WARREN. I do not know that when I am in the middle of a sentence I can be taken off the floor by the suggestion of the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The absence of a quorum is a point of order which can be made at any time.

Mr. WARREN. I do not wish to interpose further.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state, in justice to the Senator from Wyoming, that the Senator from Connecticut made the point of no quorum several moments ago, and the Chair in deference to the Senator postponed ordering the roll to be called.

Mr. WARREN. That is all right, and I beg the Chair's pardon. I did not hear the point when it was made.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I suggest the absence of a quorum now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut suggests the absence of a quorum, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Culberson	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ariz.
Bacon	Cullom	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ga.
Borah	Curtis	Oliver	Smoot
Bourne	Dillingham	Overman	Stephenson
Brandegee	Fletcher	Page	Sutherland
Bristow	Gallinger	Penrose	Swanson
Brown	Gardner	Perkins	Warren
Bryan	Gronna	Poindexter	Watson
Burnham	Heyburn	Rayner	Wetmore
Catron	Johnston, Ala.	Richardson	Williams
Clapp	Jones	Root	Works.
Clark, Wyo.	Lodge	Sanders
Clarke, Ark.	McCumber	Simmons

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. JONES. Out of order, I desire to submit——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that the Senator from Wyoming has the floor.

Mr. WARREN. I do not wish to occupy the floor longer.

Mr. BORAH. I withdraw the motion I made to reconsider.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho withdraws the motion to reconsider, and the Secretary will read the conference report.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I would inquire whether the report is being read for amendment or consideration as we proceed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate can not amend a conference report.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; where the conferees put in new matter it can be dealt with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The conference report has to be dealt with as an entirety.

Mr. HEYBURN. Except where the conferees put in new matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has to be dealt with as an entirety under all circumstances; and the only advantage which can be taken——

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I had it in mind to inquire as to the proper time to interpose an objection. An objectionable section has just been read. The question arose in my mind as to whether or not I should wait until the entire report had been read and then recur to it, or whether it would not be more convenient and efficient to deal with it at the time when it is reached.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator that the usual course is that the report be dealt with in its entirety. It must be voted on in its entirety.

Mr. HEYBURN. I realize that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. An objection as to a particular item can only be used as a reason for the rejection of the entire report.

Mr. HEYBURN. I realize that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Separate items can not be dealt with separately.

Mr. HEYBURN. I realize that; but as to whether this might be a proper time to deal with them——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is entirely within the control of the Senate. The Chair can only suggest that the usual custom is to finish the reading of the report.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let the reading of the report be completed, then. I can recur to it.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the conference report. (See yesterday's proceedings, pages 7410 and 7411.)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I want to direct the attention of the Senator in charge of this bill to amendment numbered 85, on page 50, to see if I am able to understand what has taken place among the conferees. The amendment which was adopted by the Senate read:

That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed and required to select, classify, and segregate, as soon as practicable, all lands within the boundaries of national forests that are suitable and fit for agricultural purposes, and as soon as such lands have been thus selected, classified, and segregated, the same shall be open to settlement and entry under the homestead laws, and the sum of $50,000 is hereby appropriated for the purpose aforesaid.

That amendment was adopted by the Senate, Mr. President, after a considerable debate here upon the all-important proposition to the West, that a vast amount of agricultural lands are tied up in the forest reservations, which ought to be eliminated. As was stated at the time, there was not any considerable sentiment in the West in favor of impeaching the forest reserves in their integrity as forest reserves, but there was a great desire to have the agricultural lands eliminated from the forest reserves and thrown open to settlement and entry. It was supposed that that had been accomplished to some extent, although I am frank to say that a Senator who sat by my side prophesied that it would never result in any good, and a man familiar with the work of conferees can sometimes prophesy with great success.

The conferees have changed the phraseology of that section, so that it reads as follows:

That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed and required to select, classify, and segregate, as soon as practicable, all lands within the boundaries of national forests that are chiefly valuable for agricultural purposes, and that are not needed for public purposes or for use by the public, and as soon as such lands have been thus selected, classified, and segregated, the same shall be open to settlement and entry under the homestead laws applicable to the national forests, and the sum of $25,000 is hereby appropriated for the purposes aforesaid.

Does the Senator in charge of this bill think that that is any different in its practical workings than the law which we now have, and will it be any different in its operation? It says:

And that are not needed for public purposes or for use by the public.

It has been deemed upon the part of those people who have been making the selection heretofore that every acre in the forest reserves was needed for the public use, and that it was better for the public that the land be retained in the reserves. With this kind of a qualification to the provision which was adopted by the Senate, what possible benefit will be derived in the way of eliminating these agricultural lands from the forest reserves other than that which has been derived in the past? I think—and I am sure—that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] is desirous of having these agricultural lands eliminated; and, while he is more familiar with the subject perhaps than the Senator in charge of the bill, it seems to me that it will result in no change whatever, so far as the practical operation of the proposition is concerned. I would like the Senator's views as to what benefit we are to expect from this amendment as it is now found in the bill.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho is not mistaken as to the intent of the Senator from Wyoming to get all the relief that is possible along the lines which the Senator indicates. The Committee on Agriculture accepted one amendment, which was offered by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD], which will afford great relief in this, that it makes an appropriation for surveys of all tracts, large or small, that have any evidence of being fit for agricultural use, without waiting to run the regular township and range lines north and south and east and west through, but to locate boundaries on natural lines and points, so that those who wish to settle will not, as heretofore, have to expend a large amount of money for surveys to find where they are and to have their entries conform to the surveys; in other words, it makes little separate reservations up to which the regular surveys will come.

The provision to which the Senator alludes, if I remember aright, was put on as an amendment on the Senate floor, and when it came to be considered by the conferees it seems the Secretary of Agriculture felt that in cases where, for instance, in a forest there is a lake or water hole which the public—that is, those who rent the land for grazing horses, cattle, or sheep—are using there might be immediately bordering on that water land fit for agriculture, which, if entirely absorbed, would of course cut out the general public who wish to use that water and who, in fact, would have to have water for the stock. That is one of several problems and it is one hard to cover in legislation, and it will occur to the Senator that it would be a rather difficult problem if three or four homesteaders could take up the water in a place where, perhaps, no other water could be found for many miles.

Mr. BORAH. Well, Mr. President, I do not see what the Secretary of Agriculture has to do with the supervising of the manner in which people shall settle up a State, whether or not they shall go there and cover by a homestead entry a spring, and thereby interfere with people who may graze stock or with people who may be in the stock-raising business. The question which we desire to have settled is whether or not agricultural lands in forest reservations, regardless of whether they are near springs or distant from springs, should be eliminated from the reserves, so that people may settle on them in their own way and according to what they believe to be to the interests of those who are making the settlement.

Suppose a spring is found in a forest reserve and it is surrounded by agricultural land, that is all the more reason why it should be eliminated, because it will be more practicable and serviceable to those who desire to make homesteads. A man can not make a homestead very successfully without water any more than he can raise stock without water. It is simply a question whether you will open the way for those who are trying to make homesteads or whether the Secretary of Agriculture will continue to supervise the method of developing our Western States.

I submit, Mr. President, with all due consideration for those who have this bill in charge, that it would have been a better thing to do, as we would then have known where we were, to have stricken that amendment wholly from the bill, because this provision gives us no relief; it does not change the law, in my judgment, in its practical operation one particle, and it is simply another illustration of how utterly impossible it seems to be to get legislation for this situation. What possible defense can there be for keeping tied up in the forest reserves a lot of agricultural land? Why should there be strategy and practice of all kinds of, I will not say deception, but rather the acute use of language for the purpose of preventing people from taking up the agricultural lands? What are they there for?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, so far as concerns the homestead law applying to the lands in the States, and so forth, unfortunately the forest reserves are assumed to be the property of the United States, and they are assumed to be in charge, and are in charge, of the Secretary of Agriculture. Of course, that brings the whole question up. The amendment, as I have said, was put on by the Senate, and we had to meet the conferees on the part of the House. The conferees of the House side have always been—as I think the Senator remembers—exceedingly strong in their ideas and demands regarding the whole subject of forestry; and in composing differences between the two Houses it is incumbent upon the Senate conferees to protect intact every provision that is adopted by the Senate, if it is possible to do so; but if that is not possible, we are compelled to yield some points.

I do not claim that this bill in a great many particulars is an ideal one or all that we would like to have it; but I do think it is about the best we have ever had, and I do believe, containing, as it does, the two matters I have mentioned, which are in the direction of solving this difficulty, we shall in the long run land where the Senator and I desire we should land—that is, to protect in the forest reserves only the actual timberlands and to open to settlement for the benefit of homesteaders every acre of land that can be used for agricultural purposes. It is a matter not of choice, as the Senator will understand, but the report has to be agreed to as a whole. We could have yielded to the House one or two more items, but there did not seem to be any indication that we could do any better than we did in considering this difference between the two Houses by yielding any more to them in other directions.

Mr. BORAH. Well, it might be said to be true that the conferees felt the necessity of yielding, but that spirit has not yet come over the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I entirely sympathize with the view of the Senator from Idaho with reference to the lands in forest reserves which are suitable for agricultural purposes. I do not know whether he called attention to another change made in this amendment which, if I understand it correctly, is still more serious. The language of the original amendment was:

> The same shall be open to settlement and entry under the homestead laws, and the sum of $50,000 is hereby appropriated for the purpose aforesaid.

The language of the amendment agreed upon by the conferees is:

> The same shall be open to settlement and entry under the homestead laws applicable to the national forests.

And so forth.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator is absolutely correct. I said a few moments ago that it did not, in my judgment, change the present law a particle.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It would seem to me under that language it undertakes to give with one hand and to immediately take back with the other.

Mr. BORAH. That is quite correct.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It does not give anything at all; and it is perfectly useless to spend $25,000 in doing a thing of this kind. We had better eliminate the amendment altogether.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, if Senators will permit me, I will add something to the light on that subject by calling attention to the provision in lines 16, 17, and 18, on page 51, where the amendment is made to read:

> But no land listed under the act of June 11, 1906, shall pass from the forest until patent issues.

So that the poor settler has to live there until they see fit to give him a patent.

Mr. BORAH. I also call attention to the fact that we have appropriated $25,000 for a vain thing. On page 89 is a provision, however, where we make a transfer of this $25,000 to some other bureau in case it is found that no land in the forest reserve is fit for use—

> And not to exceed 10 per cent of the foregoing amounts for the miscellaneous expenses of the work of any bureau, division, or office herein provided for shall be available interchangeably for expenditures on the objects included within the general expenses of such bureau, division, or office, but no more than 10 per cent shall be added to any one item of appropriation except in cases of extraordinary emergency, and then only upon the written order of the Secretary of Agriculture.

We have appropriated here $25,000. That $25,000 ought not to be appropriated for this purpose, because I submit to anyone who will glance over this amendment—lawyer or layman, it is so plain upon its face—that is not changed one particle, the present law, so far as the practical operation is concerned. One can get the homestead just as before. One must make an application for an entry and serve just as before, and one must wait for the patent just the same as before, and one must have his application and right to the homestead measured by the laws relative thereto as before. What change has been made under this amendment? What modification that is worth $25,000?

I think the West does not need the $25,000; and if we are going to receive no benefit whatever, I submit there ought to be stricken out from the bill the entire appropriation and another amendment adopted or else leave it as it was.

I said the other day—and I am not going to repeat it at length—that they were selecting in forest reserves more ranger stations than homesteads, and the result of it has been that the settlers who are seeking homes in the West have turned aside from these great reserves and no longer make an effort to secure homes there.

It is by reason of the law which the Senate, after full consideration, determined ought to be changed, and now there comes back in the conference report the same proposition as is now embodied in the statute, with a little change of language that in my judgment means the same thing.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to direct my colleague's attention to one point. Perhaps his attention has already been called to it. I refer to line 24, on page 50, where there is a provision which directly applies to the principle he has just stated.

Mr. BORAH. What line?

Mr. HEYBURN. It exceptionally provides for rangers.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly; and it says "not needed for public purposes."

Mr. HEYBURN. That means rangers' stations.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly. There is not a foot of land in forest reserves, whether agricultural, mineral, or timber, that is not, in the estimation of these people, to be kept there for the public good and for a public purpose, and this clause in this section gives them the latitude they desire.

In addition to that it specifically provides that it shall be according to laws relative to forest reserves. What we wanted, and it was but fair, was to have these lands classified and taken out of the reserves entirely—eliminated from the reserves—so that when the settler went upon his homestead he would know he had to comply with the general law, and no one else could pass upon the question whether it was a homestead. What we wanted was to pass the supervision from under the special examiner and put it under the control and operation of the general law with reference to homesteads, and until that relief is had it will be of no benefit to the West. There is no subject more important to us. If we can not settle up our agricultural lands, we can not build a State. If we can not reduce them to taxation, we can not maintain our public institutions. If we can not have homes where the Lord intended homes should be built by the nature of the lands He created, we can not be expected to thrive and prosper as we should thrive and prosper, the same as people do in other States.

Who can offer a valid reason for keeping agricultural lands in a forest reserve? The most enthusiastic conservationist can not offer a valid reason for including alfalfa and wheat lands in a forest reserve, and that is all that the West has asked to be eliminated. It is a question most vital to the entire West, and I think that this report ought to go back.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I should like to add an inquiry to those asked by my colleague [Mr. BORAH]. Why keep horticultural lands in a forest reserve? An apple tree will grow where a pine tree will grow. Various fruit trees will grow where lumber trees will grow. Very little attention is given to it here, and yet horticulture is one of the largest items in the growth and prosperity of our State. We have a phenomenal growth in the planting and cultivation of trees and fruit. I will not go into the details of it. I only point it out as an additional reason or two why this conference report should not be adopted.

Now, as the Senate sent this bill out amendment No. 85, on page 50, did not contain the words of limitation that have been placed in it by the conference committee. The amendment says—> that the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed and required to select, classify, and segregate, as soon as practicable, all lands within the boundaries of national forests that are suitable and fit for agricultural purposes.

The conference committee, as is shown in line 22, inserted the word "chiefly," so that they weigh one against the other, and that, of course, can only be determined at the end of the trial. The word "chiefly" should not be accepted. It is a dangerous word of limitation, and should never have been accepted.

Mr. BURNHAM. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HEYBURN. I yield.

Mr. BURNHAM. Is not that the language of the forest homestead law of 1906?

Mr. HEYBURN. We were not trying to reenact the act of 1906. We were trying to improve upon it and relieve the people from the burdens it imposed; and the Senate agreed to do so.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will allow me, on reflection he will hardly say that the insertion in conference of the language he mentions was not permissible. The fact is the House sent to us a bill without a word upon that subject. The Senate put in certain words. The difference between nothing and what might be an extreme view is always within the purview and the consideration of the conference committee. If there are to be no new words used in conference, then there is no necessity of a conference, because all these matters would have to go out or remain in as they were.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was not speaking so much as to the power as I was to the wisdom.

Mr. WARREN. Of course, as to that, that is a debatable question.

Mr. HEYBURN. But why should it have been put in? Why, in considering in conference an amendment adopted by the Senate, should the language of the Senate have been so modified as to change the entire system of classification?

Mr. WARREN. I think that is hardly true. It is modified, but it was a question whether to modify or to strike out. Now, it is true that being in the bill as a Senate amendment, if the House did not insist upon retaining it, we could have cut it out. But when a matter of that kind goes to conference it is usually the case for the conferees to do the best they can with it.

Mr. HEYBURN. I realize that.

Mr. WARREN. I do not understand from the remarks of the junior Senator from Idaho that what is complained of is that it does harm, but that his complaint is that it does no good.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was not referring to the remarks of my colleague. I was making an independent criticism of this from my own standpoint.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. HEYBURN. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming for a moment.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I just wanted to ask my colleague a question on one point of this matter. It is whether or not, in their opinion, the amendment as proposed by the conference committee adds to or takes from the right of the settler to locate a homestead in a forest reserve?

Mr. HEYBURN. That goes——

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I should like to ask my colleague what, in their opinion, will be the effect of the amendment?

Mr. WARREN. I think distinctly it does, because that, coupled with the other amendment, provides for those surveys and for those survey funds, and that it shall be done at the expense of the Government instead of the settler, so that the settler can know where the boundaries are and make his location without having to spend a lot of money, as he now does.

Now, a man goes to the forest and, with few exceptions, he has not the faintest idea where the corners are. This and the other amendment provide for surveying all of that land which is considered fit for agricultural purposes, and if we can move in that direction and see the result of it for one year we can go further later on.

Mr. HEYBURN. In other words, it provides that a man shall ride to an execution instead of walking and bearing his own cross. While we here are invested with the power of legislating to the extent of real ultimate wisdom, we do not have to stop on the road or go half way this year with the promise of going the whole way next year. We have the power to legislate a complete and perfect act as well as to legislate by piecemeal.

I desire to finish my comparison of these two sections. I am strongly opposed to the word "chiefly." It has given us more trouble than any other word in the classification of lands. The Senate in its wisdom provided by amendment No. 85 for the classification of "all lands within the boundaries of national forests that are suitable and fit for agricultural purposes." These lands may be more applicable or more suitable or more adapted to some other purpose. Now, are they suitable? There is a vast difference between that and the comparison that is woven into line 22, on page 50, of the bill as it comes from conference. It is new matter. That word "chiefly" does not appear in the amendment.

The Senator from Wyoming very properly suggests that, under the rule, it being a Senate amendment carrying an entirely new consideration into the bill, of course it might be changed without violating the rule. I am not questioning the power to do it, but the wisdom to do it. When you permit those people to compare in classification a piece of land and say whether it is more valuable than the other, then they may exercise judgment; but when you say to them "if it is suitable for agriculture"—I do not care what else it might be suitable for—"it shall be open to agricultural entry," that is a very largely extended right to the settler, and I should insist on the conferees restoring the language of the Senate amendment and saying that forest lands that are suitable for agricultural purposes, without putting them in comparison with any other purpose, shall be classified and open to settlement, even though they might be more suitable for forest rangers' stations or other purposes.

Then I call my colleague's attention to the language in line 24, which is of very wide application and one that was intended by the members of the committee or whoever inspired it to reserve to them the rights they are now exercising, of withholding from entry lands they want for residences for their superabundant employees. As my colleague has suggested, they are more numerous than the homesteaders.

Mr. BORAH. They do not vote there.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. HEYBURN. A moment, please.

These rangers and persons occupying this vast number of homes on the forest reserves do not pay taxes to the State and are not always citizens of the State. They certainly pay no taxes upon these homes, while other people have to pay taxes upon their homes. They pay no taxes, and some of them have a great deal of property. They contribute nothing to the expense of the Government that protects them. They are dividing up a great inheritance, taking their part over and subjecting that of other settlers to the burdens of citizenship.

Mr. WARREN. I hope the Senator from Idaho will not overlook the fact that while this is not what he would like or I would like, it does bring about certain procedure, because it provides for the classification and survey of the lands——

Mr. HEYBURN. Of what?

Mr. WARREN. Of lands suitable for agriculture.

Mr. HEYBURN. No; it does not.

Mr. WARREN. Wait a moment. There is no express direction of that kind. I admire the spirit expressed by the Senator from Idaho; I admire a man who never will yield; but, unfortunately, when a man has to face the guns of the House and of the department, with the Senate entertaining a divided opinion, it is necessary to make concessions in order that legislation may be effected. In some circumstances it is better to take a half loaf.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, in my judgment at least this bill does not improve existing conditions.

Mr. WARREN. I differ there. As I have stated, taking that with the others, I think we have made a good deal of progress. I hope we will make more.

Mr. HEYBURN. Some ingenious spirit has reinvested this question with the same taint as is found in the present law; that is to say, we have left the power to an executive officer to determine whether or not it is chiefly valuable for agriculture rather than for other purposes, followed in the next line by the reservation in favor of Government uses, with the knowledge that the Government uses, under the ruling of the department, include the forestry stations. They are more numerous than the homesteads.

Now, take those three positions together, and I fail to see any improvement in the existing conditions.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator will admit that pretty much all the forestry stations have already been made, so that we do not stand in quite the imminent danger we did before.

Mr. HEYBURN. I thought that when they had 700; then I thought it when they had 1,200; I thought it as they leaped forward by the thousands; and I thought it until they reached the limit of infamy. But the limit is not in sight under existing conditions.

Mr. BURNHAM. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. BURNHAM. I desire to ask the senior Senator from Idaho a question for information. Suppose that quite an area was heavily timbered, covered with very valuable timber, would the Senator say it should be used for agricultural purposes? I should like to know what the Senator says about what should be the disposition of such an area.

Mr. HEYBURN. That affords me an opportunity that I have overlooked on several occasions.

Mr. BURNHAM. I am very glad if I have furnished the Senator an opportunity to say a word.

Mr. HEYBURN. There has been a lot of sentiment here in favor of timber on the domain—that it was more valuable than agricultural land. In the State of Idaho the agricultural land is more valuable than any timberland in it by the acre, and that is true in any State of the Union where they have agricultural land. The agricultural land in the counties of Lacon, Nez Perce, Shoshone, Idaho, and those surrounding counties will bring more under the hammer to-day than any acre of timberland in it. When speaking of timber, they talk about small items in feet and it sounds large. Two hundred billion feet sounds large. You could probably put the timber off of an acre on three cars upon a railroad.

When we talk about the value of timber we talk about the stumpage value, because although that contains the element of cutting it down, it is the nearest the original cost we can get. You can take any acre of land that you are acquainted with and take a lead pencil and a piece of paper and figure out the value of the timber on it on a stumpage basis or on a manufacturing basis, which will deduct the cost of manufacturing it. Then compare it with an acre of wheat land or fruit land or vegetable land and you will find that while you are preserving this land for these trees to grow upon you are losing money on your investment. I make that statement without any fear of successful contradiction.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. HEYBURN. The trees grow one crop. You can grow 300 bushels of potatoes to the acre and you can get more from one year's crop of potatoes off that ground than the exhaustion of the timber would bring you. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. BORAH. There are valuable lands in the West which are agricultural lands and yet carry a great deal of timber; but there is a vast amount of lands which are not agricultural lands and never would be agricultural lands which carry a vast amount of timber. Those latter lands are the lands which ought to be reserved, if any are to be reserved at all, and about that no objection is being made at this time. But as to those which are agricultural lands as soon as the timber is taken off, there is no possible way by which you can determine the value of the land as compared with the timber upon them. The timberland has an estimable value at this time. The value of the land for agricultural purposes is not to be estimated.

Suppose some of the farms in the State of New Hampshire which were cleared off a hundred years ago and have been under cultivation ever since were to be considered, would you say that it was better to have let the timber grow upon those farms than to have cultivated them for a hundred years and made homes out of them?

Mr. BURNHAM. I think the conditions a hundred years ago in New England were very different from the conditions in the West in the Forest Service and in regard to forest lands.

Mr. BORAH. We realize that. We suffer from that difference. We know the difference. There is no question about that proposition. There is a vast amount of difference when you come to weigh the value of a piece of land for agricultural purposes and for timber purposes. It has been estimated by those who know that there is quite enough land in the United States which is valuable for timber, which would be good for timber and nothing else, to supply the timber the people of the United States need, without occupying agricultural land. Why take the vast areas of agricultural lands and undertake to raise timber upon them when you have vast areas of land upon which you can grow nothing but timber? It is a system by which you would drive the agricultural interests of the producers of this country into other countries to live and to acquire land.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, we squeezed out a great quantity of venom from the existing law when we adopted this amendment, after protracted discussion in the Senate. We are to-day protesting against the reinstatement of that venom; that is all. The venom comes in small packages. It is like some very powerful medicines; it kills in small quantities.

The insertion of the word "chiefly," a very small word, changes the whole system of Government as applied to the public lands and their classification. We cut out "chiefly" because it was deadly poison to the settlers and those who would avail themselves of the rights on the public lands. Someone has hunted up the fragments of that broken bottle and refilled it and tried to put it back in the bill. Now, we are here to protest against it.

We insist that the conferees on the part of the Senate shall insist upon omitting the word "chiefly" where they have inserted it. They have omitted it on line 13 and inserted it on line 22. It is important to us. I say "us"; I mean all the people of the United States, because I defy the East to prosper independent of the West. We are not only your market, but we are your producers. We saved you in 1907 when you had the bank panic. It was in the East; it was not in the West.

Now, that line 24 must come. That is an exception from the area of land opened to classification. That is as great as the land subject to classification and may be made many times greater by the construction of some clerk in the department.

Let me gather up the suggestions. Strike out the word "chiefly," in line 22, on page 50, and restore the language as it is found in the Senate amendment. Strike out the proposition that comes to us from the conference committee. When I first rose to inquire as to the manner of dealing with this question, I had before me the language that was afterwards dealt with by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. I rose, if in order, to move to strike out the words in line 3, page 51, applicable to national forests, because that put us right back where we are now. We thought when this bill went from the Senate with the Senate amendments we had it reduced down within reasonable lines, and for the present at least very much improved. It comes back to us with the objections that we thought we had overcome reinserted in the bill, and we certainly shall do what we can to oppose the adoption of the conference report. Let it go back to the conference and let our conferees say to those with whom they confer that the Senate will not submit to having undone all the good work that they accomplished.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I make a suggestion?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to his colleague?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Wyoming, in discussing this question a few moments ago, said the conferees were between the Senate and the House and the Agricultural Department or the departments. That brings to my mind the proposition that there has grown up a custom here of the conferees of the Senate representing the departments instead of representing the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. Evidently the Senator did not hear what I said yesterday in regard to the departments, or he would hardly make that remark as applied to me.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator said it just a moment ago. I was addressing myself to the remark the Senator just made, that the conferees had to satisfy the House and the Senate and the department. The department has nothing in the world to do with this proposition.

Mr. WARREN. I think I did not say to satisfy; I said we were between the fires.

Here is what I wish to have understood: The House is a coordinate branch, having the same rights that we have. The departments have the right of administration, and in whatever we do we must tie it as closely as we can, but in the end they have the administration. The Senator knows that.

Mr. HEYBURN. Under the law; not outside of it.

Mr. WARREN. Under the law and as they construe the law.

Mr. HEYBURN. Not as they construe it. They have no power to construe the law.

Mr. WARREN. I have often heard of the man who was in jail and was told he could not be put in jail. It is true that they have to follow the law; but when I said as they construe it, I meant that we are not there to see that they do this or do that. We make the law as plain as we can and hold them responsible as far as we can. I simply used the term as being between the departments, because they have the handling of this money and they have the administration. We can not avoid that. We will tie them up as closely as we can and as well as we can, and then must take the consequences.

Mr. HEYBURN. We have the power to control this subject under consideration. I agree with my colleague and also with the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Wyoming that those words applicable to the national forests in line 3, page 51, ought to be stricken out, and that our conferees ought to insist that they should be omitted. We fought it over here for days in the Senate, if I may use that term, and we were supported by the vote of the Senate. Why should not the conferees sustain the wisdom of the Senate? Then, again, in amendment 86——

Mr. BORAH. I do not know that it would be proper to ask this question; if it is not proper to ask it I will consider it not asked; but I should like to ask if this section was not redrafted in accordance with the suggestion of the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, if my colleague will permit me, I will suggest that there is the strongest reason for believing that the objections to the Senate amendment came from the department, and from nowhere else.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, if Senators propose to impale the conference committee upon that kind of assertions, with the conferees bound as they are with whatever confidential relations may exist between the Houses, we can not here say what the House may do or the House may say. But I wish in this connection to say that so far as I am concerned no department has dictated anything to me to go into a conference report unless I asked the favor that they draft it as a part of the law.

Mr. HEYBURN. I cheerfully accede to that. I did not make a statement——

Mr. WARREN. And when we get to the House they may draft it or we may draft it. Whether or not an amendment has been drafted by the department, it is not for us to make an accusation. We know that we meet honorable gentlemen in conference, and we must consider them as they do us.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was speaking from an entirely impersonal standpoint. I was speaking of the condition that exists. So I say I still believe that these changes came from the department, because they were departmental propositions. The department was merely fighting to retain the conditions under which they have been administering this law—conditions which the Senate had repudiated by the adoption of this amendment.

Now, a little further, in line 8, page 58, the word "chiefly" is again inserted, notwithstanding the fact that the Senate had stricken out that word, in defining what lands should be classified and how they should be classified. It comes back again, and it comes back wherever they can get it in.

I go down to lines 16 and 18, on page 51. I called my colleague's attention to it during his remarks in interrupting him. I want to say an original word in regard to that. After providing in this insufficient and imperfect way for the classification of these lands, they then say:

But no land listed under the act of June 11, 1906—

And we all know that act—

shall pass from the forest until patent issues.

Of course, under the law the title does not pass in the United States, but this adds the additional burden that they shall not pass from under the dominion and control of the Forestry Service. In other words, during all the five years that a man was living on his homestead he would be subject, not to the laws of the United States under which he was seeking to acquire, but subject to the annoyances and restrictions of the Forestry Service.

Mr. WARREN. I do not so understand that.

Mr. HEYBURN. It says so in English.

Mr. WARREN. One moment—

But no land listed under the act.

They might list a good deal that was not settled upon.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am only referring to that which is sought to be taken up.

Mr. WARREN. The moment a man settles on it he is entitled to all the benefits he gets under the homestead act.

Mr. HEYBURN. No; this restriction applies to him. It is intended to apply to him. I know what the intention of the department is from considerable experience with them in regard to these matters. They insist upon retaining the jurisdiction over the individual settler who has selected listed lands of this character, and they do it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I wish to say to the Senator from Idaho that, as he well knows, I am thoroughly in accord with him so far as his remarks touch amendment No. 85, but he is now directing his remarks to amendment No. 86, on page 51. I understand that that amendment is not subject to criticism at this time in the conference report. As I understand it, that amendment is exactly as the Senate agreed upon it.

Mr. HEYBURN. I understand that, too. As I said, I think in the beginning of my remarks on it, I was indulging in a criticism of a principle that is in this bill without pointing to it as one of the matters contained in the report.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I thought the Senator was addressing himself to it in opposition to the conference report.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am going to discuss another one for a minute that comes under the same classification as the last one. I want to call attention to the purpose of the enactment of the stone-and-timber act as it affected homesteads and settlers.

There was a vast proportion of the country that was not within timber or near it, and the stone-and-timber act was originally enacted in order that a homesteader or settler upon open land might have, in addition to that, the opportunity to secure timber for building and fencing or stone for building and fencing. I know in the early days in the Palouse country and countries so situated there were millions of acres of land that had no timber at all and no available stone for building purposes. Those men, in addition to their homestead, went up into the mountains that lie all around and encircle that vast country and took up their little stone-and-timber claims, and they hauled their wood and their stone from those claims to sustain and build up their ranches.

It was necessary; it was a wise provision. If that law was abused and taken undue advantage of, that is the fault of the administrators of the law and not of the law itself. That was the purpose of the stone and timber act. The stone and timber act should have been limited to those who owned their land; it should have been an adjunct to a homestead. The law should have provided, and should now be amended so as to provide, that a person having a homestead upon which there was not sufficient growth of timber to supply the needs of building and maintenance of buildings should have the right to go upon the timberlands and take up a limited quantity, and that the same should pass with the nontimbered lands. I make that suggestion. I have on other occasions felt that it should be made, and I have omitted doing so.

Mr. President, the question, I presume, being upon the adoption of the conference report, I sincerely hope that the Senate will sustain the position which it took when this bill was before it, and send this report back to conference, with instructions to our conferees to make a further effort to secure the provisions that we incorporated in this bill in this body; in other words, that we shall not retreat from them as yet. There is no great hurry about this matter. If there was, it is better to do it right, and I would regret very much to see one of those forms of adoption, when the Chair says, "Those in favor of the adoption of the report of the conference committee will say 'aye'" and "those opposed will say 'no'"; and to see that inattention that sometimes attends the determination of such questions. I am not asking the Senate to do anything new; I am only asking it to stand by what it has already done.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, amendment numbered 95, on page 54, as it passed the Senate, provided that an addition of 25 per cent of the proceeds of forest reserves in forest States should be available at the end of the fiscal year 1912 for the purpose of the construction of roads in the State in which the forest reserve is located. The really important part of that amendment, however, in my judgment, as it passed the Senate was the provision that this should apply hereafter, making it a permanent law. Apparently the conferees have agreed upon a provision that instead of 25 per cent additional it shall be reduced to 10 per cent. That would not be so objectionable, although it is rather undesirable, but they have left out the word "hereafter," so that, as agreed to by the conferees, it simply provides that an additional 10 per cent of the proceeds for the year ending June 30, 1912, shall be available. It does seem to me that that was a very great mistake on the part of the conferees.

Mr. BURNHAM. Mr. President, the word "hereafter" was stricken out after very considerable discussion for the reason that some of the conferees—I need not state on which side—were opposed to making this appropriation permanent and desired to leave it open so that it might be determined from year to year. It is a matter of difference between 25 and 10 per cent. It was a compromise, and was the best that could be done. We came as near as we could to the Senate amendment.

Mr. JONES. It seems to me that the department under this amendment will have no assurance that it will have anything additional for the coming year, and the work can not be planned. In my judgment, it amounts to practically no benefit out of this additional 10 per cent. That is the objection that I have to it. I am inclined to think that it is worse than no provision at all; and unless we make an increase which the department can rely upon, under which they can plan their work and lay out their roads, to appropriate such a small additional amount for the one year is practically throwing that much money away. I think that our conferees should at least have insisted upon continuing the appropriation, so that the department could lay out its work; and if it was found not a good measure let Congress repeal it hereafter.

I am very sorry that the conferees not only reduced the appropriation to 10 per cent, but especially that they cut down the provision for future work by the appropriation.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, it is the easiest thing in the world when a Senator has his mind intently fixed upon a certain course to think that it is foolish to do anything else. I want to say to the Senator that he can not possibly have more anxiety than I had to retain this provision as it was in the bill as it went from the Senate, but it came down to the simple alternative that we should take that or take nothing. I am not enough used to money to say that a couple of hundred thousand dollars shall be thrown over my shoulder this year because I can not get an equal amount next year. If I want it this year, I want it now; and if I can get it next year, I also want it then. As I have said it was either to take this 10 per cent or to take nothing. If we took nothing this year, we had no place to start the next year upon.

I want to say furthermore, in justice to the Forestry Bureau as such, that it stood for the idea of appropriating hereafter and making the appropriation 25 per cent.

I ought to say to the Senator that this was one of the last items, after long and tedious hours, to which the conferees on the part of the Senate consented to yield; as this appropriation now stands it amounts to something over $200,000, which will be available at the end of this month. It does seem to me that if we accept this for the Forest Service, knowing almost exactly how much it is, we have the advantage of having the $200,000 with which to commence this work, and we shall have a better basis to start upon again. Not only that, but we have secured the expenditure for roads of the receipts from the forests in the localities from where they were collected; in other words, 10 per cent of the money that comes from the forests in Idaho and the forests in Montana is to be invested upon the roads there within those forests with the understanding that, so far as possible, the Forest Service will cooperate with the county authorities in connecting with regular county roads. After the struggle to maintain our position I do not think it would be wise on the part of the conferees to say if we can not get all we want we will take nothing.

Mr. HEYBURN. Well, Mr. President, we promised not to try to do this again. In the Sixtieth Congress, when the Forest Service, controlling at that time the department of which it was only a bureau, undertook to carry the fund resulting from the forests as a separate fund, subject to their disposition, some of the oldest and most experienced and able Senators in this body joined with those who objected to it and completely abolished that practice. In other words, they said that the money should be turned into the Treasury of the United States, and there is a law on the statute books now which was enacted at that time which provides that this money shall be turned into the Treasury of the United States; that we shall not say by an act of Congress "There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the hands of the Chief Forester not otherwise expended," a certain sum, but that we shall adhere to the law and the custom of the ages, and say that "There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States," and so forth.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator permit me there?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. I have been one who has undertaken to maintain that law, I believe, in conection with all appropriation bills and to as great an extent as any Senator could do.

Mr. HEYBURN. I know the Senator has stood with us.

Mr. WARREN. But we have made exceptions in certain cases, and every later law repeals, to a certain extent, a former one. We found it necessary in the great reclamation act to provide for turning over the money going out and coming in, and in the act that forms the foundation of the Forest Service we provided for a certain percentage of the receipts—first, 10, and then 25 per cent—to be paid directly to the States. That money did not go to the Treasury of the United States and become a part of the general fund.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am not referring to that.

Mr. WARREN. The provision under consideration simply adds that much more that we are to take from this Government money extracted from what we think are our forests and reinvest it in the roads in these forests of ours.

Mr. HEYBURN. I had no reference whatever to the proportion to be paid to the States; I had reference only to the fund available to the Forestry Service to be expended under its irresponsible direction. If I am correct in my recollection, the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] took an active part in the suppression of the bad practice of allowing a department of the Government to retain money coming into its hands and reappropriating it on its own judgment, without having it turned back into the Treasury.

Mr. WARREN. We all accepted that; and that fund, as the Senator will remember, represented the sum total of the moneys received from the forest reserves and was used as a lump fund——

Mr. HEYBURN. Amounting to $1,300,000.

Mr. WARREN (continuing). To pay to Tom, Dick, and Harry any price the managers of that fund saw fit to pay. We took the wise course of having the money go into the Treasury to be appropriated out again.

Mr. HEYBURN. We took the constitutional course.

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. We have again been forgetting the constitutional provision with regard to the disposition of appropriations remaining unexpended at the end of the year or the proceeds of the Government at the end of the fiscal year, and have been allowing executive officers to make appropriations on their own responsibility because they happened to have the money in their hands. We provided then—and it is the law and the statute now—that they should turn in the unexpended balance and proceeds arising from the execution of their particular departments to the Treasury of the United States. I can remember when the distinguished Senator from Maine, Mr. Hale, stood here and inveighed against any relaxation in favor of any minor proposition, because, as he said, the great principle was involved as to whether or not the Treasury of the United States was to be our medium of circulation in business transactions of the Government or whether or not bureau chiefs and division heads should say, "We have so much money on hand which we have realized in the execution of the law, and we will expend it as we see fit." They tried to do that without Congress knowing that they were doing it. In the report they made in that year they did not disclose the fact that they had this money in hand until we compelled them to do so. They proposed to expend it. I do not say that they proposed to misappropriate it, but they wanted a great big fund, a treasure fund, that they might use.

It is the law of the land that they shall not do so, and yet we are proposing here in this conference amendment, on page 55 of this bill, that they may take $225,000—that is the figure estimated—without turning it into the Treasury and receiving authority to expend it. We are in effect enacting a law that says the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized to expend this money, not out of the Treasury of the United States, but out of the money that he has received as an officer of the United States. Let us not do it.

The rule of "Oh, just do it this time" is the most dangerous rule that could possibly be invoked in legislation. That is the suggestion, as I understand—"Let us do it this time, because there are some particular circumstances which we have not time to explain." We understand the situation perfectly well. They have this money. Let them turn it into the Treasury of the United States, and let us provide then, as the wisdom of the Congress may dictate, for its payment in response to an appropriation. If they take this $225,000 this year, they will be back to where they were when we found them at it a few years ago with $1,300,000 in just such a fund.

I think that the bill ought to go back to conference in order that these suggestions may be given further attention.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LODGE in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I assume that the conferees on the part of the Senate sought to retain all the provisions that they could that were incorporated when the bill was pending in the Senate; and if the report is sent back to the conferees it will be for the purpose of enabling them to see if they can retain for the Senate more of the provisions which have been put in by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senate choose to disagree to the conference report, they then, under the ordinary course, insist further on their amendments and ask for a further conference, with such instructions as the Senate choose to add if they desire to add any.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, in voting not to agree to the report, then, we simply ask our conferees to insist further upon the action of the Senate heretofore taken and obtain for us, if possible, more of our action than they have already obtained. It does not seem to me that it is in any sense a reflection upon the committee; but we simply give them once more our backing to obtain for the Senatee a little more what the Senate wants.

I wish to call attention to one amendment that was yielded, which I am especially anxious to see the conference committee insist on, and I shall vote against approving the report particularly for that reason, because it is that matter to which my attention especially is directed.

The Senate placed in the bill as an amendment a provision for a division of markets in the Statistical Bureau of the Agricultural Department. I see that the conferees on the part of the Senate have yielded to the House conferees, and that that provision is stricken out. I can not doubt, Mr. President, that with somewhat more insistence the House conferees will agree to that amendment. To place it on this bill is the only way to pass it at this session of the Senate.

I am sure of its great value; it involves a very small expense, but it is a practical outlay in the interest of the whole people.

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] called my attention a few moments ago to the work which might have been done recently by such a bureau in gathering statistics as to the quantity of potatoes in different sections of the United States. In one portion of the United States there were large quantities selling at a small price, while in other portions they were selling at a very high price because the supply there was very short. He also called my attention to the fact that recently in some sections seed corn was very scarce, while in other sections the supply was ample. I believe that the proposed division of markets could gather information, and would naturally absorb information, with but little expense in matters of that kind. Where a supply exists those interested would often communicate with the division of markets, and where a shortage exists they would call on the division of markets; so that with less expenditure more practical good could be accomplished than in nearly any line of expenditure we make in connection with the Agricultural Department.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes, sir.

Mr. GRONNA. I also want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that recently we imported several thousand bushels of potatoes from Ireland, which paid a duty of 25 cents a bushel and which were sold right in this city at prices as high as are paid for apples—$2 a bushel—while out in the West they were selling for 60 cents a bushel.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I thank the Senator from North Dakota. It is the earnest conviction of the heads of the farmers' organizations that this clearing house of the United States will be of very great value to them. I can see, from the practical illustration given by the Senator, how valuable it can be, and I am going to vote against approving the report of the conference committee, especially because I hope that by insisting somewhat more upon that feature of the action of the Senate the House will yield.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I sympathize with the Senator in his wish to have his particular measure adopted, and I want to assure him that the conferees of the Senate did the best they could for him. Will the Senator please consider for a moment the condition in which the conferees were placed? Very nearly every Senator in the body has something in which he is deeply interested. If every Senator should seek to send back a conference report because he does not get the particular thing he wants, I think the Senator will see how difficult it would be to compose these differences between the two Houses.

I must say that I think the Senate conferees have done very well, under the circumstances. As the Senator will see from the report here, the Senate receded to from 29 of its amendments. The House receded from its opposition to 112, and it receded from the balance of the amendments with modifications. I think that is a pretty fair percentage for the managers of the Senate to attain. I do not believe we can get as good an agreement hereafter, because some of these agreements were only reached after a pretty severe struggle and because of the desire of the House members to close up on one general proposition.

If the motion prevails to send it back to conference every item will be open, and we will be just where we began. The House is not bound to recognize a single recession as now made. It is a dangerous proposition, where a reasonable conference has been held and after a reasonable report is made, in my judgment, to send it back with any expectation of getting any better results. Of course some Senator, in order to save one amendment, might wish the conferees to submit to recessions that we have not made. I do not think the Senator from Georgia would want that done, but we are in that position, and I hope the report of the conference committee will be adopted.

Mr. BORAH. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if the appropriation for the buffalo reserve is retained in the bill?

Mr. BURNHAM. The Wind Cave Reservation?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. BURNHAM. I think that remains.

Mr. BORAH. That is good.

Mr. HEYBURN. I rose in response to the suggestion or what might be taken from the language of the Senator to mean that the objections I have urged against this report are in a spirit of criticism. They are not.

Mr. WARREN. I understand that perfectly.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am objecting to this provision to which I called attention, and I am in very keen sympathy with the suggestion of the junior Senator from Georgia. I think were it possible we should have the enjoyment in our domestic business circles of the consular reports from abroad. That is a pretty big territory. That should be at the expense of the Government. But I am not going to urge it or to make any captious objection. I hope the bill will go back to the committee. It is not unusual that a bill goes back to the conference committee.

Mr. WARREN. It is very unusual in the case of a general appropriation bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. But there is the same reason for an appropriation bill going back to the conference committee as in the case of any other bill. I think if the Senate conferees were to urge upon the other members of the conference committee the fact that the Senate was very earnest upon this matter and was not inclined to yield that which they had gained after so much struggle in the way of amendments to the existing law, some good might result from it, and I will move, if there is no other motion pending, that the bill be sent back to conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No motion is necessary. The question is on agreeing to the report.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was inclined to ask that the bill go back with instructions, which is within the rule. I will not do that. I will stand upon the proposition of sending it back.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In respect to a motion to send back the conference report with instructions, the Chair suggests that the motion to agree has, of course, precedence of any other motion.

Mr. HEYBURN. I know it has, Mr. President. I know it has precedence of any other motion, but we have heretofore sent back reports with instructions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is certainly within the power of the Senate to send it back with instructions.

Mr. WARREN. Usually, when reports are sent back with instructions, it is where the conferees have agreed upon some parts of the bill and have not agreed as to others, and while such a motion would not be out of order, it is very unusual to send a conference report back with instructions, after the conferees have come to a full agreement.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will move to send it back with instructions. I have given some attention to the rules in this particular——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is true that the House yielded to a number of suggestions of the Senate, but the whole of the original bill came from the House. That bill dealt with innumerable matters, and when we agreed to what the House did we were acquiescing in their measure. This is a body of concurrent jurisdiction. Nearly everything in the bill we agreed to, and if they had agreed to every suggestion of the Senate the House still would be here presenting in legislation far more than the Senate was presenting, and it seems to me for us to insist a little more vigorously—just a little more—upon what the Senate has added is not unreasonable, and I am sure in doing so I for one have the greatest respect for our representatives upon the conference committee. I would cast no vote that was intended to manifest any lack of confidence in them. I am extremely anxious to see this legislation go upon the pending bill, and I have reason to think and to entertain the hope that if we insist the conferees on the other side will yield.

Mr. WARREN. Replying to the Senator, he must understand that general annual appropriation bills arise in the House under our Constitution, or rather under the custom for all these years.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not under our Constitution, but under practice.

Mr. WARREN. Revenue bills arise there under the Constitution, but the contention of the House all these years has been that general appropriation bills should also arise on the other side.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In the First Congress I think there were several members of the Constitutional Convention, and they all, without exception, asserted that it was the constitutional right of the House to originate supply bills, and it was also the assertion of Mr. Hamilton, in an article in the Federalist, that the power to originate supply bills was exclusively within the constitutional right of the House. I do not want to get into that subject now. I promised on a former occasion, and got permission, to put into the RECORD some views on that subject, but I have not done so, although I have it partially prepared and will insert it within the next week. I give notice of that now.

Mr. WARREN. The debate took in its scope that feature, and the Senator from Mississippi and I had a colloquy. I remember his taking the opposite ground. He was going to insert in the RECORD certain matter. I was to be notified, that I might insert some views upon my side of the question. I have not heard from it since, so I have not done anything about it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I now notify the Senator from Wyoming that I will insert it during this seven-day week if I can.

Mr. Madison took the position in the Virgina convention, when recommending the adoption of the Federal Constitution, that all "supply bills"—showing that this was equivalent to the phrase adopted, being "general appropriation bills," to wit, "bills to raise revenue"—must originate in the House. Special appropriation bills were not required to originate in the House; only the general or "supply" bills. The meaning of the phrase to "raise revenue" is synonymous with the phrase "bills to raise money for the Government," and meant to raise revenue by appropriation of the Legislature, and to put this revenue, as a Government revenue, at the behest of the Executive. When there is no money in the Treasury it is done by levying taxes, and when there is money in the Treasury it is done simply by appropriating it out of the Treasury, so that the Executive may expend it. Not one dollar can be expended by the Executive until the Legislature authorizes its expenditure. Until then it is not Government revenue. Money can not become available for the Government until the legislative branch has provided it by appropriation for paying current expenses. The legislative branch provides by taxes or by appropriations, or by both in one bill, the Government revenues to be expended on executive warrants.

Even if the money be in the Treasury, it is not Government revenue until after an appropriation by Congress.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, it is not my desire to raise a constitutional discussion of that question. I do not think it makes any difference so far as the present question is concerned. I am only exceedingly anxious that the conferees shall take into consideration the provisions I refer to, and if we do disagree to this report, they would have to take up in conference only certain provisions of the bill. However, I do not know what is the parliamentary practice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will say to the Senator from Georgia that the motion to agree to the conference report, of course, takes precedence of all others, because it is the motion which will most quickly bring the Houses into agreement. If that motion is not agreed to, it is then in order to insist upon a further conference. The report has to be accepted or rejected in its entirely, but in insisting upon a further conference it is within the power of the Senate, and it was so decided upon one occasion, to instruct as to any particular amendment which the Senate has adopted.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the conference report is not agreed to, I would be glad to consult the wishes of the conferees as to whether they would simply prefer to confer further upon certain questions or upon the entire subject.

With reference to that, I should prefer that it be given that direction which would facilitate the labor of these gentlemen, who I know have labored so earnestly for us both in this matter and other matters.

Mr. BORAH. On what page does the amendment of the Senator from Georgia appear?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Page 76; it is numbered 154.

Mr. BORAH. Providing that there shall be a division of markets?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is it.

Mr. BORAH. "The chief of said division shall receive a salary of $3,000 per annum, and the assistant chief a salary of $2,500 per annum."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes. It is found on that page.

Mr. BORAH. This, as I understand, is one of the amendments which the Senate put into the bill and which was left out in conference. I hope this bill will go back for further conference, not in any sense as a criticism of the conferees, but there are many things in this bill which it seems to me we may well desire to have reconsidered.

For instance, on page 68 we have the amendment which the Senate put on the bill providing fifteen or twenty thousand dollars for a bison reserve, to take care of some buffalo.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator from Idaho wish to send this bill back so that the Senate conferees may have an opportunity to recede from the amendments the Senate added?

Mr. BORAH. No; but it seems to me it ought to more regularly deal with this and other matters which are important.

Mr. WARREN. I wish the attention of the Senator from Georgia. The Chair covered the ground very well, that when a conference report is rejected the matter is back exactly where it was when it was first sent to conference, without any binding agreement upon any of the conferees.

Now, I undertake to say, with a great appropriation bill, after the conferees have got together in full agreement, to send it back to get the balance of the Senate's amendment allowed is taking a hazard to which I ought not to neglect the opportunity of directing the attention of Senators. In my somewhat extended service here it has been almost never that a general appropriation bill that was fully agreed upon has been sent back, and I can not recall a time when there has been a full agreement that a bill has been sent back with instructions, although it may have happened.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. May I ask the Senator——

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to be permitted to say——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If Senators will permit the Chair, the Chair stated that the report must be accepted or rejected in its entirety.

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And the Chair stated that it was not the practice of the Senate to give instructions, but that the power to give instructions was undoubted.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator permit me to ask the Senator from Wyoming a question?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I understand that if the conference report is not agreed to, it will be agreeable to the Senator from Wyoming to limit our request for a further conference as to certain items.

Mr. WARREN. It depends upon the instructions.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I want to know.

Mr. WARREN. My desire is that the report shall be adopted, but if it is rejected, then the Senate may take whatever course may be its pleasure.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. My own preference would be to limit it to these particular items, so as to relieve the conference committee of the labor——

Mr. HEYBURN. That can be accomplished by the Senate sending certain items to be reconsidered and by directing the attention of the committee to them.

The Senator from Wyoming has very plausibly and properly stated that this had been a work of magnitude, that they had agreed, and that if it went back to conference it would be all open again, and so forth. But I would suggest that there have been times when conference committees advised the Senate that disagreements existed so that they could make a partial report and then ask for a further conference. Had those who have been so zealously contending for the maintenance of the rights of the settler been advised of these changes, they undoubtedly would have submitted to a partial report of the committee and then asked that the conferees on the part of the Senate be instructed to consider further these particular items. But we had no knowledge of it. I never dreamed that the conferees would bring in an agreement here involving such radical retractions of the action we had taken. We thought we had gained a victory, and we find that we not only gain nothing but that a new policy has been placed upon us. It seems to me, and I do not say it in any spirit of——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is obliged, the hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 20182) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. If there is no objection, it will be so ordered, and the unfinished business is temporarily laid aside. The Senator from Idaho will proceed.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I have but little more to say. Had we been advised of the jeopardy to the great interests that we had contended for strenuously, we would then have been prepared to take such steps as we might take under the rules of practice governing conferences and the rules of procedure generally, and we would have anticipated the difficulties that confront us to-day. But we had no opportunity until last night, when this bill came in from the conferees, to know that we had lost in conference all that we had gained in the Senate. We are not, of course, inclined to yield without some effort to retrieve against such loss.

Had there been a partial report, advising us that the conference was not able to agree upon these points, we might then, under the rules of this body, have asked that the report so far as it had been agreed upon be accepted and that a further conference be had upon these items. But we are in rather a difficult position this morning, with the first intimation of the utter defeat of those who contended for these reforms in the Forestry Service confronting us here on a final vote as to whether or not we will accept this report.

Now, that is all I desire to say.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, before this matter is voted upon I should like to have the Senate understand in a brief sentence what it is that we are interested in from the western part of the United States so far as this bill is concerned.

The proviso in the bill as it passed the Senate was the elimination of the agricultural lands from the forest reserves. It passed the Senate by a large vote with practically no opposition because it was conceded that it was a thing that ought to be accomplished, and we appropriated a certain sum of money for it.

Now, they retain an appropriation of $25,000, but the amendment has been so adjusted as to accomplish nothing at all. So we are in a position of appropriating $25,000 without getting any relief whatever.

Now, one thing or the other certainly can be accomplished; either we can secure this enactment as it ought to be, with the provision as it should be written so that it will be effectual, or else we can certainly eliminate the provision and not pretend to do that which is not being done.

There is not anything more vital to us who are in the new States than this question, although it is covered by a simple, short amendment. I do not understand how conferees coming from either side of this legislative body or the other could long contend against the elimination of the lands. I venture to say here and now that if the influence of the departments were eliminated there would not be any difficulty in the end in agreeing upon this amendment.

I am not willing that it shall be said, until I know, that the influence which keeps the amendment in the form in which it is now is in the House or is in any other than the department. It seems that we have arrived at the time when the conferees represent not only the bodies which legislate, but represent the bureaus of the Government. It is well worth our while to see whether or not the representatives of the Senate can avail against the representatives of the bureaus in making laws.

If for no other reason, the bill ought to go back to settle for once and all whether the wisdom of the Senate or the wisdom of Congress shall prevail in writing a law or whether the objection of the department shall prevail in preventing its having final action.

Mr. BURNHAM. Mr. President, I wish to say just a word. The conferees met together—the conferees of the Senate representing the amendments, every one of them, that was proposed and passed by the Senate. We met the conferees on the other side and heard their views with reference to these different amendments and we discussed each and every one of them.

I wish to say that, out of 180 amendments proposed by the Senate, the House receded in 111 and the Senate conferees in 29, and of the Senate recessions I have heard only three or four complaints. I think this compares very favorably with any conference report on such a measure as this that has ever been submitted.

With reference to this report, I do not believe if it went back to the House again with everything open, as it would be, we would secure a conference report nearer the measure as it passed the Senate than it stands to-day. I trust that the conference report will be adopted. It is the result of the labors of the Senate conferees faithfully and earnestly given to this subject, together with the conferees of the other House. With fair-mindedness they approached this question and by mutual concessions they agreed upon this conference report, and I sincerely trust that it may receive the favor of the Senate. I move its adoption.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I heartily agree with the Senator from New Hampshire in expressing the hope that the Senate will not refer the bill back to the conference committee. It is true, as the Senator from Georgia says, that in accepting the provisions of the bill as it came to us from the House we agreed with the House on innumerable propositions. But it is also proper to say in this connection that there was not an item in the bill as it came to us from the House on which there were not hearings and the opinions of the departments and other witnesses had on the subject?

I have examined the conference report in the light of the bill, and it seems to me that the conferees on the part of the Senate have done most excellent work. The report comes from the conference committee with a number of the appropriations very materially reduced, but in its essential details it is a bill that is in as good shape or in better shape than when it passed both Houses and went to conference.

I hope that the conference report will be adopted.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, ordinarily I should feel very much inclined to agree with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] and those who favor the adoption of this conference report, but I believe that a further consideration of this matter by the conferees will result in a more satisfactory adjustment of the differences between the two Houses.

I am impressed with what the Senator from Georgia has said regarding amendment No. 154, on page 76 of the bill. It seems to me that that is a very important amendment, of great interest to the agricultural people of our country; that it is so valuable that it ought not to be yielded if it can be sustained, and certainly not until other provisions in the bill submitted by amendments of the Senate are again thrashed out before the conferees.

For instance, it does not seem to me possible that the conferees, upon a full and fair and further consideration of all these amendments, will prefer that the Senate shall yield that amendment, which is of so great importance to the agricultural interests of this country, and insist upon a game preserve in the State of Wyoming, acquiring some 2,000 acres of land and involving an appropriation of $50,000.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. FLETCHER. I am in favor of that amendment; I agree to it; but it seems to me that there is no comparison in the value of the two propositions to the whole country.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. A rather personal allusion has been made to a matter affecting my State. I wish to say that I did not originate that amendment. I did not ask for it, because it is in Wyoming. I told the committee plainly that Wyoming did not require it, and if they should want to put in any other State a preserve for elk the important matter was whether the United States wished to preserve the elk or not, not that Wyoming should be benefited.

On the other hand, I want to say to the Senator if there had been the slightest objection upon the part of any one of the committee or of the conferees on the other side the amendment would have gone out as far as I am concerned. I put it before them. I said if any man had objection I was willing that it should go out.

Mr. FLETCHER. I had no intention——

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. FLETCHER. One minute, if the Senator will allow me. I had no intention whatever of implying that the Senator from Wyoming was looking out for any particular local interest or anything of that sort. I have no such notion. I simply compared two items in the bill, that is all. Those items happened to fall under my eye as being appropriations of a similar amount of money. One involves an appropriation of $50,000 and so does the other involve an appropriation of $50,000. It seems to me if the conferees would consider the two items side by side they would insist rather upon yielding the appropriation for a game reserve than the item for establishing this bureau of information of so great importance to the people.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I can not allow that assertion to go unchallenged. On the game-preserve matter there was not a dissenting voice. It was not disputed at all. When we came into conference the House conferees said, "Very well; we recede." It was not a matter of weighing it against any other amendment, as I said a moment ago. It would not have taken a moment to wipe it out if there had been objection, if I could have gained anything anywhere else. I cared nothing more for it nor did the Senate conferees care any more for it than that it was a public matter.

The proposition the Senator is talking about received all the aid that we could give it. One was a contested matter; the other was not. So the comparison is not certainly a fair one. It was an uncontested matter in one case and a contested matter in the other.

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course, I understand bills are contested on amendments put on in the Senate. Senate amendments are presented and the bills are contested by the House conferees as thus amended. The Senate conferees are obliged to yield in one instance and not in the other.

I do not for a moment impute any impropriety whatever on the part of the Senator from Wyoming. That is not my idea or my purpose, and I trust he will not consider it in that way. I simply mentioned it as being in the bill and as being located in Wyoming. It would not make any difference to me whether it was located in any other State, nor would it make any difference to the Senator. I simply submitted the subject of a game preserve being established in this country at an expense of $50,000 as against a proposition involving this bureau or division in the Agricultural Department which would be of so much value, I take it, to the farmers of the country.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I wish to ask if the amendment on page 69, covered by amendment 121, did not originate in the House and was not urged in the Senate, from whom did the strength come which enabled it to get there and stay there? It is one of those things which have been put in words by the department to show that the department is running the bill.

Mr. WARREN. What does the Senator allude to?

Mr. BORAH. I allude to the game reserve on page 69.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is a Senate amendment.

Mr. BORAH. The same thing is true with reference to the amendment on page 68.

Mr. FLETCHER. Amendment 117, page 68.

Mr. BORAH. Almost every amendment that had to do with the creation of additional game reserves for bison, elk, and so forth, carrying large appropriations, passed through without any criticism or any objection, and almost every important amendment which had to do with extending additional rights to the agricultural interests has been defeated.

Now, that is the condition in which we are passing this bill through the Senate. We are appropriating here $100,000 for game reserves and cutting out a question of markets, which is of concern to all the agricultural interests of the country. It simply demonstrates what is written upon the face of the bill so radically and conclusively that it can not be controverted—that the department is amending and is passing this measure.

Mr. FLETCHER. I, of course, Mr. President——

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Idaho knows as well as I do that in every appropriation supply bill it commences with and is founded upon the estimates of the departments. It is the duty of departments to estimate, and it is not only considered a duty but an aid and privilege to Congress that they have those estimates so as to have what the department idea is of what is required.

Mr. BORAH. I concede that proposition, but the manner of making estimates and sending them to Congress for the consideration of its Appropriation Committees is a different proposition from a department putting its ban upon one amendment or its approval upon another.

Mr. FLETCHER. I was going to say, Mr. President, that I have no idea where that amendment originated or where the amendment originated establishing a game preserve at the Wind Cave National Park, in the State of South Dakota. I do not mean to say that I am opposed to either one of them, but, on the contrary, I value the interest taken by the Agricultural Department and the information it furnishes. I do not for one instant mean to intimate that they have suggested anything that was not for the public good and in the public interest. I do not mean to intimate that either of these amendments is not proper. I favor both of them. I am in favor of the game preserve in Wyoming for the elk and the game preserve in South Dakota for the buffalo. I think it well to take care of that condition. I am not criticizing that. I am not criticizing anybody who offered the amendment, but I do submit that whereas the conferees have been able to maintain their position with regard to a great majority of the amendments made by the Senate they have given up a number of them, and that as compared with the amendments for game preserves the amendment on page 76 providing for this division of markets in the Agricultural Department, the latter is of vastly more importance to the whole country in my judgment.

Mr. BURNHAM. Mr. President, I wish to say in regard to the amendment passed here to the appropriation bill that the Senate committee had that same bill before it and reported it favorably, and it is upon the calendar. It was regarded as a matter in which there was so much legislation that it could be better considered by the Senate when the bill on that report should be presented to the Senate. So it was thought best not to place a matter of legislation of this sort into an appropriation bill where there was less opportunity for its discussion, and it was left for the Senate at some future time to consider the whole matter. That is one reason why the amendment was not agreed to. Of course there was other objection made by conferees, but that is one of the considerations that entered into the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to agree to the report of the committee of conference. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. WARREN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAILEY (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON]. In his absence and without his authority I do not feel at liberty to vote.

Mr. LIPPITT (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA]. If he were present and I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. RICHARDSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. I will transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LORIMER] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Arizona (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], except as to votes on the tariff measures, on which I am not paired, and reserve the right to vote, and certain executive matters that I will mention in executive session.

Mr. SWANSON (when his name was called). I beg to inquire if the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NIXON] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He has not.

Mr. SWANSON. I have a general pair with that Senator, and consequently I withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). On account of my general pair with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRIGGS], I withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HEYBURN (after having voted in the negative). I inquire whether the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has not.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am paired with that Senator.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I will say to the Senator from Idaho I am satisfied my colleague, the senior Senator from Alabama, would vote as he would vote.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then I am at liberty to vote, and my vote will stand.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was requested to announce that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. GUGGENHEIM] is paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER].

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] is necessarily absent from the Chamber and he is paired with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS].

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 36, as follows:

YEAS—27.

Bourne	Cullom	McLean	Smith, Mich.
Bradley	Curtis	Page	Smoot
Brown	Dillingham	Percy	Stephenson
Burnham	du Pont	Perkins	Townsend
Burton	Gallinger	Richardson	Warren
Chamberlain	Johnson, Me.	Root	Wetmore
Crane	McCumber	Sanders

NAYS—36.

Ashurst	Culberson	Kern	Rayner
Bacon	Fletcher	Martin, Va.	Reed
Borah	Foster	Martine, N. J.	Shively
Bristow	Gardner	Myers	Simmons
Bryan	Gore	Nelson	Smith, Ga.
Catron	Heyburn	Oliver	Stone
Chilton	Hitchcock	Overman	Sutherland
Clapp	Johnston, Ala.	Poindexter	Tillman
Clark, Wyo.	Jones	Pomerene	Works

NOT VOTING—32.

Bailey	Dixon	Lippitt	Penrose
Bankhead	Fall	Lodge	Smith, Ariz.
Brandegee	Gamble	Lorimer	Smith, Md.
Briggs	Gronna	Newlands	Smith, S. C.
Clarke, Ark.	Guggenheim	Nixon	Swanson
Crawford	Kenyon	O'Gorman	Thornton
Cummins	La Follette	Owen	Watson
Davis	Lea	Paynter	Williams

So the conference report was rejected.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the conference report automatically go back to the committee, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would say undoubtedly not. It will take some further action on the part of the Senate to accomplish that.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is what I thought.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments to the bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives and ask for a further conference with the House thereon.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I believe it is usual for such a motion to be made by the Senator in charge of the bill. It is the custom for that Senator to make whatever motion may be necessary for disposing of a bill that is in his charge.

Mr. FLETCHER. I, too, supposed that was customary, Mr. President, but nobody seemed to be doing it; and as it seemed to be going by default, I thought I would make the motion.

Mr. BURNHAM. I will make the two motions which, I understand, are usual in such cases. I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments and that the report be recommitted to the committee of conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire moves that the Senate further insist upon its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives and ask for a further conference with the House thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. BURNHAM, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. BANKHEAD were appointed.

Mr. WARREN. I desire to say that I am of course subject to the disposition of the Senate and I desire to do its bidding; but at the present time, with the pending appropriation bills and with constant calls upon my time, if I am placed upon the board of managers on this bill in a new conference, I am afraid that I can not give it the immediate attention that perhaps the Senate may require. I am therefore perfectly willing to step aside.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I desire to express the hope that the Senator from Wyoming will not ask to be excused and that he will not be excused from serving on the conference committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming has not presented any application to that effect.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I only desired to say to my colleagues that, if immediate attention to this matter is required, I can not attend to it without neglecting other important public business. I am willing to do the work. I want simply to give notice to the Senate; and if they wish to put another in my place it will be perfectly satisfactory to me.

Mr. BURNHAM. I should regret it exceedingly if the Senator from Wyoming should withdraw from the conference committee. I sincerely hope that he will continue to remain a member of it.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. JONES, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 4958) to accept the cession by the State of Washington of exclusive jurisdiction over the lands embraced within the Mount Rainier National Park, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 825) thereon.

Mr. SANDERS. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1485) for the relief of William Mullally, to submit an adverse report (No. 829) thereon.

Mr. POMERENE. I suggest that the bill go to the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. SANDERS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 5949) for the relief of James Danielson, submitted an adverse report (No. 830) thereon, which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

NAVAL STATION, KEY WEST, FLA.

Mr. BRYAN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $5,500 for paving and grading on Whitehead, Front, and Green Streets, at the naval station, Key West, Fla., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill (H. R. 24565), which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. CRANE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 19115) making appropriation for payment of certain claims in accordance with findings of the Court of Claims, reported under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and the Tucker Acts, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 19115) making appropriation for payment of certain claims in accordance with findings of the Court of Claims, reported under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and the Tucker Acts, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I wish to give notice that next Tuesday, at the close of the routine morning business, unless some other appropriation bill is pending, I shall ask the Senate to take up House bill 20728, the Indian appropriation bill.

THE OPIUM EVIL (S. DOC. NO. 733).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication of the Secretary of State covering the report of the American delegation to the International Opium Conference, held at The Hague from December 1, 1911, to January 23, 1912.

In submitting this report the Secretary of State makes certain recommendations regarding bills now before the Congress for the control of our foreign and domestic traffic in habit-forming drugs. I have several times called the attention of the Congress to the necessity for the passage of the proposed measures, and I now indorse the view of the Secretary of State that the Congress should promptly pass these measures, more especially because this Government took the initiative and has been generously supported by 12 other Governments in its efforts to mitigate, if not entirely suppress, the world's opium evil.

Inasmuch as the international opium convention and its protocol de cloture, signed at The Hague by representatives of the United States, China, France, Germany, Great Britain, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Persia, Portugal, Russia, and Siam, have been given publicity by the conference and by the signatory Governments, it is deemed not improper to accompany the report with authentic copies of them.

I am not able at the present moment, however, to ask the advice and consent of the Senate to the ratification of the convention, for it is provided by the final articles of the convention that ratification is to depend upon the Netherlands Government securing by the 31st of December next the supplementary signatures of 34 States named in article 22 of the convention, and that in case the signatures of all the powers invited to sign the convention shall not have been secured by December 31, 1912, the Netherlands Government shall immediately invite all the powers who have signed by that date to designate delegates to proceed to The Hague to examine into the possibility of nevertheless depositing their ratifications. It is my hope and belief that the Netherlands Government will secure the necessary signatures to the convention by the date fixed and that I can then ask the advice and consent of the Senate to the ratification of the convention.

Therefore, at the present time, the international opium convention and its protocol de cloture are submitted to the Congress merely for its information as to the great step in advance which has been taken by 12 States in cooperation with the United States to bring the opium evil to an end.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 31, 1912.

THE METAL SCHEDULE—PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to a statement which I desire to make in the nature of an explanation.

When the steel bill came to a vote on yesterday, I voted upon that bill in the absence of the Senator from Michigan. I did so under a misapprehension with regard to the arrangement for a pair with that Senator. I have learned that the Senator from Michigan was relying upon that arrangement, and I am making the statement now, in order that it may be of record, that he understood he was paired, and I am also making the statement, in justice to myself, so that it may be known that the vote I cast was under a misapprehension with reference to the arrangement.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Missouri is very generous in his statement. I have found no fault whatever with the Senator for voting yesterday in my absence, and should not do so. I think, indeed, that he had ample justification for assuming that it was perfectly agreeable to me. His very generous statement I highly appreciate, and desire to thank him for it.

I wish to say this, however: That I was absent from the Senate yesterday when the vote was taken on the steel bill in performance of a promise I had made to the Grand Army of the Republic organization, which was observing the Memorial Day exercises at Arlington. I had no idea that the vote would be reached on the steel bill yesterday, and acted in cooperation with no other Senator in reference thereto. My absence was due entirely to the fact that I had another engagement, which I regarded as important. If I had been here, I would have voted against the passage of the bill.

EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

Mr. BORAH. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 9061.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 9061.

Mr. BAILEY. What is the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 9061) limiting the hours of daily service of laborers and mechanics employed upon work done for the United States, or for any Territory, or for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, if I thought my objection would finally defeat the bill I would object, but I know it finally must come to a vote and so I will not object.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment is that offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, line 6, after the word "condition," it is proposed to strike out "on account of which the President shall subsequently declare the violation to have been excusable," and also, in line 5, before the word "danger," to insert the word "imminent," so that if amended it will read:

No penalties shall be imposed for any violation of such provision in such contract due to any extraordinary events or conditions of manufacture, or to any emergency caused by fire, famine, or flood, by imminent danger to life or to property, or by other extraordinary event or condition.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not see the Senator from New York present, but I have had some discussion with the Senator from New York with regard to this amendment. I hope the amendment will be defeated. This particular provision in the bill received much consideration at the hands of the committee and was practically agreed upon by all as necessary to the efficiency of the bill; that is, those who favored the bill at all; and those who were opposed to it in its entirety nevertheless regarded some such provision as this necessary to make it a working bill. This provision is that in certain emergencies the President shall declare the violation of the law to have been excusable. This is not an unconstitutional principle, nor an unusual principle in our legislation. I have some authorities here upon the subject, but I do not propose to stop at this time to discuss it, and, with this explanation, I shall, so far as I am concerned, permit the amendment to come to a vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York, which has just been read.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I had intended to address the Senate at some length against this bill, but upon inquiry among Senators I have learned that to do so would be a waste of time and of breath, for it does not seem that those who are opposed to it are even numerous enough to force a roll call upon it if that demand should be resisted. But while I shall forego my inclination to discuss it, I am not willing to see it pass until I have recorded my protest against it.

In the first place, I object to it because it is an effort on the part of Congress to regulate a matter which belongs wholly to the States of this Union. It is plainly designed to regulate the hours of labor within the States; and if that should be attempted by a direct provision, every Senator in this Chamber understands that it would fall before an objection in the courts. Of course, I understand that it happens in many instances, as it does in this, that Congress may, by indirection or by a subterfuge, take from the States matters which properly belong to them and subject those matters to congressional regulation.

But, sir, waiving all question of Federal jurisdiction, I would not support this bill, even in the legislature of a State, because I will never vote to deny a full-grown American citizen the right to make his own contracts with respect to his own employment outside of certain, and peculiar, occupations. I recognize the right of a State, under a proper exercise of its police power, to regulate the hours and conditions of employments which are hazardous or unwholesome; but no government has any right to say to the humblest of its citizens, clothed in his right mind, that it, and not he, shall determine how long he may work at healthful and safe pursuits. That is a kind of tutelage to which I will never agree to reduce an American citizen of legal age and mental competence.

But, Mr. President, if I had no objection like that I would not vote for this bill, because I know that this world can not be run on an 8-hour basis, and so does every other man in this body. There is not a Senator here who can do his work in 8 hours. I do not profess to know the habits of other Senators, and I have no right to speak for them, but for myself I can say that I am compelled to work double that time oftener than I am able to complete my task within 8 hours. Not only is it true that we can not discharge our official duties in 8 hours, but no merchant in this country could escape the bankrupt court if he should open and close his doors upon an 8-hour schedule. The men who are engaged in the basic industry of all the world are not able to do it. If the farmers of the United States should agree that they would work only 8 hours in the day, one of two things would happen—the weeds would encumber every American field or the farmers would be compelled to reduce their acreage at least 33⅓ per cent. Then, sir, what would come to pass? The cry which we hear throughout the land about the high cost of living would be heard with redoubled fury. The men who now congregate in the market places of our cities and declaim against the high price of bread and meat would then have a better reason for doing so, because even the well-paid skilled labor of the cities could scarcely provide the present comforts of their table.

Mr. President, I do not believe that any class of people in this country are entitled to shorter hours or to lighter work than the men who create the very basis of our wealth. Washington said agriculture was the most ancient and the most honorable of all pursuits; and, while he probably overstated it when he said it was the most ancient, because undoubtedly the pursuit of the stream and of the chase—if, indeed, they can be called pursuits—antedated agriculture, he did not err when he said it was the most honorable of all occupations; and it is utterly incomprehensible to me how American legislators can obtain their consent to say that, while the farmers of this country may work 12 hours in the day and 12 months in the year in order to procure the money with which to pay their taxes the Government shall take the taxes which they contribute and pay them to men who work 8 hours in the day, and work nearly all of that 8 hours in the shade.

The farmer not only works through long hours, but he works in the heat, in the cold, and in the rain; he does not have a half holiday on Saturday. It is true he is not always in his field, because the necessities of his home require him sometimes to visit the nearest town or city, but even then he is upon an errand, and he goes to buy the provisions which are needed in order that he may continue his work. The artisans in our cities and in our industrial centers lay down their implements of labor on Saturday afternoon and rest through the Sabbath day; but it is not so with the farmer; his herds and flocks must still be tended; his horses can not go without grain and water from Saturday until Monday; and every day of his life, when his health will permit him to leave his house, the farmer must do some work. Yet while he labors 12 hours in the day in order that he may pay his debts, educate his children, and meet the Government's tax demands against him, shall this Government take his money, earned by 12 hours' labor in sun and in rain, and give it to the men who work in the shade only 8 hours of the day? That, sir, is a discrimination against the very best part of the American people. Are the foreigners who constitute a large part of the labor engaged in these manufacturing industries better entitled to the consideration of the American Congress than the Americans born and employed on our farms? Is this rule of justice and mercy to be applied by the American Congress in favor of the foreign-born working in our factories while it is denied to the native-born who cultivate our farms?

We might leave this, as we have left so many other matters of this kind, to agreements between the employer and the employee. I believe, sir, in labor organizations, and I believe those organizations were intended to do, and ought to do, without the intervention of law, just such work as this. If the employees can organize and force the employer to agree with them on an 8-hour day, that is none of our concern; but when the employees can not force that concession, neither ought it to be our concern to say that the employers must grant it.

One of two things must happen if this bill becomes a law. Either the wages of labor will be reduced to meet the reduction in the hours or else the cost of producing these articles must be increased. I hardly think anyone desires to increase the cost of any article, if I may judge by the complaints which fill this Chamber from day to day against the high cost of living.

I have witnessed a curious change of public sentiment in the last 12 or 15 years. When I first entered politics there seemed to be a widespread disposition, which might almost be characterized as a craze, among the American people to exalt the producer of commodities, and anyone who was producing something or who would erect a factory or establish an enterprise to produce something had only to ask and the Government freely gave him what he asked. Of course, these producers, in their greed, not only oppressed the American consumer, but they overreached themselves, and in the last four or five years there has come a complete reversal of the tendency, until now the demand everywhere is for the consumer, and you never hear anybody lifting his voice in behalf of the producer.

As between the consumer and the producer, if that states the whole case, I am on the producer's side, because the producer of wealth, whether it be on the farm or in the factory, contributes to the sum of human comfort and human happiness, while it often happens that the consumer is a mere idler—if rich, living upon the fortune which his forefathers accumulated, and, if poor, living upon the labor of others. For such men I have no such patience and respect as I have for a man who is working out for himself and his family, and helping his fellow men to work out a great destiny for his country. But, while I believe that the producer deserves consideration, I would do full justice to the consumer.

The advocates of this measure care nothing about the articles which the Government may buy; and the purpose of this bill is to compel every enterprise which contracts with the Government to comply with the 8-hour rule now to be established, and through a kind of coercion to compel the application of that rule in all rival and competing establishments. This Congress may say that the Government shall not buy the steel for its ships, the guns for its Army, or any other article from any contractor who has worked his men longer than 8 hours a day; but it will not dare to say that the Government shall not buy horses or cattle or mules or hay or grain produced on a farm where the farm laborer has worked more than 8 hours in a day.

If we are not to witness an increase in prices arising from such legislation as this, then there must be a corresponding reduction in the wages of labor. If you tell me that the labor organizations will take care of that, I ask why can they not take care of this? If they can prevent a reduction in wages to correspond with this reduction in the hours of labor, then, sir, they can compel a reduction in the hours of labor without coming to the American Congress with a bill like this.

Mr. President, I am not ashamed to say that those to whom I trace my lineage were mechanics in the early times, and I think they had as much right to contract for their personal services as I have to contract for my professional services. I believe, sir, that a man who works with his hands is as tall, in contemplation of the law, as the man who works with his brain, and as one who believes in the dignity of labor I deny the right of the American Congress to deprive the American workingman of the right to make his own contracts with respect to his own labor.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to another grave discrimination in connection with the operation of this bill. All over the country we have factories doing miscellaneous work. Those factories could not exist on the eight-hour plan, and they have been in the habit of contracting for Government work, which they do along with the general work of the country. If this bill passes it will deprive all of those shops over the country of all this Government work, and it will deny the right of doing this work and reaping a profit from it to the men who own the shops and the laborers who work in them. I am very much opposed to any legislation of that kind.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, if I were at liberty to vote, which I am not, in consequence of my pair, I would ask for a roll call on this question, but inasmuch as I could not vote on the roll call, I forbear to ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SANDERS. I ask for a roll call.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAILEY (when his name was called). If I were at liberty to vote I should vote "nay," but owing to my pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON], I withhold my vote.

Mr. BORAH (when the name of Mr. CUMMINS was called). The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] is absent from the city. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. BORAH (when Mr. KENYON's name was called). The Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] is absent from the city. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. LIPPITT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA]. If he were present and I were permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SWANSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NIXON]. If he were present and I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER]. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRIGGS], and withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. If he were here, I should vote "yea." I think if he were here, he would vote the same way, but I do not feel at liberty on that opinion to violate the pair.

Mr. OLIVER. I will take the responsibility of saying to the Senator from Mississippi that he need not withhold his vote on account of his pair.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. GUGGENHEIM] is paired with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER]. This will stand for the day.

Mr. HEYBURN (after having voted in the negative). I voted, not knowing whether or not the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], with whom I am paired, would be present. He has not voted. I therefore transfer my pair with that Senator to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LORIMER], and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to state that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] is necessarily absent. If he were present, he would vote "yea." He is paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. BURNHAM. I have a general pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I announce my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. I do not know how he would vote. If I could vote, I would vote in favor of the measure.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator from Maine [Mr. GARDNER] is not present, and I have been requested to announce his pair with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. CRANE].

The result was announced—yeas 45, nays 11, as follows:

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 3 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 2 hours and 20 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

PUBLIC GROUNDS, RONAN, MONT.

Mr. MYERS. From the Committee on Indian Affairs I report back favorably, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, the bill (S. 6946) authorizing the sale of certain lands in the Flathead Indian Reservation to the town of Ronan, State of Montana, for the purposes of a public park and public-school site, and I submit a report (No. 831) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to sell and convey to the town of Ronan, Mont., under such terms, conditions, and regulations as he may prescribe, not to exceed 20 acres of unallotted tribal land within the Flathead Indian Reservation at not less than its appraised price; said lands to be used by the town of Ronan for school, park, or other public purposes: Provided, That the net proceeds received from the sale of said lands shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Flathead Indians and draw interest at the rate now provided by law, and may thereafter be used for the benefit of said Indians.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, June 1, 1912, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, May 31, 1912.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

God of the universe, Father of our souls, cleanse our hearts from guile, and make straight our paths, that we may walk worthy of the vocation wherewith we are called and fulfill our destiny, to-day, to-morrow, and always, in the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Wednesday, May 29, 1912, was read and approved.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 24450) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the Military Academy appropriation bill.

Mr. POU rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from North Carolina rise?

Mr. POU. I want to ask the gentleman from Virginia a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. POU. I want to ask the gentleman if he is not willing that the rules be followed and that the claims bills be taken up to-day? I will say in that connection that I have been told twice that an arrangement had been made by which the Committee on Claims will be displaced. I do not know who has the right to make such an arrangement; I certainly was not consulted, but I understand that an arrangement has been perfected whereby the Committee on Claims shall be displaced to-day, and I rise to protest against it.

Mr. HAY. I will say to the gentleman from North Carolina that I do not know of any arrangement by which the Committee on Claims is to be displaced. Certainly I am not a party to any such arrangement. But I am compelled to call up this appropriation bill because the desire of the House is, as I understand it, to adjourn as soon as it possibly can, and it can not adjourn until these appropriation bills have been passed. I will state to the gentleman that this bill is a very short one and will take very little time, and that the gentleman will have the balance of the time.

Mr. POU. Under the rules, the committee of which I am chairman has the entire day, and I confess some surprise that the gentleman could not select some other day on which to make his motion.

Mr. HAY. The gentleman must understand that under the rules my motion is a privileged motion.

Mr. POU. I am perfectly aware of that, and it is simply a question of preference with the gentleman as to whether he will make the motion this morning or not. I am well aware of the fact that if he makes the motion that the House go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union it displaces the Committee on Claims, if the motion prevails. But I want to say to the House now that the House has had a committee very hard at work all of this session, and this is that committee's day. Hereafter, as best I can, I shall oppose every attempt to displace the Claims Committee on the days when its bills, under the rules, ought to have preference.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, I submit that this is not a debatable question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that this discussion has been proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. PRINCE rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. PRINCE. I want to find out whether general debate will be limited in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. That has not been suggested yet.

Mr. HAY. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that general debate be confined to one hour, one half of the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] and one half by myself.

The SPEAKER. Pending the motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to one hour, one half of the time to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE]. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the Military Academy appropriation bill.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. HAY; and on a division (demanded by Mr. POU) there were—ayes 25, noes 16.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 24450) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, with Mr. HENSLEY in the chair.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, it is not necessary for me to go into any general discussion of the provisions of this bill. The total estimates submitted by the department for the support of the Military Academy aggregate $1,894,928.63. The amount appropriated for the last fiscal year was $1,163,424.07. The accompanying bill carries an appropriation of $1,034,059.26, which is a reduction of $129,364.83 over last year's bill and is $860,869.37 below the estimates.

The bill carries no new items, and is purely and simply an appropriation bill.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, this is practically an appropriation bill. There may be a few items that, if one was inclined to be captious, might be criticized; but the days are lengthening; the time for this Congress to adjourn, or the time when it ought to adjourn, is getting near. [Applause.]

From what I have seen here during my service in the House I am inclined to think that what is known as the Holman rule has made this session of Congress at least six weeks longer than it ought to have been; and if legislation is put upon appropriation bills in the short session which is to follow in December, Congress will meet and adjourn without passing the appropriation bills.

Last year we had a special session. Committees were appointed, held meetings, and prepared a great deal of legislation last summer for the present session of Congress, which met last December. The months of December, January, February, March, April, and May have now gone, and not all of the appropriation bills have passed this House. It is evidently a clear demonstration to the people of this country either that the rules are at fault or that our friends upon the other side are not competent to take care of the appropriation bills for the support of the Government.

There are yet undisposed of by the House, because they have not passed this body, the Military Academy, general deficiency, and sundry civil appropriation bills. On this day, May 31, two appropriation bills have been approved by the President—an urgent deficiency bill, passed December 22, 1911, and the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, April 30, 1912. Of the other appropriation bills, the District of Columbia, agricultural, Army, pensions, fortifications, Indian, Post Office, rivers and harbors, legislative, executive, and judicial, and naval have not been disposed of. In all, here are 15 appropriation bills, of which two have passed both Houses of Congress and been approved by the President.

A party came into power pledging to do expeditious work, pledging to have rules in this House that would be efficient in their operation, pledging that the American Representatives should have a voice, pledging to do many, many things, and here, on the 31st of May, 1912, with a special session called in April, 1911, committees appointed, and the official program all mapped out, the net result is two appropriation bills passed and approved by the President. At that rate how long it will take I do not know. The dog days may come and go and we may still be here wrangling over legislation on appropriation bills. I am utterly and unalterably opposed to legislation on appropriation bills. To put legislation upon an appropriation bill compels the Executive to swallow it, legislation and appropriation combined, or be charged with starving the Government because he will not accept an appropriation bill. If the legislation is proper, let it stand upon its own merit, let it be disposed of upon its merits, let no logrolling be done and no pie passing bills be allowed to help get appropriation bills through and force them to the Executive.

In the years that the party to which I belong had control of this House we presented appropriation bills, we presented legislation, we discussed legislation, and it passed or failed to pass, whatever it was. But here is linked together legislation and appropriations, and the net result of which is on May 31, 1912, as I have said, with a special session of months preparing legislation—the net result to the country is 2 appropriation bills passed and approved and 13 undisposed of at this moment so far as being signed by the President.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PRINCE. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is not the trouble at the other end of the Capitol and not in this House? The House has passed all of the appropriation bills except three, but they are held up at the other end of the Capitol. Is not that the fact?

Mr. PRINCE. Let us see how that is. The urgent deficiency passed the House December 16, 1911; the District of Columbia bill, January 25; Agriculture, March 12; the Army, February 16; the Indian, April 9.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The Indian bill has just been reported in the Senate.

Mr. PRINCE. I am giving the dates of the passage of the appropriation bills in the House.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. But the trouble is in the Senate.

Mr. PRINCE. Not necessarily. The legislative bill did not pass the House until May 10, and the naval appropriation bill did not pass until May 28. Why lay it on a coordinate branch? May 28 the naval appropriation bill passed this House. Is it fair to try to dodge the responsibility by putting it onto a coordinate branch of the Government? Let us tell the whole truth and not half a truth. A half of the truth is worse than the full statement. I think if my colleague had studied the calendar printed on to-day—May 31, 1912—he would have answered his own question, which I am glad he asked me.

Mr. Speaker, in the days when my distinguished colleague was Speaker of the House we did much business. We passed the appropriation bills. We had our unanimous-consent legislation, and I believe that as much, if not more, general legislation, more legislation for the benefit of the people in their respective districts was passed under the management and under the control of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] as Speaker than has been passed in these days.

Now what have we been doing? We have been busily engaged in investigating. Thousands and thousands, yes into the hundreds of thousands of dollars, have been appropriated for the purpose of investigating somebody somewhere under certain conditions. And what are the net results? Water hauls. When this Congress will have closed and been written up, it will be found that it has done but very little to relieve the public. We are apparently engaged in scoring for position. Our friends on the other side are getting ready to meet the campaign. They have tons and tons of literature, and, you might say, canned wind to hurl out in the campaign, but I am inclined to think by the way some of the States have spoken recently that that canned wind will not go to the people, because there will be somebody else nominated and another kind of an issue presented. [Applause on the Republican side.] They will send this literature, that is all ready to be sent out under certain circumstances, to the junk dealer for disposition as waste paper. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Gentlemen, we may think here that we are playing politics on a great scale; we may think here that we are making issues. Not at all. The people make the issues. I remember when I first entered this Congress of hearing men debate upon the tariff, of hearing long speeches by splendid men, for they were strong. On this side of the House stood Gen. Grosvenor, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL], the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], and a number of distinguished men; and on the other side stood your distinguished Speaker [Mr. CLARK], Mr. Sayers of Texas, Mr. Crisp of Georgia, Mr. Turner of Georgia, and strong advocates they were, not playing little politics, but they were giants struggling in a great arena. They were preparing for a great campaign on that question. The people spoke out through their candidates, and all of the literature that was prepared for that great campaign went to the junk dealer, as it will at this time. The issue was the gold standard or free silver at 16 to 1; that was the issue then. It will not be the issue now. There will be issues that the people frame, and let me say to you, my countrymen, that you have been weighed in the balance and found wanting. We will have the President again as a Republican. We will have 60 majority in this House in December, after the November election. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, why does not the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] make that 75? Does he not think it would sound better?

Mr. PRINCE. Why, yes; I will make it 75 to suit the gentleman. I hope, however, that he will stay with us.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. When you are going to make big claims, make them big and be done with it.

Mr. PRINCE. Then we will make it 75, if that is satisfactory.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I trust the gentleman from Illinois will pardon me, but I would like to call his attention to the fact that after the last Democratic House of Representatives was in power the next House was Republican by 140 majority. [Applause and laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. PRINCE. I thank the gentleman. I have been very modest in my claims, because I am somewhat of a conservative.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Is not modesty upon political subjects one of the gentleman's chronic ailments?

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I am frank to say to the gentleman that he and I have served here for a number of years, and that I do not think he has heard me make what he would call a political speech in this House, unless the present one may smack of it, and perhaps may be charged as such; but for 16 years or more I have stood on the floor of this House and tried to argue questions as a Member of Congress broad enough to see the whole country.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the gentleman from Illinois ever resorts to political speeches except when he—to use a slang phrase—is in a hole, and considering the hole that he finds himself in at this time, I am perfectly willing to forgive him for even on this occasion resorting to this political effusion, which is so out of line with his general course, and I apologize to the gentleman by saying that I know he would not do it even now if it were not for the extreme emergency with which he is confronted.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his kindly allusions, but if he had been here in the House promptly, as he should have been to receive prayers, and had been here when I commenced my address, he would have heard differently, and if he had been here to hear me go over the appropriation bills and have seen the time that was wasted in the discussion of measures in carrying out the Holman rule, he would have agreed with me.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Is not that rather due to the fact that under the present organization of the House the opposition is permitted to take time to discuss and even obstruct the passage of measures?

Mr. PRINCE. I do not see how the opposition could obstruct. The Democrats have 70 majority, and they have the power to do what they please.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. And we are pleased to give you more liberal time to discuss measures than you gave us.

Mr. PRINCE. Evidently you have, as appears by the RECORD here, when you passed the naval bill on May 28, and you surely have given yourselves opportunity for unlimited discussion. You can not charge us with that. You have the power, and you can do what you please. You are responsible for what is done, and the country will hold you responsible, as it should hold you responsible. The country will hold you responsible for the class of legislation that you have passed, and will hold you responsible for putting legislation on appropriation bills. The country will hold you responsible for prolonging this session, and will hold you responsible for these fake investigations that you have made, in which you have squandered the public money. It will hold you responsible from the beginning of the special session down to the close of this session, and the country will speak, and speak loudly, and you will understand its voice when you hear it in November. The farmers of this country will hold you responsible for the reciprocity legislation, and there are many good friends of mine who are sitting on that side of the House representing Western and Middle Western States whose faces will not be seen in this Hall after the 4th of March next. You entered into the game of politics before the special session, hoping you would embarrass some of us by voting in favor of reciprocity, but when the special session was called you found you had set a trap for yourselves, and you had to go into it, and the people will speak to you when the time comes.

Mr. LLOYD. Who was it that set the reciprocity trap about which the gentleman is speaking at the present time? Was not this Congress called into extra session to consider reciprocity at the instance of the President of the United States?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. And on the advice of an ex-President.

Mr. LLOYD. And is it not true that the gentleman, with the rest, voted for that bill?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. The President did it on the advice of a prominent ex-President, as appears by public correspondence. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is not shaking his gory locks at me?

Mr. PRINCE. No, no; and in this connection I want to congratulate my friend from Colorado. I saw his picture in the paper this morning. I saw where, as a splendid soldier of the Confederate cause, he and 12 of his associates gathered together upon Memorial Day to talk over in a nonpartisan way the part they took in that great struggle. I also notice that he says that we will have no decorations of any kind except the decoration, the most beautiful that any room could be decorated with, the Stars and Stripes. [Applause.] That is what he had over his picture, and I am glad to meet a man like that, because we are a united people under one flag only, the Stars and Stripes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. PRINCE. Let me answer another one of these questions. My friend asks who called that session together? I answer, a Republican President, but he was daily visited by the Speaker of this House and conferred with as to how they would run that bill through the House. They were bedfellows then.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman mean that the Speaker of this House forced himself upon the President? Is not it true that these conferences were sought by the President, and is it not a fact that the Speaker of this House was called to the President from time to time to consult with him about that legislation, and he did, as a matter of fact, because the Republican leaders—most of them—were not in sympathy with the President of the United States and it was necessary for him to consult with Democratic leaders in order to accomplish the result desired?

Mr. PRINCE. I think that is true; I do not deny that, but I say they were bedfellows on it, and you had a caucus, and you agreed unanimously to vote for it, and the Democrats passed the measure, and a majority of the Republicans in the House voted against it. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Apr. 21, 1911, pp. 559 and 560.)

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Is not it the same thing the other President did about the railroad bill, and did not he get it through by Democratic votes?

Mr. PRINCE. Let me answer one question at a time. Now, another question. The gentleman asked me if I did not vote for the reciprocity proposition. I did not. [Applause on the Republican side.] I voted against it in the regular session. I made a speech against it, and if the gentleman was here he could have heard it, in the special session. I did not think it was a good measure then, and I do not think it is a good measure now. I think it was an effort to strike down the thirteen or more millions of people of our country, and they will call your party, that caucused in favor of it, to an account. [Applause on the Republican side.] Now, another question. You say the former President recommended it. He has answered that, and he is able to answer any question, as I read in the press to-day. [Applause.] I think he is able to answer the criticism that was made against him about being forever in the White House, that that office building should remain there during his lifetime.

Mr. ADAIR. Oh, he is able to get on any side on any question.

Mr. PRINCE. I want to put what he said in the RECORD, because the public knows how he answered the question as to his being a dictator by saying—

> The talk of imperialism was no more foolish then than it is now. I have too much respect for you to tell you that you are in no danger of a dictatorship. When any man tells you that, get him a nurse and a perambulator, for if he really believes it he isn't fit to be at large.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Will the gentleman permit me one other question? And, if it is not embarrassing to the gentleman to make the explanation, I should like to have him explain why it is that he has come in at this eleventh, death-bed hour professing a regard for a great man who is now in the public eye; why did not he do that many moons ago? Why is it necessary for him to come now and pronounce a panegyric upon the ex-President? Is it due to any condition which the gentleman finds in his own State or in his district or elsewhere that has impelled him to do these things——

Mr. PRINCE. I thought the gentleman was to ask a question and not to make a speech. What is the gentleman's question? Let us get down to brass tacks.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. A gentleman over there seems to be prompting the gentleman.

Mr. PRINCE. Go ahead. The gentleman is not a mind reader and can not tell what the gentleman is going to ask.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I want to know what stirred the gentleman this morning to make this eulogy, why was he not stirred up earlier——

Mr. PRINCE. I will answer that. The gentleman asked this question, What has stirred me to make this speech with reference to the former President? Why, the gentleman is the man who did that; the gentleman asked me the question. The gentleman is the man who brought it out.

Now, gentlemen, this is a Government of the people, of the great body of the people. I am one of those who do not believe that they are wrong. We have free schools in this country, we have churches in this country, we have a free press in this country, we have Chautauquas in this country. When the sun rises in Maine, as it takes its course westward, it looks down upon seventeen or nineteen million boys and girls with their schoolbooks under their arms, with their little buckets and dinner pails, starting to the public schools that are maintained at public expense, to be trained to perform the functions of citizenship in the United States. Talk about mob rule! [Applause.] Talk about the danger of the people! What are we educationg them for? What does the pouring out of millions and hundreds of millions of dollars to educate the boys in schools mean but to make them citizens of this Republic?

Afraid of them? The great Lincoln was not afraid of them. No man who holds a public position or seeks to hold a public position ought to fear the plain or common people. [Applause on the Republican side.] Mr. Lincoln said that the good God above must have loved the plain people, because he made so many of them.

Now, I have no fear about it. This is a Government of the people. If at Chicago the party should see fit to nominate a splendid man who has been President for four years, well and good. If it sees fit to take a private citizen from the ranks and ask him to lead the party, well and good. I am content. If your convention, when it meets in Baltimore, should see fit to nominate that honest and genial Speaker of this House [Mr. CLARK], well and good. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Whoever it may be, whether it be the brainy young man who represents an Alabama district, and one of the cool, calm, and well-equipped men of this House [Mr. UNDERWOOD], well and good. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It is for the people to determine, and why should we engage here in bickering back and forth as individuals? It is little in us. Let us trust the people; and when the issue is joined, take your side and present it; and when the issue is joined, we will take our side and present it. We will call you to account before the bar of the public, and, I say, in my judgment you will be weighed in the balance and found wanting, and we will be in control of the Presidency, and the House, and the Senate for the next four years. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Now getting back to this bill, if I may be permitted to go on without interruption, it is a bill which is in its nature an appropriation bill. I imagine, when we get at this bill in a few minutes and begin to read it, it will pass readily through this House, for there is no objection to it which I know—none whatever—not worth speaking about. It confines itself to its legitimate functions—that of an appropriation bill—and when the appropriation bills confine themselves to their proper functions there is no objection to them to speak of in the House. There is always a little bickering here and there; but when it is loaded up with legislation that is so wicked, that is so ill-digested, that may or may not destroy the purposes for which the appropriations are made, then it is that it meets opposition; then it is that it consumes time; then it is that it should properly consume time. Legislation should stand upon its own merits and not be yoked to a bill that has to be passed or the failure of the passage brings criticism upon the Executive because he sees fit in his wisdom or lack of wisdom to oppose such a bill by his constitutional prerogative of a veto.

But, Mr Chairman, I have no objection to this bill. I know of no one on this side who desires to speak, and I now close, reserving the balance of my time if anybody should wish to use it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK].

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Chairman, there are few men in this Chamber on either side for whom I feel personally a higher regard than for my friend who has just taken his seat. There are few men in this House who have made since I have been here a speech that is as vulnerable as the one the gentleman has made. The gentleman seeks to indict the Democratic Party and the chieftain of his own party for having together passed Canadian reciprocity, and yet, if I remember correctly, the gentleman himself voted for the measure.

Mr. PRINCE. I know my colleague would not knowingly make a misrepresentation.

Mr. HARDWICK. Am I not right about that?

Mr. PRINCE. No, sir; you are not. I voted against it in the regular session, as the RECORD will show, and in the special session, as the RECORD will show. At no time when it came into the House, up to this moment; have I ever favored it.

Mr. HARDWICK. I am glad to accept the gentleman's statement, of course. I am sorry to have made the mistake as to the gentleman's position; but the fact remains that his party and his party's chieftain, with whose nomination he proclaims he will be entirely satisfied, are responsible for the legislation the gentleman now seeks to denounce because he believes it is unpopular with the farmers of this country.

Yet this legislation was produced—a fact to which one of my colleagues called attention in a colloquy which has already occurred on this floor—by the union and joint operation of the two opposing candidates for the Presidency of the United States in the Republican Party, Theodore Roosevelt as well as William H. Taft.

The gentleman says that whatever candidate the Republican Party presents in November is certain of success. The gentleman's optimism, in my judgment, is just about as well founded as is his judgment in this matter. It is impossible for the country to believe that two wings of the Republican Party, as radically at war as these two wings are, can ever coalesce on either one of the two opposing candidates. Certainly gentlemen on this floor and throughout the country who have denounced either one or the other of these two candidates in bitterest terms in public and in private will have a good deal of recanting to do before they can ever bring themselves to it.

But, my friends, it matters not about that. I agree with the gentleman that there has been a weighing in the balance, and some one has been found wanting. It is the Republican Party that stands condemned.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. HARDWICK. Not just at present. It is not the party that we represent on this floor. It is not the party which the people intrusted with power in 1910. But it is the thoroughly divided, discordant, discredited, and dishonored party once honored by the leadership of Lincoln, twice led to victory by McKinley, and now doomed, I believe, to everlasting and unending defeat at the hands of an outraged people whom it has deceived and betrayed. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Oh, my friend from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] is, no doubt, a recent convert to this doctrine of the new Rooseveltism. Roosevelt himself is a recent convert to the doctrines that he now proclaims. Think of the man who once denounced William Jennings Bryan as a Socialist and an anarchist, because Bryan ventured to take issue with the Supreme Court of the United States as to the decision on the income tax, now demanding the recall of judicial decisions!

Mr. GOOD. Does the gentleman mean the governor of New Jersey? [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. HARDWICK. I mean Roosevelt, Theodore Roosevelt, the only wild man in this country in either party who has ever announced for the recall of judicial decisions. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Think of the gentleman who once denounced Bryan as an anarchist and Socialist, because he did not agree to the changed income-tax decision, now wanting to recall all judicial decisions, including those of the Supreme Court of the United States, on occasion, if we may credit his New Jersey speeches, now standing before the people in the attitude which he now occupies! Think of the man who once wrote to Harriman, "Come to the back door of the White House, so as not to attract attention, and give us a quarter of a million dollars, so that we can carry the State of New York," now standing as the champion of popular control and of civic virtue! [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Oh, Roosevelt, Roosevelt, if we ever wipe out of our dictionaries the word "demagogue," if we ever wipe out the word "charlatan," if we wipe out every word that stands for insincerity and double-dealing and popular debauchery and leave the word "Roosevelt," every man who has followed his career in this country will know what it means. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Put him up, if you will, as your candidate. He has whipped your "standpat" hosts into mute submission. He will be nominated in Chicago——

Mr. DYER. And elected——

Mr. HARDWICK. And when you get through with nominating him, the sober sense of the American people will repudiate him by a majority so great that no man will ever again doubt that the American people are capable of self-government. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. DYER. Does the gentleman speak for the State of Georgia or for the whole country on that?

Mr. HARDWICK. For the whole country, even for the gentleman's own State of Missouri and the gentleman's own district, as well as mine.

Mr. DYER. I think the gentleman does not know how the district I represent or the State I represent voted, else he would not make that statement.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will Missouri go for Roosevelt?

Mr. DYER. I think Missouri will be found in the Republican column.

Mr. BOOHER. If the gentleman from Georgia will allow me, I will say that it will not be found in the Republican column unless you import more negroes there than you did two years ago. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman be courteous enough to allow me a minute?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. DYER. I want to ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOOHER], who made that statement, if he can point to a single fraudulent negro vote cast in the last election?

Mr. BOOHER. Yes. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Let me call the gentleman's attention to the registration lists of the city of St. Louis. They were revised after the November election, 1910, and before the 16th day of January, 1911, as I remember, and the names of 16,000 negro voters were stricken from the registration lists, because they could not be found by the election officers.

Mr. DYER. Let me answer that.

Mr. HARDWICK. I want to say a few words myself, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman from Georgia allow me to ask a question on that subject?

Mr. HARDWICK. No; the gentleman can get some time of his own.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Regular order!

Mr. DYER. Evidently gentlemen do not want to hear the truth about that.

Mr. HARDWICK. While this Missouri row is entertaining it does not illustrate what I want to say. I still believe, whether it resides in Missouri or not, there is enough intelligence, enough patriotism, enough memory in the American people not to crown this dangerous demagogue as the Mexican king of this Republic. He is going to be nominated, but he will not be elected. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PRINCE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HARDWICK. No; I have not the time now.

Mr. PRINCE. I will give you a minute of my time.

Mr. HARDWICK. Very well, if you will give me time. We have occupied more than a minute already. Make it five minutes.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has four minutes.

Mr. PRINCE. Then I can not yield any more time.

Mr. HARDWICK. Now, my friends, as far as we are concerned on this side of the Chamber, thank God we have had no such bitter internecine war in our own ranks as our friends on the other side of the Chamber have had. Whether we nominate at Baltimore the distinguished Speaker of this House, who presides with ability and grace over its proceedings [applause], or whether we nominate that brilliant young leader from the State of Alabama, whose Democracy is true and tried [applause], or whether we nominate the great governor of Ohio, who has demonstrated his ability to win Democratic victories in Republican territory, or whether we nominate that gentleman who, in my judgment, would be the best leader of them all, the glorious governor of New Jersey, who has won splendid victories every time he went against a Republican, I believe I can see Democratic success in the skies in November. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

In conclusion, I wish to call attention to the following editorial from the New York World of Thursday, May 30, 1912. It is, in my judgment, a most brilliant as well as most accurate summary of the political situation:

"FOR PRESIDENT—WOODROW WILSON.

"Woodrow Wilson, of New Jersey, should be the Democratic candidate for President.

"That is the opinion of the World. That is the counsel of the New Jersey primaries. That is the logic of the situation.

"It is time for facts and not for theories. Judson Harmon might prove a strong candidate in New York and Ohio, but his nomination has been rendered impossible. CHAMP CLARK would be a hopelessly beaten candidate in New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut. He could do no better than Mr. Bryan, who has lost these States three times and would lose them again if nominated. OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD is of presidential size, but he has been untested as a candidate in the North and is an unknown quantity to most of the voters. Woodrow Wilson alone has a record of continuing victory in the section in which victory is essential to Democratic success.

"What other Democratic candidate could poll so many votes in the great debatable States of the East—New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut?

"What other Democratic candidate, who could carry these States, would be so strong in the great debatable States of the Middle West—Ohio and Indiana?

"What other Democratic candidate could make so powerful an appeal to hundreds of thousands of thoughtful independent voters without whose support no Democratic President can be elected?

"What other Democratic candidate could so well stem the rising tide of Rooseveltism, which now threatens to engulf representative government and republican institutions?

"What other Democratic candidate would so fully measure up to the ideals of the sane radicals and the sane conservatives upon whose joint action the result of the election will hinge?

"The World hitherto has withheld its active support from all candidates. It advocated an open convention at Baltimore and advised its Democratic friends to await the action of the Republicans at Chicago. The open convention is assured. The measure of all the candidates has been taken. The situation is clarified and further delay is unnecessary.

"Like a twentieth-century Genghis Khan, Theodore Roosevelt, with his horde of prairie Populists and Wall Street Socialists, is sweeping down upon the Republican National Convention. Mr. Taft seems as powerless to check him as the degenerate Romans were to check the descent of the Goths and the Vandals. The historic party of Lincoln and Seward and Chase and Sumner and Conkling and Chandler and Blaine and Garfield and Harrison and Sherman and McKinley is apparently in the death throes. This is the twilight of the gods, and the Democratic Party must rise not only to its opportunity but to its responsibility.

"How can it do its duty better than to match sanity against lunacy, statesmanship against demagogy, the historian against the Rough Rider, the educator of public opinion against the debaucher of public opinion, the first term against the third term, the tariff reformer against the standpatter, the man who would prosecute trust magnates against the man who protects trust magnates, the man with clean hands against the man who draws his campaign fund from Wall Street, the supporter of constitutional government against the champion of personal government, law against lawlessness, Americanism against Mexicanism, the Republic against the dictatorship?

"Who better represents these issues than Woodrow Wilson? Who is better qualified than Woodrow Wilson to appeal to the intelligence and common sense of the American people against the most cunning and adroit demagogue that modern civilization has produced since Napoleon III?

"Who would stand a better chance of election in this great national crisis?

"Let us look at the facts:

"It will require 266 electoral votes to elect a President. The so-called Southern States, including Maryland and Missouri, have 175 votes. Assuming that Arizona will go Democratic, too, practically any Democratic candidate for President can count on 178 electoral votes. But 88 more are necessary to victory. Where can these 88 be found?

"It is folly to look for them west of the Mississippi River. The West is in the midst of another revival of Populism. In Theodore Roosevelt it has found a new substitute for its gospel of free silver. He is the political reincarnation of James B. Weaver, Mary E. Lease, Jerry Simpson, and Peffer. He is the heaven-born ratio of 16 to 1 in a still more fascinating form. It is idle to think that any Democrat could appeal to the West against Roosevelt. It is idle to think that anybody who is not a far more masterful and dangerous demagogue than Roosevelt could command the support of the Populists who now call themselves Republican Progressives.

"The Democratic Party, if it is to win the election and safeguard American institutions, must unite the East and the South as Tilden did in 1876. The candidate must carry New York with its 45 electoral votes. He must carry New Jersey with its 14 electoral votes. He must carry Connecticut with its 7 electoral votes. To lose these States is to give Roosevelt a walkover. To win these States is to win not only 66 of the 88 electoral votes that are needed, but in all probability it is to win Ohio with 24 votes; it is to win Indiana with 15 votes, which is the historical political ally of New York and New Jersey; it is to give the Democratic Party an opportunity of victory in Massachusetts with its 18 votes, and to bring Delaware with its 3 votes back into the Democratic column. In other words, it is to elect a Democratic President of the United States.

"It is in the East that Democratic victory must be won. It is in the East that Rooseveltism must be overthrown. It is the East that must save the country from a third term and all it implies. For that reason the World regards Woodrow Wilson as the strongest candidate the Democratic Party can nominate.

"The New Jersey primaries were a vital test of his political strength, not only in New Jersey, but in New York. They proved that local opposition to him is largely a myth. Although the campaign against him was well organized and abundantly financed, it failed miserably. He swept the State, and the only four delegates he lost were lost through the personal efforts of James Smith, jr., a political boss whom Gov. Wilson kept out of the United States Senate. In a section of the country where Wall Street and the political bosses are most powerful, Gov. Wilson demonstrated that he has the confidence of the rank and file of the party, without which any man's candidacy is futile. He demonstrated as well that his political strength is the kind of strength that is essential to Democratic success in the vitally necessary States of New York, New Jersey, and Connecticut.

"So much for that.

"During Gov. Wilson's public career the World has been compelled to take issue with him on many questions. We regarded with grave misgivings his sudden conversion to the initiative and referendum, reversing the principles of a lifetime. We regretted his apparent disposition to imitate Mr. Bryan's sweeping charges against the so-called Money Trust without supporting these charges with facts and specifications. We regretted his long campaign tours, his too eager chase after the nomination, and certain symptoms of instability which threatened to weaken his public usefulness. We have not hesitated to warn him when we thought he was going astray, and shall not hesitate to do so again in the future.

"But Gov. Wilson's elements of weakness are vastly overbalanced by his elements of strength. He has proved his political courage and his fearlessness. He has proved himself sound on tariff reform. He has proved himself sound on the Sherman law. He has proved himself sound on corporation control. He has proved himself sound on trust prosecutions and personal guilt. He has proved himself sound against government by Wall Street plutocracy. He has proved himself sound on the independence of the judiciary. He has proved himself sound on the fundamental principles of constitutional government. He has proved that he is instinctively and temperamentally a Democrat. He has proved himself a free man who can not be bulldozed by bosses or influenced against his convictions even by his personal friends. That is the sort of man who ought to be President.

"Gov. Wilson has had more public experience than Grover Cleveland had when he was elected President. He is better known to the rank and file of the party than Samuel J. Tilden was when he was nominated for President. The World believes that he would be a progressive constitutional President whom the American people could trust and for whom they would never have cause to apologize.

"We appeal to all Democrats to consider this matter soberly and thoughtfully and without prejudice. We appeal to the delegates to the Democratic National Convention to be swayed by no considerations except those of principle and the public welfare. We appeal to Mr. Bryan to throw his great political influence upon the side of Gov. Wilson and aid the Democratic Party to meet adequately this great crisis in the Nation's history. He has the most brilliant opportunity for disinterested, patriotic leadership that has come to any American of this generation, and he has before him in Theodore Roosevelt a striking example of the meaning of ruthless and unyielding ambition.

"It is not in behalf of Woodrow Wilson that the World urges his nomination. It is not merely in behalf of the Democratic Party as a party. It is in behalf of the American people. It is in behalf of American institutions. It is in behalf of the Republic. It is in behalf of the Nation that is now confronted with the gravest menace that it has faced since the obliteration of human slavery and the overthrow of secession."

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, in connection with this bill for the maintenance of the United States Military Academy at West Point it will be of interest to take a glimpse into the storied past of that institution. I have asked and obtained the unanimous consent of the House to submit herewith an address delivered June 16, 1848, in the chapel at West Point before the officers and cadets by Col. Alexander W. Doniphan, of Missouri. Col. Doniphan was a gallant soldier of great natural military genius. I feel sure that the friends and admirers of Col. Doniphan everywhere will be delighted to read this address. Col. Doniphan preserved no copy of the address at the time, and none was known to be in existence until a few weeks ago. Col. D. C. Allen, of Liberty, Mo., the friend and biographer of Col. Doniphan, noticed a copy advertised in the catalogue of a second-hand bookstore in Peekskill, N. Y., which he at once secured. It was published recently in the Liberty Tribune.

WEST POINT IN 1848.

[Address delivered to graduates of the United States Military Academy, West Point, N. Y., of the class of 1848, by Alexander William Doniphan (see extract at end of address), of Liberty, Clay County, Mo.]

"Proud old institution; the admiration of her friends, the reproach of her enemies. Here she stands, firm and unshaken as the granite heights by which she is surrounded—esto perpetua. The biography of her sons, whether the gallant survivors or the lamented dead, is her best eulogy."

THE ADDRESS.

"GENTLEMEN OF THE GRADUATING CLASS: By the kind partiality of my colleagues, I have been deputed to express the gratification which the Board of Visitors have received from witnessing your examination—not your examination alone, but that of all the classes. I regret that my duties as a member of the board and the large number of friends and visitors by whom I have been constantly surrounded preclude me from presenting you with an address worthy of your attention, instead of a mere infliction on your patience and a test of your politeness. You will, I trust, however, take the will for the deed; look to the feelings which prompt and not to the feebleness of the execution. You have now completed your collegiate course, and are now ready to enter upon the active duties of a profession that, if honorably and zealously pursued, rarely fails to lead to honorable distinction. You have been selected by your country as her peculiar children; you have been educated by her bounty for her interest and the advantage of your countrymen, and not for the mere purpose of bestowing upon you as individuals the blessings of this thorough course of scientific instruction. The country now looks to you with confidence to fulfill the high and ennobling purposes for which you have been educated. Yours is a profession of great labor, although it is a road to honorable distinction. Superiority and renown can only be obtained by industry. Your destiny is to a great extent in your own hands; you have mastered only the elements of your profession. It is true you have laid deep the foundation of scientific and military learning, and upon such a basis you can erect the most noble superstructure. You have yet much to learn of military history, of the composition of armies, of the strategy of war; to learn by what peculiar strokes of genius great victories have been won, or by what mistake or defect overwhelming numbers have been so often defeated. War was originally a mere means of satiating savage vengeance. Originating with barbarians, it partook of all the fierceness of its origin; but in the rapid march of improvement in government, in science, in morals and religion, it has become a science—a very complicated one, indeed; indeed, it is a combination of all the sciences. The proper officer is not only master of all the precise sciences—if I may use that term—from the first elements of plain arithmetic to the most sublime problems in astronomy, but his learning must be varied; indeed, almost infinite. There is scarcely a branch taught in the whole range of learning from the study of which he may not derive great advantage. He should have a correct knowledge of military, international, and, to some extent, of municipal laws. Indeed, he can not fail to find ample necessity for such knowledge at every step. He has not only to settle questions of moment of international law arising with neutral nations and with the citizens of neutral nations, in the preliminaries of treaties, in every armistice concluded, in every truce or capitulation, but a knowledge of diplomacy will also be found useful, if not indispensable. And the great general who plans campaigns should not be ignorant of political economy. He should fully understand the resources of his own and the enemy's country, the products and supplies, the points from which they must be obtained, as well as the means and cost of transportation. In addition to this ample store of useful knowledge—paradoxical as it may appear to the superficial observer—the useful officer should be indued with every Christian virtue; patient in suffering, whether from hunger, thirst, fatigue, scorching suns, piercing colds, drenching rains, or pestilential diseases; all must be borne, and not only borne without a murmur, but with such cheerfulness as to dispel all gloom from his companions and followers. He should be generous to the weak and humble, magnanimous to the fallen, obedient to superiors, forbearing to inferiors, exacting proper discipline without tyranny or oppression, alive to the best interests of his country, ever making his own interest only secondary, and indued with a philanthrophy that neither the carnage of the battle field nor the savage warfare of enemies shall steel to the cries of suffering humanity. Women and children, helpless infancy, and more helpless age can never appeal to an American officer in vain. Remember your country wars with nations, not with individuals; she never revenges national wrongs on private citizens.

"Do not deem it arrogant in me to tender some advice, rather personal than professional. In addition to all your attainments, do not neglect to adorn your minds with elegant accomplishments of polite literature. Nothing has a more chastening influence than classic learning, ancient and modern. These sublime productions of genius liberalize the mind, elevate the feelings, and give a proper direction to the ambition. They teach you to despise that low and groveling ambition or thirst of praise—the bane of the lower ranks of all professions—that seeks to detract from superiors, to decorate itself with stolen plumage. I would not have you unambitious, however. Virtuous ambition is ever to be cherished, and by none more than a soldier. It is the parent of noble deeds; it leads to fame and distinction by deeds, not by detraction; that ambition which is content with the achievement of great ends and modestly awaits its reward, not that morbid ambition that is accompanied to the field by a hired corps of letter writers and puffers to magnify small things into great ones. Never be guilty of the ridiculous folly—as I know you never will— so happily ridiculed by Byron of blowing your own trumpet and finding a brazen one best suited to your taste, but rather cherish the sentiment of another distinguished poet—

"Oh, give me honest fame or give me none!

"But you will not all remain in the Army—a majority of you, perhaps, may; but the past history of the graduates, and my own observations, satisfy me that many of you will grow weary on our peace establishment, and having formed other and, I hope, happier connections in life than cold and gloomy old bachelorism affords, from interest, from conveniences, or from necessity some of you will retire from the Army. But your usefulness to your country need not be lost. The works projected by the General and State Governments, or by the enterprise of corporations and private individuals, afford an ample field for the scientific engineer; professorships in colleges—the learned professions—volunteer corps, scientific agriculture, and even the sacred desk, have heretofore received valuable accessions from the halls of West Point. A wide field of usefulness is spread before you in which your energies may be properly rewarded and your taste gratified. This institution is to the literary system of this country what the heart is to the human system. It receives the learning, the discoveries, and attainments of all nations through the veins, and having properly digested and improved upon them, sends them forth in healthful arterial streams to all the other institutions of our country. It thus elevates the standard of learning at home. Indeed, to use a homely figure, it is the great city clock by which all the smaller clocks and watches are regulated.

"But to say nothing more of the advantages afforded to literature in general by the lights of this institution, let us turn for a moment to that class who denominate themselves utilitarians, who reject or discard every discovery or improvement in science that does not have some direct and immediate connection with the thrift, the comfort, or convenience of men, What has enlightened science done, and what is she daily doing, to advance these ends? In our almost magic flight from one portion of our splendid country to another we scarce stop to reflect how much we are indebted to the midnight labor and vigils of some devotee of science. The rich products of our fertile soil find a distant market and a rapid and cheap means of transportation. Land has advanced, population has increased, commerce, wealth, and manufactures have doubled, cities, towns, and villages have sprung up as if by enchantment under the system of scientific improvement. We view these giant works with astonishment, we admit their utility, we praise the elegant execution of the work, but little of our admiration is ordinarily bestowed upon the labors of the scientific scholar who first discovered the application of propelling powers or made the scientific surveys and plans for their construction. A large majority of these works have been furnished with engineers for their surveys and construction from the halls of this national nursery. If this institution was deemed of great national importance by Washington, by whose favor and recommendation it was first established, of how much greater importance is it in this great age of wonders and inventions. We live in an astonishing age; we travel by steam and converse by lightning. How fortunate should we esteem ourselves that we are permitted to live in the middle of the nineteenth century. Future ages will be, doubtless, far more advanced, but no age will ever witness a more rapid progression; in none will discovery follow discovery in a more rapid and startling career. Wonderful epoch! A century is no longer a hundred years; a century of improvement is crowded into 10 years of time. Favored age! We hold up the mirror of science before us, and the whole stream of ancient and modern learning for 6,000 years is presented almost at a glance. Constantly startling discoveries in truth and science are bursting upon our vision, and we stretch the hand and almost lift the curtain that veils the rich storehouse of futurity. The question is no longer asked how much will yet be discovered. The question is not, Where will discoveries terminate? but the proper question is, Will they ever end? Will they not be coextensive with time? Will not the electric flash that sets the world on fire illume some new discovery as it springs from the great laboratory of the human mind?

"This is, indeed, the age of reason—the vast improvements in the art of printing and the rapidity of conveying intelligence have produced a wonderful revolution. Mind has triumphed over physical force; the world is now governed by intelligence; the impulse that agitates the great capital of Europe imparts its thrill instantaneously to all others; the sensation is simultaneous. The world is strangely and startlingly convulsed; thrones are crumbling; dynasties are tottering to their fall; the iron heel is robbed of the power of oppression. Who can tell, in this vast whirlpool of convulsed elements, what results may be produced? Who can tell, in its wild career, but its vortex, widening and deepening, may yet reach our shores? Who can tell when this threatening volcano may begin to spout forth its burning lava, or from what particular apex? This ignitable mass needs but the magic spark to again envelop the world in flames. How soon may some meteor—ah, more than meteor, some comet—come again, and again rise, which shall roll the lurid cloud of war over the fairest portions of Europe until the curtain may drop at some second Waterloo? We fondly hope that the murmurs of the threatening volcano may be stilled and the bright rainbow of peace may span the world. But one truth is clear—we can not hide it from ourselves—God has decreed that man shall be free; "the right divine" has heard its final knell. But whether this glorious consummation is to be attained by the slow and peaceful progression of learning, of civilization, and of Christianity, or the dread ordeal of war and violence, He has wisely concealed from man's feeble vision.

"But my feelings—perhaps my imagination—have borne me wide of the object which I set out to present to you—the excellence of West Point Academy. 'The best test of the value of any institution is to be estimated by its results.' The worth of this insitution can best be seen by visiting it, and especially at an examination; becoming acquainted with its officers and professors; witnessing reviews, drills, parades, and military exercises; hearing the classes examined; scrutinizing the manner of imparting instruction; seeing the thoroughness of the course; the discipline, police, and administration; the urbanity of its officers and professors; their bright moral deportment and officer-like example. But without the advantages of a visit, the community may very properly estimate its usefulness by the history of its results and the war just happily closed. Individually, I have had some experience that enables me to judge of the efficiency of many of the officers graduated here. Being connected with the Army of the West, under the command of that gallant and accomplished soldier, Gen. Kearney, I had ample means of becoming acquainted with many officers who had received their military education here, not only of the Regular Army, but in the Volunteer Corps. Without a military education myself and without any actual experience in war, after our separation from Gen. Kearney we were thrown upon our own resources. It was a fearful responsibility and one that I would gladly have foregone; personal danger is a matter of little moment to a soldier; but the lives of a thousand men, young, brave, and generous, many of them the sons of my friends and neighbors; the honor of the corps, even the reputation of the State, was in some degree at stake. I have always deemed it very fortunate that we had been for three months with Gen. Kearney and his regulars. Our officers and men had been drilled by officers of the Regular Army before our departure from Fort Leavenworth; and like most other volunteer commands, we had some officers who had graduated and some who had been here for several years. To the training received from these sources I attribute much of the efficiency of the column. Some of our officers had been similarly drilled in Florida, rendering them more efficient. For myself, I most cheerfully acknowledge the great advantages I derived from the skill and attainments of those who had been more fortunate in their early military education. I feel gratified when I reflect that neither false pride nor a wanton recklessness of the lives of the soldiers prevented me from applying to officers of inferior ranks for such information as I needed; and I take pleasure in always sharing with them fully the meed of praise that the generous feelings of my countrymen have awarded to the expedition. My observation was not confined to my own column, nor to the Army of the West; but, returning home by Saltillo and Monterey, I had ample means of obtaining correct information of the services of every corps that had been engaged on Gen. Taylor's whole line. I have seen regiments and squadrons of Regular and Volunteer forces who had been successful above all praise. I saw others equally brave who had failed of gaining any reputation. I saw one regiment, equally brave, composed of as good material as any of the more fortunate, but fallen, dejected; the dark, black pall of mourning enveloped it, a drapery more melancholy, more somber than that worn by the gallant dead. And why were they dejected? Why had they fallen? Braver men never lived; more gallant spirits never rallied beneath the folds of their country's flag when the tocsin sounded to arms; but it was not commanded by Davis, McKee, Hardin, Marshall, Clay, or Fry—ah, it was not commanded at all. The names of the other regiments are inscribed high on the roll of fame in letters as bright and burning as Buena Vista itself. But this is lost, fallen forever, for the mere want of official fitness in a single commander. Have you ever contemplated how wide such a misfortune extends? It is not confined to the wretched commander—I would to God it were; it is a pity that it is not. It extends to the gallant youths who with high hopes and beating hearts left their happy homes for the hardships and perils of war. It does not stop here. However unjustly, the State is in a degree identified with it. Ah, worst of all, it will be written in the history of our country. Nor is this all; it reaches the domestic hearth, and in its widening circle it includes the agony of fathers, the crushed and bleeding hearts of mothers. Scarce a regiment of Volunteers or Regulars has failed to sustain the honor of our country in this brilliant war—brilliant from its success and brilliant from the magnanimity and clemency with which it was prosecuted—and scarce a corps was without some officers, either graduated or partially educated here.

"But West Point needs no eulogy from me; her sons have pronounced her eulogy, not in words, but deeds. As long as the victories of Palo Alto, Resaca de la Palma, Monterey, and Buena Vista are remembered, and the gallant officers who gained them, West Point will need no eulogy. Or let her worth be estimated by the results of the campaign into the valley of Mexico, from the first embarkation until the American flag floated from the capitol of the most ancient city of the Aztecs, exhibiting the eagle without its serpent and the cactus exchanged for the arrows and the olive branch; a campaign that will proudly compare with the best campaigns of Marlborough, Frederick, or Napoleon. While Vera Cruz, Cerro Gordo, Contreras, Churubusco, Molino del Rey, and Chapultepec are recorded in American history she will need no eulogy. It has fought itself into favor; it challenges the admiration of nations abroad; it has put down opposition at home. Even the heartless demagogue has grown ashamed of his opposition and ceased his querulous croakings. Proud old institution; the admiration of her friends the reproach of her enemies. Here she stands, firm and unshaken as the granite heights by which she is surrounded—esto perpetua. The biography of her sons, whether the gallant survivors or the lamented dead, is her best eulogy. Young gentlemen, I point you to that study; emulate them, follow their bright example. Living, you will be respected; and should you unfortunately fall, the tears of the sorrowing patriotism will oft bedew your memory.

"In conclusion, for myself and on behalf of the board I take this opportunity of expressing our admiration of the entire management of the institution, and to return our thanks for the polite attention of the officers, professors, and cadets during our visit."

THE MEXICAN WAR.

COL. ALEXANDER W. DONIPHAN AND THE FIRST MISSOURI MOUNTED VOLUNTEERS.

[Extract from Col. Switzler's History of Missouri, pp. 260, 261, and 262.]

About the middle of May, 1846, Gov. Edwards, of Missouri, called for volunteers to join the "Army of the West"—an expedition to Santa Fe—under command of Gen. Stephen W. Kearney. Corps of mounted volunteers were speedily organized, and early in June began to arrive at Fort Leavenworth, the appointed rendezvous. By the 18th of the month the full complement of companies to compose the First Regiment having arrived from the counties of Jackson, Lafayette, Clay, Saline, Franklin, Cole, Howard, and Callaway, an election was held, which resulted in the choice of Alexander W. Doniphan, colonel; C. F. Ruff, lieutenant colonel; and William Gilpin, major.

* * * We can not follow this command through the great solitudes between Fort Leavenworth and Santa Fe, which place it reached on August 18, nor its heroic and successful descent upon Chihuahua under the command of Col. Doniphan, Gen. Kearney having left for the Pacific coast. Suffice to say that the Battles of Brazito and Sacramento will ever be remembered in history for the valor displayed by the Army of the West from Missouri.

The Battle of Brazito, or "Little Arm" of the Rio Del Norte, December 25, 1846, on a level prairie bordering on that stream, was very disastrous to the Mexicans. Col. Doniphan commanded the Missouri troops in person, numbering only about 800 men. The Mexicans, under Gen. Ponce de Leon, mustered, cavalry and artillery, 1,100 strong. The Mexicans were defeated with a loss of 61 killed—among them was their general—5 prisoners, and 150 wounded. The Americans had 8 wounded and none killed. Two days after the Battle of Brazito, December 27, 1846, the United States forces, under command of Col. Doniphan, took possession of El Paso, in the department of Chihuahua.

On the 28th of February, 1847, Col. Doniphan, with 924 men and 10 pieces of artillery, fought and vanquished in the pass of Sacramento 4,000 Mexicans under Maj. Gen. Jose A. Heredia, aided by Gen. Garcia Conde, former Minister of War in Mexico. The battle lasted more than three hours, resulting in a Mexican loss of 304 men killed, 40 prisoners (among them was Brig. Gen. Cuilta), and about 500 wounded. Also 10 pieces of artillery, $6,000 in specie, 50,000 head of sheep, 1,500 head of cattle, 100 mules, 20 wagons, etc. The American loss was 1 killed—Maj. Samuel C. Owens, of Independence—and 11 wounded, among the latter severely, J. S. Fleming, of Columbia.

Col. Doniphan did not, like Hannibal, after the Battle of Cannae, loiter on the plains of Italy when he might have entered Rome in triumph, but immediately followed up his success. Therefore, early on the next morning, March 1, 1847, he dispatched Lieut. Col. D. D. Mitchell with 150 men, under Capts. Weightman and Reid, and a section of artillery, to take formal possession of the city of Chihuahua, the capital, and occupy it in the name of the Government. On the approach of this force the Mexicans fled from the city, leaving it undefended, and Col. Mitchell entered it without the slightest resistance. On the morning of the next day Col. Doniphan, with all his military trains, the merchant caravan, and colors gally glittering in the breeze, triumphantly entered the city to the tunes of "Yankee Doodle" and "Hail Columbia" and fired in the public square a national salute of 28 guns.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER].

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, at the last election held in the State of Missouri, in November, 1910, the gentleman who was chairman of the Democratic State committee of Missouri and who lived in Kansas City, made the charge that in St. Louis there had been fraudulent votes and false registration of negro voters. At the election there were candidates for judge of the supreme court. The returns showed that the Republican candidates had been elected. The chairman of the Democratic State committee caused contests to be instituted against the successful Republican candidates. The majority of the supreme court of Missouri, which had charge of these contests, were Democratic judges. They appointed a distinguished Democrat from St. Joseph, Mo., Judge Culver, as a commissioner to take testimony upon the charges made that there had been fraudulent voting and the fraudulent registration of negro voters in St. Louis.

For a year and a half he had been taking testimony without any objection, with every facility open to him, with the poll books and votes cast in St. Louis thrown open to him, and here two weeks or so ago he made his report to the supreme court that he had not found a single fraudulent negro vote in St. Louis. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BOOHER. The gentleman does not pretend to say that that is the report of Judge Culver?

Mr. DYER. Yes; that is the substance of his report, that there was not a single fraudulent vote cast in St. Louis.

Mr. BOOHER. Oh, the gentleman has not read it.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman from Missouri himself can not state with any show of fact or any proof that there was a fraudulent vote. It is an easy charge to make that there were fraudulent votes, but with the record open, with the poll book open, with every facility given them by a Democratic supreme court, with full opportunity to count and inspect the ballots, they have not found a single fraudulent vote, and it is now an inopportune time for the gentleman from Missouri, my colleague, to make such a statement.

Mr. BOOHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. Yes.

Mr. BOOHER. Did not the Republican election board of the city of St. Louis strike the names of 16,000 registered negroes off the list in January, after the election in November?

Mr. DYER. That may be; I do not know, but it has nothing to do with the fraudulent voting. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] Mr. Chairman, in the city of St. Louis, like every other great city, there is a registration system, and every man must register and be on the books before he can vote. After the election is over and the next registration comes around the board of registration naturally strikes men's names from the books who have moved away, and this has been done after every election. It has been done years before, and it has been done ever since that policy prevailed and the law enforced. But, as I was saying to my colleague, for whom I have the greatest regard, he would not make a statement of that kind unless it was in the heat of passion, because he knows that there are no facts to substantiate it; he knows that the whole election of St. Louis has been investigated from every angle; that members of the State legislature contested the ballots and carried it to a Democratic legislature of Missouri, and they would not seat the Democratic contestants. The Republicans stayed there. They carried it to Congress, and they have not found a single fraudulent vote that they can point to in a contest that they brought to the House. They can not do it; and I think the gentleman ought not to make a statement of that kind, casting aspersions on the electorate of that great city without some proof; that he has not got and can not give. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 17 minutes.

Mr. HAY. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOOHER].

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, I should not have entered this discussion if it had not been for the rank statement by my friend from Missouri [Mr. DYER], in reply to a question from the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], that Missouri would certainly be found in the Republican column at the next election. Missouri two years ago gave an apparent Republican majority on the face of the returns for the candidates for State offices of about 3,000 on an average. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that after the election was over two years ago in November, a special election was held in the city of St. Louis—my recollection is it was the 16th of January, but I may not be correct as to the date—and under the laws of the State of Missouri the registration board of that city had to revise the registration lists for that special election. The election board of St. Louis is composed of two Republicans and one Democrat. When that list was revised in the city of St. Louis within two months after the election in November the names of 16,000 negroes were stricken from it. Six thousand names were stricken from the list in the gentleman's own district.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOOHER. No; not now. And the residence of these negro voters could not be found in the city of St. Louis by the men upon that Republican election board who investigated to find out where they went. Altogether on the revision of that registration list the names of 16,000 negro voters in the city of St. Louis were stricken from the list inside of two months from the election in November.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOOHER. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Can the gentleman tell the House that there was a single fraudulent vote cast in that election, or can he give the name or address of a single fraudulent voter?

Mr. BOOHER. I have said that there were 6,000 names stricken from the list in the gentleman's own district within two months after the election.

Mr. DYER. Oh, that is something the gentleman read in the newspapers.

Mr. BOOHER. Does the gentleman from Missouri say that 6,000 names were not stricken from the list in the district he represents?

Mr. DYER. The names of men are stricken from the list after any election. They do not vote in that election, but there was not a single fraudulent vote cast.

Mr. BOOHER. I say it is not only prima facie evidence of fraud, but evidence strong enough to convince any reasonable man that where in a city you strike 16,000 names from a registration list within two months after an election, that a large number were fraudulent names, and that fraudulent votes were cast.

Mr. DYER. I will ask the gentleman if Judge Culver is from his city?

Mr. BOOHER. This is not to come out of my time?

Mr. DYER. No; he does not live there. He is like the gentleman from Kansas City—making charges where he does not know the facts.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, I wish the gentleman would keep quiet.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BOOHER. Not now. Every other county in the State of Missouri at that election, save one, and every other city in the State of Missouri at that election, showed large Democratic gains over the vote cast before, but when it came to the city of St. Louis, from a majority of 13,000 two years before it rose to the magnificent majority of 25,000. Where were your 16,000 votes that were stricken from your registration list? They voted the Republican ticket. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOOHER. No.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman makes a misstatement there about the election returns two years ago.

Mr. BOOHER. I can not yield to the gentleman. I do not know what Judge Culver's report was. For him I have the highest regard. There is no man who stands higher as a man and lawyer in the State of Missouri than R. E. Culver, and he has never reported to the supreme court or anybody else that there were no fraudulent votes cast in the State of Missouri. That is not his report. The gentleman has not read it.

Mr. DYER. I have.

Mr. BOOHER. Or he would not stand here and make these statements.

Mr. DYER. I will ask the gentleman——

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] must first address the Chair.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, it makes no difference which gentleman from Missouri makes a speech, but I do insist that the rules be complied with. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] should first address the Chair if he wishes to interrupt his colleague.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman to yield.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, I can not yield. I have been interrupted and I have no time left. I say again, and I weigh my words when I say them, that when within less than two months from an election you strike from the registration list of any city the names of 16,000 voters, and this is done by the party in power, which happened to be my friend's party, that it is not only presumptive, but convincing evidence that there were fraudulent votes cast in the city of St. Louis in that election. [Applause on the Democratic side.] When the gentleman admits that 6,000 names were stricken from the list in his district——

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman ought not to misquote me.

Mr. BOOHER. But the gentleman has not denied it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has declined to yield.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate that, but I desire to ask him a question.

Mr. BOOHER. Well, ask your question and be through with it.

Mr. DYER. I want to ask the gentleman if he can say that I made any such statement? I did not.

Mr. BOOHER. Does the gentleman say there were not 16,000 names stricken from the registration books, as I have stated?

Mr. DYER. I will not deny that there were names stricken out after that election, as after every other election, and the gentleman, my colleague, will not deny that there were no fraudulent votes cast.

Mr. BOOHER. The gentleman will not deny that in his own district there were 6,000 names stricken from the poll list.

Mr. DYER. I do deny it. The gentleman has not proved it.

Mr. BOOHER. He will not deny there were 16,000 names stricken from the poll list in St. Louis, and he will not deny they could not be traced.

Mr. DYER. I do deny that; and I will leave it to Judge Culver.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] will take his seat.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman to yield for a question.

Mr. BOOHER. No; not any more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, it is unfortunate that these things are true. I regret it as much as anybody; but when you take into consideration that in every other city in that State, in every other county save one in that State, there were large Democratic gains over the vote two years before, and in St. Louis a majority of 13,000 was run up suddenly into a majority of 25,000, there can be no question in the mind of anybody that that majority can be traced to its source when we take into consideration the further fact that 16,000 names were stricken from the registration list. They could not be traced, they could not be found, they did not reside in the city of St. Louis. What became of them?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. May I ask the gentleman were the names stricken off before or after the election?

Mr. BOOHER. They were stricken off after the election in November and before the 16th of the following January, as I understand.

Mr. HARDWICK. After they had voted.

Mr. BOOHER. Yes; after they had voted in November the 16,000 names were stricken from the list.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOOHER. No. I am not going to engage in this controversy about who is going to be nominated at Chicago. I do not care who is nominated there. The American people will see to it that whoever is nominated will be retired to private life after the votes are counted in November. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Think of the great party spoken of by my friend from Illinois. He says he did not vote for reciprocity and stands up and says he is going to make a campaign among the American farmers against reciprocity. Will you nominate President Taft because he is the great bulwark of reciprocity? Will you nominate Mr. Roosevelt because he is for free trade with Canada and not reciprocity? In his letter that has been published he said that he was for free trade with Canada. That is his position when he wrote to the President when he requested his assistance. But he has seen the light. Did he see something? He must have some other ground to stand on, and he says now, "Just as soon as I found out it would be a great disadvantage to the American farmer I changed my mind, and I am not for reciprocity now"; but he fails to state when he saw the light. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I understand that all debate is now closed, but I ask unanimous consent for the purpose of extending my remarks to include——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will inform the gentleman that all time has not expired. The gentleman from Virginia has seven minutes remaining.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, as no one desires to use any time on this side, I will ask the Clerk to read the bill.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by including the report of the distinguished Democratic commissioner, Judge Culver, of St. Joseph, upon the question of whether or not there was a single fraudulent vote given in the city of St. Louis at the last election.

Mr. BOEHNE. I shall object to the gentleman putting any portion of Judge Culver's report in the RECORD, but if he proposes to put the whole of it in——

Mr. DYER. I ask unanimous consent to include the whole of the report if the gentleman can get any satisfaction out of that.

Mr. BOOHER. If I understand the gentleman is to put in the whole report, I will not object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that he be permitted to extend his remarks to include the whole of this report to which he has referred.

Mr. BOEHNE. Is that the only document the gentleman wishes to put in?

Mr. BOOHER. Well, any other official document the gentleman has——

Mr. BOEHNE. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of nine assistant professors (captains), in addition to pay as first lieutenants, $3,600.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 17, page 2, strike out the word "nine" and insert "ten"; in lines 18 and 19 strike out the words "thirty-six hundred" and insert the words "four thousand"; and at the end of the word "dollars," in line 19, page 2, add this proviso: "Provided, That hereafter the departments of English and history be authorized two assistant professors, one for English and one for history," so that it will read: "For pay of 10 assistant professors (captains), in addition to pay as first lieutenants, $4,000: Provided, That hereafter the department of history and English be authorized two assistant professors, one for English and one for history."

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order. I have no objection to the amendment, provided the gentleman will strike out the proviso.

Mr. KAHN. The proviso was asked by the superintendent of the academy——

Mr. HAY. I understand that.

Mr. KAHN. On the ground that they require an additional assistant professor in the departments of English and history just as much as they require one in the departments of Spanish and French.

Mr. HAY. The amendment without the proviso will care for them for one year, and I would prefer that to be done. Now, if the gentleman will insist upon the proviso I shall be compelled to make the point of order; otherwise I will not.

Mr. KAHN. I will ask that the proviso be stricken out.

Mr. HAY. All right. I have no objection to the amendment, then.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the point of order, this is an increase of salary?

Mr. HAY. No; it is no increase of salary, but it is an increase of one instructor in English.

Mr. KAHN. One assistant professor in English.

Mr. BUTLER. I thought that the amendment——

Mr. HAY. That carries with it the increase of $400 which each one of these instructors receive, so that when you increase the number of instructors you increase the appropriation to the extent of $400, which is added to the man's salary.

Mr. KAHN. They have 9 assistant professors and they want 10.

Mr. BUTLER. How does that compare with the salary at Annapolis? Is it the same?

Mr. KAHN. I do not know.

Mr. HAY. I imagine the salaries at West Point are more than at the Naval Academy. They generally are.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not object, but I presume we will be asked to increase the salary at Annapolis.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment as modified.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be reported as modified.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 17, page 2, strike out the word "nine" and insert "ten."
In lines 18 and 19, strike out "three thousand six hundred" and insert "four thousand."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For extra pay of one enlisted man employed as janitor and substitute teacher in the children's school, at 50 cents per day (submitted), $156.50.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to line 12, on page 11, for the purpose of striking out the word "submitted," which ought not to be there.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to return to line 12, page 11, in order to strike out the word "submitted." The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 11, line 12, by striking out the word "submitted," in parentheses.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] answer a question?

Mr. HAY. I will.

Mr. BUTLER. It says:

For extra pay of one enlisted man employed as janitor and substitute teacher in the children's school.

Will the gentleman please inform me what school that is?

Mr. HAY. That is the school established at West Point some three or four years ago, against my protest, I may say, and it is generally known as "Capt. Bradley's School."

Mr. BUTLER. I would not know it any better by that, I will say to my friend.

Mr. HAY. But it is a school for the children at that post.

Mr. BUTLER. The children of officers?

Mr. HAY. Of officers and men.

Mr. BUTLER. Children of officers and enlisted men?

Mr. HAY. Yes; and of employees at that post.

Mr. BUTLER. It is very singular to have a school at an Army post.

Mr. HAY. It is very unusual.

Mr. BUTLER. Is this school maintained at the expense of the Government?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. And maintained by this bill?

Mr. HAY. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. We are learning something every day.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Might I interrupt the gentleman for a moment to say that if he will look at the RECORD he will doubtless find that he voted for that school.

Mr. BUTLER. I do a great many bad things——

Mr. SLAYDEN. I protested against the establishment of the school. I did not think it should have been done, but it was done.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter the Board of Visitors to the Military Academy shall consist of five members of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate and seven members of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the respective chairmen thereof; the members so appointed shall visit the Military Academy annually at such time or times as the chairmen of said committees shall appoint, and the members from each of said committees may visit said academy together or separately as the said committees may elect during the session of Congress; and the superintendent of the academy and the members of the Board of Visitors shall be notified of such date by the chairmen of the said committees. The expenses of the members of the board shall be their actual expenses while engaged upon their duties as members of said board and their actual expenses of travel by the shortest mail routes: Provided further, That so much of sections 1327, 1328, and 1329, Revised Statutes of the United States, as is inconsistent with the provisions of this act is hereby repealed.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment on page 17, line 5, to strike out the words "or times," so that it will read:

Annually at such time as the chairman of said committee——

Mr. SLAYDEN. I am assured by the chairman of the committee that he is willing to accept that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 17, line 5, strike out the words "or times."

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the purpose of changing the law. I will not make a point of order, but why do you change it?

Mr. PRINCE. We call for a vote on the amendment, and then will take that up.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I also offer an amendment in line 13, after the word "board," to make it in perfect harmony with the amendment adopted on the naval appropriation bill, so that it will read:

The expenses of the members of the board shall be their actual expenses while engaged upon their duties as members of said board, not to exceed $5 a day.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend page 17, line 13, by inserting, after the word "board," the words "not to exceed $5 per day."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. BUTLER. This corresponds, I understand, very largely, in its effect, with the amendment made to the naval appropriation bill?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Absolutely.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase of surveying instruments, $1,000: Provided, That this appropriation shall be immediately available: And provided further, That when any instrument, apparatus, implements, or materials which have been heretofore or may hereafter be purchased or acquired for the use of any department of instruction or for the maintenance and operation of the waterworks are no longer needed or are no longer serviceable they may be sold in such manner as the superintendent may direct and the proceeds credited to the appropriation for the department or the waterworks for which they were purchased or acquired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Virginia please tell me what is the necessity for making this appropriation immediately available?

Mr. HAY. To which appropriation does the gentleman refer?

Mr. BUTLER. For the purchase of surveying instruments.

Mr. HAY. The necessity for making the appropriation immediately available arises from the fact that these instruments are required at once in order to teach students their surveying. The superintendent stated that they were needed immediately, at once.

Mr. BUTLER. Then, they have not had any heretofore, have they?

Mr. HAY. I understand they have.

Mr. BUTLER. It seems strange to me that they should run short so suddenly that a thousand dollars should be made immediately available for instruments of this kind, when, I suppose, they have had thousands of dollars' worth of such instruments heretofore.

Mr. HAY. I understand the superintendent would not have insisted unless they were needed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For full settlement of the claim of John G. Pavek for use and occupation of his property by the United States from May 20, 1908, to March 31, 1909, $800.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Will the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs tell me what necessity there was of occupying the property of John G. Pavek? It seems to me that is a curious proposition.

Mr. HAY. The property was condemned. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BRADLEY] can give the particulars about that.

Mr. BUTLER. It has been suggested by a gentleman on this side that the discussion should not be started.

Mr. HAY. It is entirely proper. I will make a statement concerning it if the gentleman desires.

Mr. BUTLER. Never mind. I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

No pay shall be withheld from Lieut. Col. J. M. Carson, jr., Deputy Quartermaster General, United States Army, because of the payment by him in May, 1909, when major and quartermaster, United States Army, for eight horses or polo ponies purchased pursuant to instructions from the Secretary of War for use in the instruction of cadets at the United States Military Academy.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. BUTLER rose.

Mr. HAY. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to be heard?

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman from Oklahoma, I understand, was going to speak of that.

Mr. HAY. I will ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Oklahoma be allowed 25 minutes.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the gentleman propose to speak about this provision of the bill that no pay shall be withheld from Lieut. Col. Carson, jr., because of a mistake made by him? Was the mistake made by him?

Mr. HAY. The Comptroller of the Treasury ruled that under the law the quartermaster could not pay for these polo ponies. He purchased the polo ponies under instructions from the Secretary of War, and his pay has been stopped to that extent.

Mr. BUTLER. A polo pony is no part of the military establishment?

Mr. HAY. No; but for the instruction of cadets——

Mr. BUTLER. In the game of polo?

Mr. HAY. No; in the game of riding. In teaching them how to ride it is necessary for them to have polo ponies or horses of that description.

Mr. BUTLER. I guess they would have fared better with the item if they had not called them "polo ponies."

Mr. HAY. They are called "polo ponies" in the Army appropriation bill, and for that reason the language in this item had to conform with the language in the Army appropriation bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] may have 25 minutes in which to address the committee on any subject he may desire. I may say that I intended to turn over that time to the gentleman, but he was out of the hall at the time this debate began, engaged in the business of the House, and was unable to get here. I trust there may be no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] may be allowed 25 minutes in which to address the committee.

Mr. GOOD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman on what subject the gentleman from Oklahoma proposes to enlighten the House?

Mr. HAY. I do not know upon what subject, but I will say to the gentleman from Iowa that the gentleman from Oklahoma asked me to give him the time on this bill, and I obtained half an hour for the purpose of yielding it to him. But when the House met he was in a conference committee, and therefore was unable to get here, and for that reason I do not know what the gentleman is going to talk about. I have no idea.

Mr. GOOD. Is it the purpose of the gentleman from Virginia to ask leave to extend remarks in the RECORD for all the Members who speak on this bill, so that they may print remarks on any subject?

Mr. HAY. Not at all. I have no objection to anybody extending remarks, if he desires to do so.

Mr. BUTLER. I have no disposition to object——

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman modify his request so that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] may also have 25 minutes, if he desires to use it, to yield to some one on this side of the House?

Mr. HAY. Yes; I think that is fair.

Mr. PRINCE. I was going to make the same request myself.

Mr. BUTLER. I have no objection.

Mr. HAY. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] may have 25 minutes and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] 25 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] have 25 minutes and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] 25 minutes to address the House on any subject. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the Sixty-second Congress, certain standpat reactionary newspapers of the country and certain Republican statesmen both in and out of Congress have begun their usual attack on the Democratic legislation enacted for the people. They are beginning to utter weird and denunciatory statements that the Democratic House is playing politics and not acting in good faith with the American people. They follow this with the sanguine statement that the Senate surely will not feel called upon to take any action on the Democratic bills, and if they were so imprudent as to consider them and pass them, surely the Republican President would veto them.

If the conditions in the country were ordinary or the spectacle a different one, I would not trespass upon the time of the House to answer these charges, but the statements made by them are not without purpose and, if unanswered, I fear will not be without effect.

Let us examine the bills passed by a Democratic House during the first year of their return to power and see if they are tinged with politics, bad faith, broken promises, or of blasted hopes. Again, let us observe and see if they are not first in strict accord with our pledges to the people; second, in strict accord with our platform pledges; third, in strict accord with the wishes and desires of the bulk of the American people and for their best interests as well.

Let us observe if the bills the Democratic House has passed should be vetoed by a Republican President. Let us see if they are bills that should be smothered by a legislative body at the other end of the Capitol, whose political faith is other than our own.

On these propositions I join issue with them squarely and assert that our bills are good bills and that the Democratic House has kept the everlasting faith. [Applause.]

ELECTION OF SENATORS BY DIRECT VOTE.

House joint resolution No. 39, providing for election of Senators by direct vote, passed the Democratic House on April 22, 1911. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 1st sess. 62d Cong., p. 243.) The vote stood 295 for, 17 against. Sixteen of the seventeen voting "no" were Republicans, one was a Democrat.

The passage of this resolution so promptly after being returned to power is simply a case of doing in office what we have all promised we would do while trying to get office.

The passage of this resolution in office is simply permitting the people to do well for themselves what has too often been done poorly for them by the legislatures of the country. It is simply permitting the people to do well openly and aboveboard for themselves what legislatures have too often been doing poorly and clandestinely for them.

This legislation has been an issue in every campaign since I was born. Few men have ever dared or cared to oppose it out of office, but too many by far have always opposed it in one form and another in office.

If this resolution had been the law of the land two years ago Illinois would not to-day be blushing for shame behind WILLIAM LORIMER, who is now on trial for the seat the people did not give. If this legislation had then been the law, WILLIAM LORIMER would not be writhing in pain amidst blighted hopes and a blasted name. If this legislation had then been enacted and the law, the Senate would not to-day be under a cloud of distrust and the comment of the street. If this had then been the law, certain Senators would not from warmth of heart and hope of innocence for LORIMER have made their return impossible by voting in that trial as they had hoped. If this legislation had then been the law, the Senate could take up the business of the country and not spend so much time in the trial and expulsion of their Members.

Surely this can not be the legislation of which our opponents complain. Surely we did not divorce the affections of the American people in returning to them this power that should have never been taken from them at the beginning. Surely it is not criminal to trust the people who trusted us to be their representatives. Surely the voices of our opponents will not reach a welcome ear when the legislation is but our solemn promise to the people for all these years. Surely confidence and esteem will not be aborted by doing what we promised and what the people desired.

Surely the people will approve our early action. Surely the people will deplore your refusal to act. We did in one year what you steadfastly refused to do during your long lease of power. I think it safe to rest our cause on this legislation with the people.

CAMPAIGN PUBLICITY SO THE PEOPLE MAY KNOW.

On the 14th day of April, 1911, the Democratic House said by the passage of a bill requiring publicity of campaign expenses the people shall know who puts up the money to elect men to Congress. The vote appears on page 268 of the RECORD, first session Sixty-second Congress, and it shows the vote to be 307 for the bill and no one against the bill.

On the 20th day of April, 1912, the Democratic House passed by a unanimous vote a bill requiring candidates for the Presidency to make known their contributors and to file a full and complete statement therefor. This bill again takes the people into our confidence. Again the Democratic House during its first year of power does for the people what the Republican Party has steadfastly refused to do for the past 16 years, though in full control of the Government at both ends of the Capitol and in the White House.

Can such bills as these be lacking in good faith? Can the passage of such wholesome bills for the good of all of us be playing politics? Is this one of the bills which are, by our opponents, denominated political bills? Is this one of the bills that our opponents are telling the country are poorly digested and unworthy? Is there any reason why the people should not know? Is there any reason why the light should not be thrown on the matter, so that all might read, know, and understand? Is this a bill that we are ashamed of, when no man on either side of the House had the courage, or even the desire, so far as the record goes, to vote against it? Is it possible that every Republican and every Democrat in the House would vote for a bill without any merit? Is it possible that a bill with such a wholesome purpose is not for the interests of the people who sent us here?

Who is there here who will set out in terms plain that he is now against this bill?

I assert this bill is in the interest of the people who sent us here and that the men and parties that oppose it are opposing legislation that the people want and would be wholesome for them to have. If it is a bad bill, why did not you oppose it when the bill passed the House unanimously on April 20 of this year?

FARMERS' FREE LIST.

This bill passed the House on the 8th day of May, 1911, by a majority of 127. Democrats voting for, 209; and no Democrat against. Republicans for, 27; and 109 against. Your Republican President vetoed this bill on the 18th day of August, 1911. The Democratic House passed it a second time, this session. Are you going to veto it again?

This bill removes all burdensome taxes from the tools the farmer uses to feed the world. This bill removes the taxes from the lumber from which homes are built. This bill removes the burdensome tax from the shoes we wear on our feet. This bill removes the taxes from all the vehicles and implements that are so necessary. This bill is a curbing of the Harvester Trust. I ask, Is this one of the bills on which we were playing politics?

Is this one of the bills that forever renders us unworthy? With the increased cost of living and the manifest clamor for the bright lights of the crowded city, is this such a bill as will ruin and destroy the confidence of the American people in the Democratic Party? Is this emphatic and well-digested stroke at the Harvester Trust, which is, perhaps, the most vicious of them all, to be our complete undoing? Is this the bill they refer to when they say we are weird, fantastic, and political prank players, not acting in good faith?

Is this bill that will help to repopulate the American farm and clean the fence rows of the weeds of desolation and neglect to be the crime of politics for which we must suffer everlasting defeat? Is this the bill that was vetoed by President Taft on the 18th day of August, 1911, for which he is now being stoned and destroyed from one end of this country to the other? He acted on stand-pat, safe and sane Republican advice then, and look at his almost pitiable plight of this day. A man who can not carry his own State for a return term against a man who is breaking all rules of precedent in seeking a third term.

STATEHOOD FOR THE TWO NEW STATES.

This bill admitting fair Arizona and New Mexico into the Union passed the House August 17, 1911. They admitted two bright new States into the Union that should have been admitted long ago. Is this one of the bills that renders us political pirates? Is this one of the bills that proves our disloyalty to the people? Is the passage of a bill in office precisely as we promised in the platform and out of office, is that such a crime as will accomplish our formal farewell to even a hope of success? Is this such a step as will forever demonstrate our complete unworthiness? Who is there here to-day who is ashamed of fair Arizona and New Mexico? Who is there here who are not proud of them and their membership in this House? [Applause.]

INCOME TAX.

This bill passed the Democratic House March 19, 1912, by a majority of 212. Democrats for, 174; against, 6. Republicans for, 24; against, 97. This merely subjects the income of the rich to taxation, so that they will bear the expenses of government in proportion to the benefits derived from government. It is an expensive element of government to protect the millions of the rich, and each citizen should undoubtedly contribute to his protection in proportion to the benefits he enjoys. Can this legislation or the application of such a wholesome rule be the treason that will be our undoing? Can the passage of this bill, which is craved by the great bulk of our people everywhere, can this be the rock on which we must strand? Can this be the bill that will amount to a complete displacement of the affections of the people? Can this be the bill that renders the people of this country sorry that they placed us in power? Is this the legislation that is undigested, unworthy, and enacted in bad faith? Is this the bill on which we were playing politics and tampering with the people's confidence and esteem? I do not believe the charges true. I do not believe the American people will accept them either as true or sincere. I assert that this House has kept the everlasting faith since it came into power. I assert that it will keep it while intrusted with the people's tasks. [Applause.]

THE COTTON SCHEDULE SHOULD NOT HAVE BEEN VETOED.

This bill reducing the tariff taxes on cotton and cotton cloth passed the House on the 3d day of August, 1911. Democrats for the bill, 172; Democrats against the bill, none; Republicans for the bill, 30; against the bill, 90. The bill passed by a majority of 112. This bill was vetoed by President Taft on the 22d day of August, 1911. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Aug. 3, 1911, 1st sess. 62d Cong.)

Why will the President veto bills so universally desired in a Republic like our own? Why will a party try to uphold him in such an un-American act? Does it not fairly make us stand in amazement and wonder if the power should not be divested to the end that the legislative branch may not be stripped of their power and their mission under the Constitution?

The veto power has been abused more in the last 12 months than could have been dreamed of in a Republic like ours under a Constitution made for all of the people. Our Republic has been looked upon as one to blaze the way for all the rest. Why make our Republic a byword and a joke? Why allow a President to overthrow and vitiate the things we were sent here to do.

CHEMICAL BILL IN THE INTEREST OF THE AFFLICTED VETOED ALSO.

This schedule went to the President as an amendment to the cotton bill the first time and it was vetoed. The Democratic House passed it a second time on the 21st day of February, 1912. Democrats for, 177. No Democrat voted no. Republicans for the bill, 2. Republicans against the bill, 127. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Feb. 21, 1912; 2d sess. 62d Cong.)

There must, I think, be exceedingly few who would criticize the Democratic House for trying to strip the Drug Trust of their power to extort inhuman prices from the afflicted of this country. I anticipate it will require more than bald charges of infidelity on the part of standpatters to secure from the people a verdict of unfaithfulness for the passage of this act.

Can the great Republican Party longer defend their action in smothering and vetoing bills of this character? Is it any wonder that the voters turned the Republicans out in the face of such a record? Is it any wonder that there is to-day in the House a Democratic majority of 71 when the Sixtieth Congress had a majority for the Republicans of 57? The people have delivered their verdict once on your broken promises and they will deliver it in the future if gratitude and self-appreciation is still the law.

THE STEEL SCHEDULE SHOULD BE REVISED, IS THE VERDICT OF ALL.

This bill first passed and went to the President as an amendment to the cotton bill. It received the President's veto on the 22d day of August, 1911. The Democratic House passed it a second time on January 29, 1912. Democrats for, 190; Democrats against, 3; Republicans for, 21; Republicans against, 107; majority, 101. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Jan. 29, 1912, 2d sess. 62d Cong.)

The reduction of the tariff tax on steel is in the interest of every man who uses iron in any form. Who is there of us who does not use it? The farmer with his implements, the carpenter with his tools, the contractor who builds our buildings, and from the humblest citizen in all the land to the most powerful all in unison and accord ask to be free from the grasp of the Steel Trust. Andrew Carnegie, the steel king of the world, says no tariff on steel is longer needed and that no country can compete with us, anyway. In the face of such testimony can any satisfactory reason be given why a Republican President should veto this bill? Can any man justify the Senate in smothering such a bill? Surely the Democratic House was moving with its face eastward and toward the light when it passed this bill. Surely the Democratic House has not forfeited its right to the respect of men when it clings so close to the people's rights and the people's desires.

We passed the bill pursuant to our platform pledges. You have killed it for reasons only known to yourselves. We have, so far as power within the Democratic Party lies, given relief. You have refused to grant relief when it was clearly within your power. This aligns your party with the Steel Trust; this arrays us against them.

The record is plain, not garbled; easy to understand, not difficult. Surely the American people have a choice. Which will they choose? Which course ought to meet their approval? Which course will meet their approval?

FREE SUGAR FOR EVERY BREAKFAST TABLE.

The free-sugar bill passed the Democratic House on the 15th day of March, 1912, by a majority of 95 votes. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 2d sess. 62d Cong., of Mar. 15, 1912.) Democrats for, 173; Democrats against, 7; Republicans for, 25; against, 96. This bill curbs the Sugar Trust and affords the American people cheaper food. The American people have too long been in the grasp of the Sugar Trust, the price going up to-day and down to-morrow at the will of the trust. Surely the Democratic House did right in liberating the people from their grasp. Surely the American people will not be displeased with legislation that will help every family of the Republic and make living cheaper. Surely the Democratic Party was not playing politics in passing this legislation, for most of the sugar is grown in Democratic country. Havemeyer and the Sugar Trust magnates may cry out against this legislation, but surely the American people will not join you in your unholy assault on the party that passed this legislation.

GOOD ROADS VERSUS BATTLESHIPS.

Your Democratic House on May 28, 1912, voted down by a majority of 34 the big Navy battleship program. On May 2, 1912, we passed the amendment to the Post Office appropriation bill providing Federal aid for the post roads of the country by a majority of 83. I ask, in this time of profound peace and an efficient Navy, which program will benefit the larger number of the American people?

We promised you in our Denver platform aid for post roads. We promised you a curtailment of expenses in the extravagant appropriations for the Army and Navy. On May 2 and May 28, respectively, we delivered the goods. We simply did in office what we promised to do out of office in our platform and on the stump. Shall we be condemned for this? Shall we and must we suffer the assaults of the reactionaries of all creeds and parties for so doing.

I tell you, sirs, the Congress has in the past given subsidies in land grants to the railroads, given high protection to the manufacturers, improved lavishly the waterways, dredged the streams and rivers, have appropriated for Army and Navy until it brings a shudder from us all, but have done nothing for the post roads of the country. Every civilized country save our own has long ago well committed themselves to the improvement of their post roads, which are and ever will be the property of us all. I tell you, sirs, the Federal Constitution itself anticipated that we should improve the post roads of the country. The constitutionality no longer is a matter of doubt or concern. We are not without precedent. The American people are entitled to it; we promised it; we have delivered the goods.

Highways are not the property of any one man. They are not susceptible of monopoly or abuse. They are to-day and ever will be the property of all mankind that inhabits our fair shores. We should not longer hesitate or falter in their improvement and upbuilding.

I, for one, in time of peace and an efficient Navy, am willing to go to the country on the issue, Good Roads and Economy v. Battleships and Extravagance. One is to maim and kill, the other contributes to the peace, progress, and happiness of our people. One places homes in ashes and disaster, the other encourages home ownership, industry, and peace. One brings heartaches, want, and disaster, the other brightens every hope of man. One devastates the farm and lets it grow up in weeds of neglect, the other repopulates it, reduces the cost of living, and improves every condition of man.

BUREAU OF MINES FOR THE WORLD'S TREASURE DIGGERS.

The Democratic House has reported and is now considering and will pass H. R. 21213, creating a bureau of mines for the protection of America's miners. This bureau will increase the safety of every man engaged in the hazardous employment of the mine. It will relieve him of conditions and dangers that no human was intended to subject himself to or endure. It will do for the American miner what should have been done for him 20 years ago. It is the doing for the miner what we told him we would do for him. It is the doing for the miner during our first year of power what the Republicans, under Cannonism, have refused and failed to do for them during their 16 years of unbroken and unbridled power.

Still, our standpat opponents charge bad faith and politics to the Democratic House which is acting in strict conformity with their pledges and the people's desires. Still, they say we are prank players and unsafe. Will such assaults be received with any degree of seriousness on the part of the people we seek to protect? Will American organized labor give ear to these reactionary soothsayers who are trying to mislead, garble, and defraud?

I tell you, sirs, organized labor is to-day thinking for themselves, and you shall not be heard to abuse their confidence, their trust, and their patriotism while they are toiling beneath the surface of the earth bringing forth each night treasure that will and does enrich the world.

CONVICT-LABOR LEGISLATION FOR AMERICAN LABOR.

On March 4, 1912, we passed our convict-labor bill (see CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 2d sess. 62d Cong., of Mar. 4, 1912). No one voted against the bill. This bill says American labor shall not be compelled to compete with the convict labor of this country. Is it politics to exempt America's young manhood and womanhood from such competition? Is it bad faith to lift aloft and brighten the future of our men and women who toil? Is it unpatriotic to do for labor what we would want done for ourselves? Is it lacking in good faith to do in office what we promised we would do while we were securing our offices?

American labor may have lost their gratitude, their sense of appreciation, and their loyalty, but I shall never believe it. Organized labor may be mislead by garbled statements and charges which are more untrue than words can depict, but I do not believe it. Organized labor may strike the hand that has during its first year of power so often caressed them, but it is not the rule or their reputation. They may approve your 16 years of refusal to act and your present attempt to deceive, but it would not be in accord with any rule of rhyme or reason known to man.

I would much prefer to believe that organized labor and every father and mother of the toilers of the Republic will approve our earnest and sincere accomplishments for their sons and daughters. I would much prefer to believe that they will forever voice their disapproval of your failure to act when in power and your present effort at deception when out of power. [Applause.]

EIGHT-HOUR DAY FOR AMERICAN LABOR.

This bill passed the House December 14, 1911, second session Sixty-second Congress, page 349. No one even demanded a roll call. No one voted no. This bill has long been the hope of labor; has long been the request of labor, with bowed down head; is the hope of labor in the morning with dinner pail in hand as he goes to his daily task; is the dream of labor as he returns at night with tired muscles, but with rested brain. Is the passage of this bill, that recognizes the humble but just request of the man who toils for us in peace and fights for us in war—is this to be the Waterloo of the Democratic Party? Is this one of the crimes of which you complain? Is this the legislation, enacted in the interest of labor, to make the man who toils forever turn his back on the hand that caresses him and gives him what he wants? Is this to be the iceberg of disaster that will sweep the Democratic Party to an unknown, unmarked, watery grave? Pray tell us where do all of these weird and spectacular prophecies hail from. Which bill is it that has so outraged the morals and the pledges to all the people? What bill is it that renders us political acrobats in the eyes of a just constituency? If the keeping of our word to labor and the keeping of faith with men who can not enter upon this floor and make their appeals known to us, can never get our ear or look into our face, is playing politics, let us all embrace it together, for surely it is golden in the eyes of every man. [Applause.]

ANTI-INJUNCTION.

This bill passed May 14, 1912, with 243 for and 31 against; present, 6; not voting, 113. No Democrat voted no. CANNON, DALZELL, and FORDNEY, the great modern trinity of standpatters of the twentieth century, voted against it, along with the other 28 Republicans who would not yield this one request to American labor. This bill has passed the Democratic branch of Congress; the responsibility is now with you.

This may well be termed the one supreme wish of labor. This is their hope by day, their dream by night. This is the resurrection of their blasted rights. This is the one bill that guarantees the laborer his solemn rights and will lift aloft the standard of his manhood and the improvement of his future. This is the bill that guarantees to labor his constitutional rights. Is this the bill that condemns us? This is the bill we promised in our platform and in our stump speeches.

Is the fulfillment of that pledge to union labor to be our undoing with labor? The American people have never in the past, with their clear heads and grateful hearts, exacted any such toll as that, and it is my belief they will not so exact it in November. The American people are thinking and labor is organizing for themselves to-day, and I thank the God that directs the destinies of men for it. They are not less patriotic than before, and they will not be less true to the men and parties that befriend them. To trust the people in the past has been but to inspire patriotism in their breasts and patriotic sentiments in their heads. To doubt them and to refuse to trust them has in the past and should in the future prove the downfall of the parties and men who practice it upon them. China is to-day a Republic. Let America be not only a Republic in name but in truth as well.

The anti-injunction bill has been the hope and the one wish of the toilers of this country since my boyhood. And all these years with the Republican Party in full control they have first heard them and then refused them. Have scorned them and have turned them away. Now, when the time has at last come when the Democratic Party is to do in office for labor precisely what they said they would do while trying to get office, must we bear the stigma of being called demagogues, hypocrites, slandered, abused, and considered unworthy of confidence and faith?

Lay on your charges, grumblings, croakings, and complaints mountain high, and American labor will remove them and efface them with the closing of each day. Lay on your charges, you can not blind the eyes of a confiding loyal citizenship who read, understand, and know. Is this one of the bills you would have your Republican Senate smother in committee? Is this one of the bills you would have your already seduced and discredited President veto? Would you further heap upon the head of a drowning man the request that he must veto this one demand of the humble toilers of this country? Your advice on former vetoes has been his disaster. Will you still heap ruinous demands upon the head of a warm-hearted President, who smiles more than he thinks; whose heart is more active than his brain; on a President who means well, but executes poorly; on a President who thinks ill toward none, but accepts advice and doctrines that should not be accepted?

You shall not go on the turret of deceit and subterfuge, in the height of political hypocrisy and alienate the friendship of labor when she deserves fair treatment. You shall not instill into the minds of labor an untrue perspective that will deny them the relief they have clamored for so long. You shall not longer, unchallenged, practice gross deception upon them at our expense. You shall not, on top of your long years of false promises and broken faith, turn the face of labor toward their enemies and their back upon their friends. You shall not by deception blast their hopes in this hour of need. The masks shall be torn from your faces and the people shall behold the faces of the representatives of the party which was in full power for 16 years and heeded labor not, the faces of men and a press who would now mislead them and deny them the relief they crave, desire, and which is almost within their grasp. [Applause.]

WOOL BILL.

This bill, reducing the tariff on wool and woolens, passed the House the first time on the 20th day of June, 1911. It was vetoed by the President on the 17th day of August, 1911. The bill passed the second time on April 1, 1912, by a majority of 98. Democrats voting yes, 170; Democrats voting no, none. Republicans voting yes, 20; those voting no, 92. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 20, 1911, 1st sess. 62d Cong.; also see CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Apr. 1, 1912, 2d sess. 62d Cong.)

This is the schedule that President Taft said was indefensible in his famous, yet true, Winona speech. This is the schedule that he said on the stump should be revised; and this is the schedule that he vetoed when in office. The passing of the wool bill was the curbing of the Woolen Trust to help every man, woman, and child in the Republic that is a wearer of wool. This is a bill that would save millions for the people and do injustice to none. This is the bill that everyone advocates when on the stump and only 20 Republicans would vote for when in action.

Is it possible that the party of Lincoln and the party of the sainted McKinley has so dwindled and descended that they will not only break their own promises in person, but they will even try to abort the efforts of those who would keep the everlasting faith?

By your false advice and garbled statements of the facts you forced your President to walk in the valley of political death when you forced him at the special session in 1911 to veto these bills. You forced him to oppose in office precisely what he had stood for on the stump. You crucified his political destiny on an altar of broken promises and blighted faith. You have created conditions that have caused him to go on the stump and defend himself as the criminal stands at the bar of justice charged with fraud, deceit, and crime. You have humiliated this Republic in marshaling your President to do a series of un-American tasks. Pitiable it is, indeed, to see him lose his own State in the primary for a second term. It is but Judas-like for the Republican Party to kiss and then betray. He vetoed the wool bill amidst their plaudits, kisses, and caresses. They in return strike the hand that caressed them and take to their heels for personal safety.

I shall not believe many of the American people will follow your flimsy effort at political fraud, false advice, and deceit. I would much prefer to pin my faith to the ever-wholesome thought that a confiding public will usually grasp the hand that caresses them and will spurn the hand of those that wrong them. The rule is as old as the hills about us; the rule is more wholesome than it is aged. I pin my faith to the fact that the Democratic Party and we of the Democratic faith have during our first year in power kept the everlasting faith and that you have broken it. [Applause.]

CHILDREN'S BUREAU.

This bill creates a bureau to care for the children of tender years and unfortunate circumstances; children who come into the world to find circumstances and conditions more unfortunate than human flesh and blood were intended to endure; a bureau to care for unclaimed infants, infanticide, orphanage, desertions, and dangerous and deleterious occupations that would blight the future of the child who was not of sufficient discretion to understand and know.

Bill passed April 2, 1912. Yeas, 178; nays, 17. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 2d sess. 62d Cong., p. 442.)

Can this be one of the bills that strikes at the foundation stone of the Government in which we live? Can this be the bill that will condemn this Democratic House in years to come? Is this one of the bills that will make a confiding public that sent us here shrug their shoulders in disapproval? Can it be the crime of politics to care for humanity when they can not care for themselves? Is this deceit, politics, and demagogy? Is the caring for the weak in time of infancy, helplessness, and need, to the end that they may grow to manhood and womanhood—is that the crime of politics of which we stand charged and are soon to be convicted? If this be politics, let us pray that the God of the universe quicken the understanding of all mankind until he may play politics, for such politics are as golden as the doctrine of the Christian religion itself. In fact, it is the religion of human sympathy, human justice, and equal rights, which is to-day and ever should be a towering element for good in this Republic. [Applause.]

FREEDOM OF PETITION FOR CIVIL-SERVICE EMPLOYEES.

On the 31st day of January, 1902, Theodore Roosevelt, then President, issued the following order:

FIRST EXECUTIVE ORDER.

All officers and employees of the United States of every description serving in or under any of the executive departments, and whether so serving in or out of Washington, are hereby forbidden, either directly or indirectly, individually or through associations, to solicit an increase of pay or to influence or attempt to influence in their own interest any other legislation whatever, either before Congress or its committees, or in any way save through the heads of the departments in or under which they serve, on penalty of dismissal from the Government service.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, January 31, 1902.

On the 26th day of November, 1909, Theodore Roosevelt, then President for a second term, issued the following order:

SECOND EXECUTIVE ORDER.

The Executive order of January 31, 1902, is hereby amended by adding "or independent Government establishments" after the word "departments" in the third and ninth lines.

As amended the order will read as follows:

"All officers and employees of the United States of every description serving in or under any of the executive departments or independent Government establishments, and whether so serving in or out of Washington, are hereby forbidden, either directly or indirectly, individually or through associations, to solicit an increase of pay or to influence or attempt to influence in their own interest any other legislation whatever, either before Congress or its committees, or in any way, save through the heads of the departments or independent Government establishments in or under which they serve, on penalty of dismissal from the Government service."

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 25, 1906.

The Democratic House, on May 2, 1912, repealed those orders and made the civil-service employees, numbering 391,350, free men under the Constitution; returned to them the rights that the Constitution guaranteed to them and that Theodore Roosevelt had taken from them. Was it wrong for the Democratic House to repeal it? Is this alienating the rights of the people in our employ? Is the repeal of those orders cowardice or demagogery under our Constitution? Is this one of the bills that you condemn? Is this one of the acts for which our unworthiness is forever established? Must we, because we uphold the constitutional rights of men, women, and children in the employ of the Government to be sacred and permit them to speak as free men, to be scandalized and abused? I assert the Democratic House did right in repealing it. I prefer to believe President Roosevelt did wrong when he established it. It is just to our people. The restoration is what the fathers who wrote the Constitution said our people should have. Let us rest our cause here with the people. [Applause.]

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Democratic House passed, on April 9, 1912, the cleanest bill ever passed by any Congress in the last series of years, carrying only $7,467,255. The committee made some reforms in the Indian service, and especially in Indian affairs in Oklahoma, by the elimination of certain employees who were no longer needed or wanted. We found that in the Five Civilized Tribes alone in Oklahoma that the Interior Department expended during the last fiscal year $1,308,023.98, and of that amount only approximately $130,000 ever reached the Indian's pocket in any form. The major portion of this enormous sum was for useless officers, who were an annoyance to the Indian, an expense to the Indian, undesired by the Indian, and a prostitution of the proceeds of a once princely estate. All of this vast sum expended annually, save and except the $275,000 appropriated in the Indian appropriation bill, came out of the Indians' tribal funds. This fact the Indian did not know. These reforms and reductions of employees is no easy task and not pleasant for any party or men to perform. They bring displeasure and disapproval to the men who must be discharged; but who is there who would not, when the facts were known, lend a helping hand to save the money for the Indian who was at the beginning the original occupant and owner, but who has since been transformed into our ward? Who is there here that would not to-day help save for the once aboriginal owner of this entire country who served on the reception committee when our forefathers landed in the Mayflower so long ago? Who is there here who, from cold business judgment, would not help to save the Indian has last remnant of money and land to the end that we may not on the coming morrow be compelled, from Federal appropriations, to support him and reestablish him? Who is there here who does not feel keenly duty bound to protect the remnant ward of a fast vanishing race? Who is there here who does not well know that we converted the Indian from proprietor to a ward, from a landed gentry to a supplicant at our door? Who is there who does not know that the Indian has too long been bartered from pillar to post to make way for the march of princely progress which the God of the universe did not the Indian bountifully endow, hence must conclude did not intend? Who is there here who thinks we did not do right in seeking to save a million dollars annually for the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma alone? Who is there who does not think we should save more for them as the years speed by?

Scorn our action if you will, but the stubborn fact remains, the Indian was here first. He owned it all then. We own it all now. Fine-spun logic may momentarily becloud the issue, but the stubborn facts are like the poor, they are ever with us.

ECONOMY IN RUNNING HOUSE BRANCH OF CONGRESS.

We organized the Democratic House, eliminating the chair warmers and unnecessary officers, to the end that we might save the American people $180,000 annually on the expense of running the House branch of Congress alone.

Can this be one of our pranks of which the reactionary press and the pullback politicians complain? Is this one of the bills that is ill-advised and in full ignorance of the welfare of the people? Is this the step that forfeits all hope of approval by the American people of the efforts of the Democratic House? Is this to be our Titanic of disaster?

I would prefer to believe that the American people will cherish our efforts at economy here and elsewhere. I would prefer to believe that the people will criticize you on the other side of the Chamber for building up such an oligarchy of worthlessness in the employees of the House of Representatives of the United States. I would prefer to believe that this is what we promised out of office, and it is the thing we should do in office. Why should we look the people in the face on the stump and promise them one thing, and when in power in Washington, out of their sight, do another thing? I can not conclude that such a proceeding will longer be acceptable to an intelligent people who read the papers daily from the rural route. I can not conclude that a confiding, patriotic citizenship will turn its back on the men and party who abrogate unnecessary expenses, thereby effecting a saving of the people's assets.

ABROGATION OF CANNONISM AND CZARISM IN THE HOUSE.

The last Democratic platform promised to remove from the American Congress one-man power and return it to its deliberative character, as was intended by our forefathers who wrote our Constitution. I think there must be a few, indeed, who will say in this regard that we have not kept the everlasting faith. Under the old régime the Speaker appointed all of the committees. To-day, how different. They are elected by the House.

Every section of the country gets representation and a square deal. Under this plan there are fewer pets, and no man has all the power. Each Member has some power, but no one has all. There is less insurrection in the House and better results for the people with powers well distributed. The Speaker can not now appoint members of the other party who are out of joint with their party on important committees so that they can and will misrepresent the party of which they are but humble members. Congress is to-day once more a deliberative body. Under one-man rule and Cannonism it was not so. One way is within the Constitution; the other is without its spirit or intent. One is the right way; the other is the wrong way.

We used to have to go hat in hand seeking permission from the Speaker to call up a bill that all the people wanted, independent of the Speaker. To-day how changed! We have a House Calendar, and the business is taken up in the order that it appears on the calendar. On the days specially set apart for suspension of the rules, when the Speaker does determine the order, recognition, and consideration of bills, the Speaker of the House recognizes one Democrat and then one Republican, and back and forth, alternating between the two. One was a right way; the other was a wrong way. I ask which shall you this day choose?

It was urged with fervor by our opponents and worshipers of Cannonism that we could not do business without the gag rules of the Cannon Republican Congress, but the fallacy of such a prophecy, charge, or contention is to-day swept to the winds by the stubborn fact that we have passed more bills in less time and in orderly fashion than any Congress that has ever sat in recent years; the further fact that the House has all of its program of tariff and appropriation bills through, and the Senate, which is smaller and should be a more speedy body, has passed or considered but few of our bills and is to-day delaying the adjournment of Congress.

Is this redemption of the American House to its former status as a deliberate body the thing of which they complain? Is the fact that we have kept our promises and kept the faith in this most sacred regard—is this to be our last leap to political oblivion? I can not believe it. I do not believe it.

The American people are the ones who have answered on this subject by their ballot, and they will answer it again if the Democratic Party, the Republican Party, or any other party seeks to return gag rule and one-man power in the Congress of the United States. It was not the intention of the fathers who wrote the Constitution to let one man run Congress, and the people will not permit it to be so now. It was not the intention of the fathers to let one man trample down the rights and liberties of men either in Congress or out, and the people will not permit that to be done.

The weird prophesies of our Republican opponents on the other side of the aisle as to our early falling out and our early disruption and disintegration seems to have fallen into disuse. So much is this true that we not only get practically all of the Democratic votes on every bill, but usually 25 to 100 per cent of the Republicans. Where is the leadership of that Roderick from Illinois that he can not hold the shattered remnants of that once boastful band? They are in the minority. They have little to fight over. Where is the leadership of that chieftain of old from Danville that he does not marshal his magic wand and whip them into line? Has the time come when the party of Lincoln and the party of the sainted McKinley has become a by-word and a joke? Have they lost all adhesion, leadership, and the power of accomplishment? Will the party full of tradition, both beautiful and unbeautiful, the party of many promises and few deliveries, in the face of this voting record ever persist in attacking everything that is good because it does not emanate from their own party? Will they ever persist in attacking good things when they are so shattered and so torn they can not vote as a unit even on adjournment? Will they still by their utterances and their publications encourage a disorganized, disrupted Senate in applying the smothering process to bills the people want and to bills they promised to pass? Will such a course of destruction and iconoclastic endeavor yield for them personally or for their party the progress and the advancement that has been hoped for by them? Will they continue to neglect the legislation the people need, spending all their time trying to expel certain of their membership who are other than desirable? [Laughter.]

REPUBLICANS CLAIM TO BE PARTY OF PROGRESS.

Some of the Republicans, I think the third-termer Sagamore Hill wing of them, relying on the ignorance of the people in modern political history, are still claiming that they are the party of progress. What a spectacle it is for them to seriously lay such claims. What an absurdity it is for them to so delude themselves in vainly attempting to delude the public. Their recent record for progressive performances consists of the Payne bill. This bill has already been shot so full of holes there is little sport in longer shooting at it. It is, however, one of their recent progressive bills passed while in full control of the Government. Its only genuine claim to progressiveness is that it travels up instead of down. The passage of this bill progressed your party from Uncle Joe and 58 Republican majority in the Sixtieth Congress to CHAMP CLARK and a Democratic majority of 71 in the Sixty-second Congress. [Applause.] Taft signed the Payne bill in office and later said it was indefensible in Winona. This progressive act on his part has brought disaster and defeat as his daily companion. Taft vetoed statehood for Arizona as one of his acts of judicial acumen and his ever-present political sagacity. It is this last element of judgment and farseeing on the part of our President that moved to action the effervescent third-term occupant of Sagamore Hill. Again, we must remember his persistent vetoes of the farmer free-list and cotton bills that the people wanted and that Congress had passed. Again, we must wonder if it does not make his advisers shudder with shame when they think of the pain, the disgrace, and political disaster they heaped upon their President and the country in subjecting him to the attacks that have been made upon him. We can not but pause and wonder if the words of the brilliant Dolliver were not true when he, in substance, said:

Our President is a good man, amiable and lovable in all that the term implies, but surrounded by a group of men who know precisely what they want.

That speaks volumes. It can never be unsaid, for he is no longer here. It can never be disbelieved, for recent disclosures seem to prove it true.

Again, we must observe their progressiveness in that Commonwealth of Illinois. In 1860 she gave us a Lincoln. To-day she gives us LORIMER. In 1896 Ohio gave us a McKinley. To-day she gives us a Taft, who promises the people relief from tariff burdens on the stump and vetoes their bills when in office. A party once clothed with dignity and progress; to-day one of scandal and reaction. They have traveled from Pinchot to Ballinger, from success to defeat, and they are still on the toboggan.

Is this the party of progress that is to-day whistling while they pass their own political cemetery to keep down their well-grounded fears? Is this the party that asserts with complaisance that surely the bills passed by a Democratic House will never pass the Senate, and if passed by the Senate, surely the Republican President will scarcely look at them, but will scorn them, will disapprove them, and veto them? In the light of your scattered votes in this House, in the light of your recent leadership, in the light of your present disgraceful contest for the Presidency, where does this bland complaisance hail from? Who possesses it? Be not too stanch in your doughty prophecies that the President will veto all our bills, for the President has had some very good experience and considerable exercise since he last vetoed our bills on your advice. Be not too stanch in your reliance upon the smothering process of a shattered Senate, most of whom have had to take to their heels on every political principle they ever stood for or advocated in the past.

This Congress should not adjourn or be permitted to adjourn until every bill in the interest of the people has been voted upon, either up or down. The people ought to know who are with them and who against them.

Everybody is with them on the stump, but the people are more interested to-day in knowing who are with them in action. This is the only way to test their fealty. To adjourn and leave these enumerated bills languishing in the Senate committee will not satisfy a patience-stricken Republic. To leave them smothering in the committees until after another election is but to force the people to once more vote for men with whom they are unacquainted. I pin my faith in the future destiny of my party to the fact that the bills we have passed are good bills. I pin my faith to the fact that we promised if given power they would be passed. I pin my faith to the fact that the great bulk of the people of this country want them passed. I pin my faith to the fact that the people know better to-day than they ever knew before what they want. I pin my faith to the further fact that they are going to have these bills passed.

Let the reactionaries and political bosses go on in their weird unsound croakings of abuse. Let them slander the Democratic House in press and on this floor. Let them challenge our good faith, for surely the people are an intelligent people, for surely the people are a just people, and surely the people are our people. I shall not fear them. I do not fear them, but, on the contrary, I shall trust them, and my vote shall be theirs. [Applause.]

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. AINEY] 15 minutes, or so much of that time as he desires.

Mr. AINEY. Mr. Chairman, I am sure that whenever an utterance of Abraham Lincoln is brought to the attention of the American people it excites the deepest interest and receives most thoughtful consideration.

With a keenness of political vision, coupled with a loftiness of purpose and a hungering after the well-being of the people of this land, he was able to discern the rocks and shoals which encompassed the pathway of the ship of state and to clearly chart a course whereby these dangers might be avoided.

When one considers his lack of early opportunity it is almost beyond belief that as a young man scarce 29 years of age he made an address before the Young Men's Lyceum, of which he was a member, in Springfield, Ill., on January 27, 1837, which, with its clearness of statement and grasp of the tendencies of the time, marked him out from among his fellow men.

This address thus early in his career emphasized three fundamental characteristics of his thought and life—his love for the common people, his love for his country, and his deep desire that the one might continue in order that the beneficence of its protection might afford these common people their rights in the fullest measure and give to them the enjoyment of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

Abraham Lincoln, in all the changing circumstances and deepest trials of his varied career, never departed from these conceptions. His confidence in the people never changed; he believed that their opinion was usually right, and when wrong readily corrected by themselves.

It is to be regretted, therefore, that for no other apparent purpose than gaining a cheap political advantage a few garbled extracts from that magnificent address of Abraham Lincoln are printed in the RECORD at the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], whereby it is attempted to make them convey a thought foreign to the life thought of their author and which they do not say when read in the light of omitted portions. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I arise on this occasion in order that I may ask unanimous consent that the entire address may be printed in the RECORD and the martyred President may make his own refutation of this effort to make one address of his life out of harmony with all his other utterances.

I trust the gentlemen of the committee will bear with me while I speak further of this address. It should be considered, of course, in the light of its purposes, its setting, and its announced scope, and its figures of speech interpreted in the light of the day and times. The circumstances which influenced the warnings of this speech were those of which the assassination of Lovejoy, within a few months of its delivery, were the direct result. In this address Mr. Lincoln recounted lynching after lynching which had occurred, and he specifically noted those in Mississippi, St. Louis, and Vicksburg. It was against these mobs and this mob law that he pointed the arrows of his remarks. It was never within his conception to use these words in any other sense than here apparent, and it has been left to a later age to apply such an expression to the great mass of people living under and entitled to the protection of our great Nation.

"What," said he, "has this to do with the perpetuation of our political institutions?" He then points out, in answer, that these lawless ones, despising law and government, would invade the rights of the peaceful people, and they, in turn, finding the Government unable to protect them from this lawlessness, would be forced to take the law in their own hands, and then the great influences which upheld the Government, the popular respect and love of country, would ge gone, for, said he:

> By such things the feelings of the best citizens will become more or less alienated from it, and thus it will be left without friends or with too few, and those few too weak to make their friendship effectual. At such time and under such circumstances men of sufficient talent and ambition will not be wanting to seize the opportunity to strike the blow and overturn that fair fabric.

It is under such circumstances that the "strongest bulwark of any Government may effectually be broken down and destroyed"—I mean the attachment of the people. While such attachments last, "vain will be every effort and fruitless every attempt to subvert our national freedom."

The whole spirit of this address teaches the preservation of the country by preserving for it the love of her citizens, and that such preservation can only be accomplished by insuring to them their equal rights under the law.

The lesson is plain, but not everyone wishes to learn it. The farmer, wage earner, the man in the store, and the clerk in the office are equal in their rights under the Constitution of the land, and any law or conception of government which proposes to destroy that equality is wrong.

The people are sovereign. We preserve the fiction of this in the entitlement of process in many of our Commonwealths.

The Federal and State constitutions recognize this sovereignty by reserving to the people the right to amend it. That sovereignty they have from time to time exercised.

It is because that sovereignty has been invaded and all the people are not equal under the law, and election after election have been held and law after law passed without their ability to successfully protest, that the spirit of unrest is abroad in the land.

In such measure as this original conception of the sovereignty of the people has been lost sight of or ignored have the hearts of a patient people been turned away.

The membership of this House will be held accountable for the performance of their duty in the light of the effect thereof. Are the activities of this House in the interest of all the people, or is it performing its work in the interest of the few to the burdening of the many? Will its efforts win "the attachment of the people" to the Nation, which Lincoln said was the essential to its perpetuity?

I am glad indeed that there stands out boldly and at the forefront of our American political life one who appears to be causing the gentleman on the other side great anxiety, who is the firm advocate of those fundamental principles which Lincoln enunciated.

He comes not in advocacy of mob rule, as the gentleman from New York would intimate, nor as one who would aggrandize himself by wresting the power from the sovereign people, but as one who seeks in their interest the fullest right and liberty under the law to journey along the pathway of life with equal opportunity and freed from the oppressions of special privilege in their pursuit of that happiness which is theirs under the basic principles of our American institutions.

As the champion of the common people Theodore Roosevelt has already accomplished much [applause on the Republican side], and from the list I mention the following:

Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to print the whole of the address of Abraham Lincoln before the Young Men's Lyceum, at Springfield, Ill., January 27, 1837, in full in the RECORD. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The address is as follows:

ADDRESS BEFORE THE YOUNG MEN'S LYCEUM OF SPRINGFIELD, ILL., JAN. 27, 1837.

[In the autumn of 1836, Lincoln, in conjunction with a few prominent young men, formed a young men's lyceum for mutual improvement. His speech delivered before this club is one of the earliest preserved to us. It appeared in the Sangamon Journal for Feb. 3, 1838.]

"As a subject for the remarks of the evening, 'The perpetuation of our political institutions' is selected.

"In the great journal of things happening under the sun, we, the American people, find our account running under date of the nineteenth century of the Christian era. We find ourselves in the peaceful possession of the fairest portion of the earth as regards extent of territory, fertility of soil, and salubrity of climate. We find ourselves under the government of a system of political institutions conducing more essentially to the ends of civil and religious liberty than any of which the history of former times tells us. We, when mounting the stage of existence, found ourselves the legal inheritors of these fundamental blessings. We toiled not in the acquirement or establishment of them; they are a legacy bequeathed us by a once hardy, brave, and patriotic, but now lamented and departed, race of ancestors. Theirs was the task—and nobly they performed it—to possess themselves, and through themselves us, of this goodly land, and to uprear upon its hills and its valleys a political edifice of liberty and equal rights; 'tis ours only to transmit these—the former unprofaned by the foot of an invader, the latter undecayed by the lapse of time and untorn by usurpation—to the latest generation that fate shall permit the world to know. This task of gratitude to our fathers, justice to ourselves, duty to posterity, and love for our species in general, all imperatively require us faithfully to perform.

"How, then, shall we perform it? At what point shall we expect the approach of danger? By what means shall we fortify against it? Shall we expect some trans-Atlantic military giant to step the ocean and crush us at a blow? Never! All the armies of Europe, Asia, and Africa combined, with all the treasure of the earth—our own excepted—in their military chest, with a Bonaparte for a commander, could not by force take a drink from the Ohio or make a track on the Blue Ridge in a trial of a thousand years.

"At what point, then, is the approach of danger to be expected? I answer, If it ever reach us it must spring up amongst us; it can not come from abroad. If destruction be our lot, we must ourselves be its author and finisher. As a Nation of freemen we must live through all time, or die by suicide.

"I hope I am overwary; but if I am not, there is even now something of ill omen amongst us. I mean the increasing disregard for law which pervades the country—the growing disposition to substitute the wild and furious passions in lieu of the sober judgment of courts, and the worse than savage mobs for the executive ministers of justice. This disposition is awfully fearful in any community; and that it now exists in ours, though grating to our feelings to admit, it would be a violation of truth and an insult to our intelligence to deny. Accounts of outrages committed by mobs form the everyday news of the times. They have pervaded the country from New England to Louisiana; they are neither peculiar to the eternal snows of the former nor the burning suns of the latter; they are not the creature of climate, neither are they confined to the slaveholding or the nonslaveholding States. Alike they spring up among the pleasure-hunting masters of southern slaves and the order-loving citizens of the land of steady habits. Whatever then their cause may be, it is common to the whole country.

"It would be tedious as well as useless to recount the horrors of all of them. Those happening in the State of Mississippi and at St. Louis are perhaps the most dangerous in example and revolting to humanity. In the Mississippi case they first commenced by hanging the regular gambler—a set of men certainly not following for a livelihood a very useful or very honest occupation, but one which, so far from being forbidden by the laws, was actually licensed by an act of the legislature passed but a single year before. Next, negroes suspected of conspiring to raise an insurrection were caught up and hanged in all parts of the State; then, white men supposed to be leagued with the negroes; and, finally, strangers from neighboring States, going thither on business, were in many instances subjected to the same fate. Thus went on this process of hanging, from gamblers to negroes, from negroes to white citizens, and from these to strangers, till dead men were seen literally dangling from the boughs of trees upon every roadside and in numbers almost sufficient to rival the native Spanish moss of the country as a drapery of the forest.

"Turn, then, to that horror-striking scene at St. Louis. A single victim only was sacrified there. This story is very short and is perhaps the most highly tragic of anything of its length that has ever been witnessed in real life. A mulatto man by the name of McIntosh was seized in the street, dragged to the suburbs of the city, chained to a tree, and actually burned to death; and all within a single hour from the time he had been a freeman attending to his own business and at peace with the world.

"Such are the effects of mob law, and such are the scenes becoming more and more frequent in this land so lately famed for love of law and order, and the stories of which have even now grown too familiar to attract anything more than an idle remark.

"But you are perhaps ready to ask, 'What has this to do with the perpetuation of our political institutions?' I answer 'It has much to do with it.' Its direct consequences are, comparatively speaking, but a small evil, and much of its danger consists in the proneness of our minds to regard its direct as its only consequences. Abstractly considered, the hanging of the gamblers at Vicksburg was of but little consequence. They constitute a portion of population that is worse than useless in any community; and their death, if no pernicious example be set by it, is never matter of reasonable regret with anyone. If they were annually swept from the stage of existence by the plague or smallpox, honest men would perhaps be much profited by the operation. Similar, too, is the correct reasoning in regard to the burning of the negro at St. Louis. He had forfeited his life by the perpetration of an outrageous murder upon one of the most worthy and respectable citizens of the city, and had he not died as he did, he must have died by the sentence of the law in a very short time afterwards. As to him alone, it was as well the way it was as it could otherwise have been. But the example in either case was fearful. When men take it in their heads to-day to hang gamblers or burn murderers, they should recollect that in the confusion usually attending such transactions they will be as likely to hang or burn some one who is neither a gambler nor a murderer as one who is, and that, acting upon the example they set, the mob of to-morrow may, and probably will, hang or burn some of them by the very same mistake. And not only so; the innocent, those who have ever set their faces against violations of law in every shape, alike with the guilty fall victims to the ravages of mob law; and thus it goes up, step by step, till all the walls erected for the defense of the persons and property of individuals are trodden down and disregarded. But all this, even, is not the full extent of the evil. By such examples, by instances of the perpetrators of such acts going unpunished, the lawless in spirit are encouraged to become lawless in practice; and having been used to no restraint but dread of punishment, they thus become absolutely unrestrained. Having ever regarded government as their deadliest bane, they make a jubilee of the suspension of its operations, and pray for nothing so much as its total annihilation. While, on the other hand, good men, men who love tranquillity, who desire to abide by the laws and enjoy their benefits, who would gladly spill their blood in the defense of their country, seeing their property destroyed, their families insulted, and their lives endangered, their persons injured, and seeing nothing in prospect that forebodes a change for the better, become tired of and disgusted with a government that offers them no protection, and are not much averse to a change in which they imagine they have nothing to lose. Thus, then, by the operation of this mobocratic spirit, which all must admit is now abroad in the land, the strongest bulwark of any government, and particularly of those constituted like ours, may effectually be broken down and destroyed—I mean the attachment of the people. Whenever this effect shall be produced among us, whenever the vicious portion of population shall be permitted to gather in bands of hundreds and thousands, and burn churches, ravage, and rob provision stores, throw printing presses into rivers, shoot editors, and hang and burn obnoxious persons at pleasure and with impunity, depend on it, this Government can not last. By such things the feelings of the best citizens will become more or less alienated from it, and thus it will be left without friends, or too few, and those few to weak to make their friendship effectual. At such a time, and under such circumstances, men of sufficient talent and ambition will not be wanting to seize the opportunity, strike the blow, and overturn that fair fabric which for the last half century has been the fondest hope of the lovers of freedom throughout the world.

"I know the American people are much attached to their Government; I know they would suffer much for its sake; I know they would endure evils long and patiently before they would ever think of exchanging it for another; yet, notwithstanding all this, if the laws be continually despised and disregarded, if their rights to be secure in their persons and property are held by no better tenure than the caprice of a mob, the alienation of their affections from the Government is the natural consequence; and to that, sooner or later, it must come.

"Here, then, is one point at which danger may be expected.

"The question recurs, 'How shall we fortify against it?' The answer is simple. Let every American, every lover of liberty, every well-wisher to his posterity swear by the blood of the Revolution never to violate in the least particular the laws of the country, and never to tolerate their violation by others. As the patriots of '76 did to the support of the Declaration of Independence, so to the support of the Constitution and laws let every American pledge his life, his property, and his sacred honor—let every man remember that to violate the law is to trample on the blood of his father, and to tear the charter of his own and his children's liberty. Let reverence for the laws be breathed by every American mother to the lisping babe that prattles on her lap; let it be taught in schools, in seminaries, and in colleges; let it be written in primers, spelling books, and in almanacs; let it be preached from the pulpit, proclaimed in legislative halls, and enforced in courts of justice. And, in short, let it become the political religion of the Nation; and let the old and the young, the rich and the poor, the grave and the gay, of all sexes and tongues and colors and conditions, sacrifice unceasingly upon its altars.

"While ever a state of feeling such as this shall universally or even very generally prevail throughout the Nation, vain will be every effort and fruitless every attempt to subvert our national freedom.

"When I so pressingly urge a strict observance of all the laws, let me not be understood as saying there are no bad laws, or that grievances may not arise for the redress of which no legal provisions have been made. I mean to say no such thing. But I do mean to say that although bad laws, if they exist, should be repealed as soon as possible, still, while they continue in force, for the sake of example they should be religiously observed. So also in unprovided cases. If such arise, let proper legal provisions be made for them with the least possible delay, but till then let them, if not too intolerable, be borne with.

"There is no grievance that is a fit object of redress by mob law. In any case that may arise, as, for instance, the promulgation of abolitionism, one of two positions is necessarily true—that is, the thing is right within itself, and therefore deserves the protection of all law and all good citizens, or it is wrong, and therefore proper to be prohibited by legal enactments; and in neither case is the interposition of mob law either necessary, justifiable, or excusable.

"But it may be asked, 'Why suppose danger to our political institutions? Have we not preserved them for more than 50 years? And why may we not for 50 times as long?'

"We hope there is no sufficient reason. We hope all danger may be overcome, but to conclude that no danger may ever arise would itself be extremely dangerous. There are now, and will hereafter be, many causes, dangerous in their tendency, which have not existed heretofore, and which are not too insignificant to merit attention. That our Government should have been maintained in its original form from its establishment until now is not much to be wondered at. It had many props to support it through that period which now are decayed and crumbled away. Through that period it was felt by all to be an undecided experiment; now it is understood to be a successful one. Then, all that sought celebrity and fame and distinction expected to find them in the success of that experiment. Their all was staked upon it; their destiny was inseparably linked with it. Their ambition aspired to display before an admiring world a practical demonstration of the truth of a proposition which had hitherto been considered at best no better than problematical, namely, the capability of a people to govern themselves. If they succeeded, they were to be immortalized; their names were to be transferred to counties, and cities, and rivers, and mountains, and to be revered and sung, toasted through all time. If they failed, they were to be called knaves and fools and fanatics for a fleeting hour, then to sink and be forgotten. They succeeded. The experiment is successful, and thousands have won their deathless names in making it so. But the game is caught, and I believe it is true that with the catching end the pleasures of the chase. This field of glory is harvested and the crop is already appropriated. But new reapers will arise, and they, too, will seek a field. It is to deny what the history of the world tells us is true to suppose that men of ambition and talents will not continue to spring up amongst us. And when they do they will as naturally seek the gratification of their ruling passion as others have done before them. The question then is, Can that gratification be found in supporting and maintaining an edifice that has been erected by others? Most certainly it can not. Many great and good men, sufficiently qualified for any task they should undertake, may ever be found whose ambition would aspire to nothing beyond a seat in Congress, a gubernatorial or a presidential chair, but such belong not to the family of the lion or the tribe of the eagle. What! think you these places would satisfy an Alexander, a Cæsar, or a Napoleon? Never! Towering genius disdains a beaten path. It seeks regions hitherto unexplored. It sees no distinction in adding story to story upon the monuments of fame erected to the memory of others. It denies that it is glory enough to serve under any chief. It scorns to tread in the footsteps of any predecessor, however illustrious. It thirsts and burns for distinction; and, if possible, it will have it, whether at the expense of emancipating slaves or enslaving freemen. Is it unreasonable, then, to expect that some man possessed of the loftiest genius, coupled with ambition sufficient to push it to its utmost stretch, will at some time spring up among us? And when such an one does, it will require the people to be united with each other, attached to the Government and laws, and generally intelligent to successfully frustrate his designs.

"Distinction will be his paramount object, and although he would as willingly, perhaps more so, acquire it by doing good as harm, yet, that opportunity being past and nothing left to be done in the way of building up, he would set boldly to the task of pulling down.

"Here, then, is a probable case, highly dangerous, and such an one as could not have well existed heretofore.

"Another reason which once was but which to the same extent is now no more has done much in maintaining our institutions thus far. I mean the powerful influence which the interesting scenes of the Revolution had upon the passions of the people as distinguished from their judgment. By this influence the jealousy, envy, and avarice incident to our nature and so common to a state of peace, prosperity, and conscious strength were for the time in a great measure smothered and rendered inactive, while the deep-rooted principles of hate and the powerful motive of revenge, instead of being turned against each other, were directed exclusively against the British Nation. And thus, from the force of circumstances, the basest principles of our nature were either made to lie dormant or to become the active agents in the advancement of the noblest of causes—that of establishing and maintaining civil and religious liberty.

"But this state of feeling must fade, is fading, had faded, with the circumstances that produced it.

"I do not mean to say that the scenes of the Revolution are now or ever will be entirely forgotten, but that, like everything else, they must fade upon the memory of the world and grow more and more dim by the lapse of time. In history, we hope, they will be read of and recounted so long as the Bible shall be read; but even granting that they will, their influence can not be what it heretofore has been. Even then they can not be so universally known nor so vividly felt as they were by the generation just gone to rest. At the close of that struggle nearly every adult male had been a participator in some of its scenes. The consequence was that of those scenes, in the form of a husband, a father, a son, or a brother, a living history was to be found in every family—a history bearing the indubitable testimonies of its own authenticity in the limbs mangled, in the scars of wounds received, in the midst of the very scenes related—a history, too, that could be read and understood alike by all, the wise and the ignorant, the learned and the unlearned. But those histories are gone. They can be read no more forever. They were a fortress of strength, but what invading foeman could never do the silent artillery of time has done—the leveling of its walls. They are gone. They were a forest of giant oaks, but the all-resistless hurricane has swept over them and left only here and there a lonely trunk, despoiled of its verdure, shorn of its foliage, unshading and unshaded, to murmur in a few more gentle breezes and to combat with its mutilated limbs a few more ruder storms, then to sink and be no more.

"They were pillars of the temple of liberty; and now that they have crumbled away that temple must fall unless we, their descendants, supply their places with other pillars, hewn from the solid quarry of sober reason. Passion has helped us, but can do so no more. It will in future be our enemy. Reason—cold, calculating, unimpassioned reason—must furnish all the materials for our future support and defense. Let those materials be molded into general intelligence, sound morality, and, in particular, a reverence for the Constitution and laws; and that we improved to the last, that we remained free to the last, that we revered his name to the last, that during his long sleep we permitted no hostile foot to pass over or desecrate his resting place, shall be that which to learn the last trump shall awaken our Washington.

"Upon these let the proud fabric of freedom rest, as the rock of its basis; and as truly as has been said of the only greater institution, 'the gates of hell shall not prevail against it.'"

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, do I understand that the other side has consumed all of their time?

The CHAIRMAN. They have consumed all of their time.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask the indulgence of the House for a moment or two until the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] returns. He has gone to get some papers. When he returns I shall give him the balance of the time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand that the gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to wait until the gentleman comes in?

Mr. PRINCE. Yes.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I will have no objection, providing the time continues to run.

Mr. PRINCE. But he is only getting some papers.

Mr. HAY. I understand; but other business is pressing.

Mr. PRINCE. Then, Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with considerable interest to the remarkable speech made by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], wherein he pointed with pride and viewed with alarm the action of the respective political parties in Congress, but I failed to hear him say one word in support of the vote of his side of the House on the one important measure passed at the special session of Congress, the measure that struck down that small degree of protection which has been given to the farmers of the United States. That protection was struck down by the bill known as the Canadian reciprocity act, and I hold in my hand the record of the vote of the House upon that act. It was passed by 268 votes. I have been checking the votes that were cast against it. I find that every Democrat who voted at all upon that bill voted for it, with the following 10 excepions:

Messrs. BATHRICK, CLAYPOOL, DOUGHTON, FOWLER, GUDGER, HAMMOND, PUJO, RUCKER of Colorado, WEBB, and WHITACRE.

There were 268 who voted in favor of it. Sixty-six of those were cast by Republicans. The rest, or 202, were cast by Democrats. A majority of the Republicans of this House—79—voted against the bill. The bill was a Democratic measure, and was passed by the Democrats in this House, 202 Democrats voting for it and only 10 Democrats voting against it. It was a measure adopted by a Democratic caucus, and the Democratic Party can not escape the responsibilities for the measure. You on that side can not escape the criticism that will come to you from the farming districts of the country, a criticism that should come down upon you in no uncertain manner. You can not escape your responsibility by pointing to the fact that the Chief Executive, who was a Republican, was in favor of it. The fact remains that this House was responsible for the legislation it passed, and practically every Democrat in it, except 10, voted for the measure.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Who called the Congress together to consider it?

Mr. GOOD. Oh, you can not escape your vote on that proposition.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I voted in favor of it, and I will vote that way again.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to print with my remarks the vote by which the Canadian reciprocity act passed Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, the vote is already printed in the RECORD, and I object.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Would not the gentleman explain how the bill passed the Senate?

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute more to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD].

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman to analyze the vote in the Senate.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I can not yield. I have only a minute. I do not wonder that objection should come from that side of the House to printing their votes on the question of reciprocity. I know you on that side are ashamed of it, and the constituencies that sent you here are ashamed of it; and when the voters go to the polls next November they will repudiate your action upon that great measure. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 12 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON].

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I have here a petition which I desire to read to the House. I am standing now in the back part of the Hall, but if the petition were stretched out it would more than reach to the front part of the Hall and back again. It is as follows:

REPEAL RECIPROCITY.

Whereas at the Sixty-second session of Congress, upon the recommendation of President Taft, there was passed a bill putting into effect a so-called reciprocity pact with Canada, whereby all the products of American farms, especially of northwestern farms, were to be put into unprotected competition with products from the Canadian farms, by free trade upon all Canadian grains and other farm products;

Whereas said reciprocity pact did not make a proportionate reduction on machinery, nor on any other products of Canadian and American manufactories, or other Canadian and American industries, whereby Americans, as a whole, would be given an equivalent advantage in the Canadian markets;

Whereas since American farmers are obliged to buy their supplies in a tariff-protected market at American market rates, therefore American farmers are justly entitled to a fair protection of the American market for their own farm products;

Whereas the difference between the export price on grain (which is the Canadian price, and which would under reciprocity become the American price also) and the yearly average Minneapolis and Duluth price amounts to the farmers of Minnesota and the Dakotas alone to over $50,000,000 a year, or about a million dollars a week, and a similar difference applies more or less to other States in proportion to their staple crops to be competed against by Canada;

Whereas the law having been passed by our Congress and signed by President Taft, leaves the situation entirely in the hands of Canada to pass a similar law now or at any time without further action upon the part of the United States, whereby all the evils of this so-called reciprocity, with the calamitous loss to American farmers, would become an actuality unless Congress first repeals its passage of the law;

Whereas the recent elections in Canada gave the party opposed to reciprocity only a small majority, which is in danger of being reversed at any time, even in political exigencies in Parliament, without another popular election: Therefore

We, the farmers of the Northwest, feeling that many Members of the Sixty-second Congress voted for the passage of the reciprocity bill without a full realization of the injury which the schedules would inflict upon American farming and other interests, do now petition and urge upon the United States Congress to repeal the law before Canada puts it into effect.

Now, I want to file this or leave it in the basket to go to the proper committee. As will be observed, it is a genuine document, containing 31,000 signatures of farmers who farm and who know what they are talking about. I will say that when the act was passed——

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Certainly.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I want to ask unanimous consent to be allowed to sign this petition.

Mr. STEENERSON. Well, that is all right. I will say nearly every industry, whether it be the industry of manufacturing or—manufacturing prefers stability and certainty in the law affecting it. It is not right to leave the farmers in suspense as to the tariff on their products.

Mr. GOOD. Is the gentleman willing to pass the petition over on that side of the House and permit some of those who voted for reciprocity to now sign the petition?

Mr. STEENERSON. Certainly, and I believe, as a matter of party advantage, that all the gentlemen on the other side will be willing to vote for the repeal of reciprocity, because they now see that without the repeal of that law they are placing the farmers at a disadvantage.

Mr. LOBECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Certainly.

Mr. LOBECK. Was this petition signed before Roosevelt changed his mind in regard to reciprocity?

Mr. FARR. He did not change his mind.

Mr. LOBECK. Yes; he said at first he was in favor of it and since then he is down on it.

Mr. STEENERSON. With respect to that I am very proud of Roosevelt having changed his mind. I am sorry the Democrats have not changed their minds, and I hope they will, and if they follow the illusfrious example of the sage of Oyster Bay I think they will possibly come in and join with us and repeal the reciprocity law.

Mr. GUDGER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. GUDGER. I would like to ask the gentleman if he would not be willing to pass this petition to President Taft and have him sign it before passing it to the Democratic side of the House. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. STEENERSON. I think it would be a useless task to present it to President Taft, and if the Democrats are so foolish as to follow his lead I think they deserve the defeat that will certainly be dealt them at the next election. [Applause on the Republican side.] The only way that I can possibly see of their success will be for them to accept the inevitable and recognize, as they said in the debate, that to pass reciprocity alone without any other tariff legislation would be unfair to the farmers. Therefore, with the present outlook in regard to tariff legislation and the likelihood that no tariff bill will be enacted during the balance of the session, they ought to repeal that law, which alone was justified on the theory that the farmers were to have compensation in other tariff legislation for their loss by Canadian reciprocity. That was the condition precedent which the Democrats laid down when they passed the reciprocity bill.

Mr. GUDGER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. GUDGER. I would like to ask the gentleman, predicting the success of his party, if he predicts that success upon the ground that Taft is to be nominated for President at Chicago?

Mr. STEENERSON. I predict it upon the success of the usual wise deliberations of the Republican national convention. [Applause on the Republican side.] They know what to do and they will select the proper man.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. If the gentleman will yield to me, I would like to ask him if he remembers this letter?

Mr. STEENERSON. Did I write it?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. No; the gentleman did not write it:

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: It seems to me that what you propose to do with Canada is admirable from every standpoint. I firmly believe in free trade with Canada for both economic and political reasons.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. STEENERSON. That is not free trade with Canada. I think that the writer of that letter was laboring under a misapprehension. Free trade with Canada was not the proposition of the Canadian agreement. It was free trade for the farmer, but it was protective duties on manufactures.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Was he laboring under a misapprehension then or now?

Mr. STEENERSON. He is certainly right now, and the sooner the gentlemen on the other side come over to that view the better for their political future.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. BOEHNE. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, we have had an hour and 50 minutes this morning of the time of this House spent in filling up the RECORD with political buncombe. I think it is about time that we were attending to business, the business of the people of this country. We are not fooling the people——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman suspend until the Chair can put the motion?

Mr. BOEHNE. And therefore I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard. The question is on the motion that the committee rise and report the bill and amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HENSLEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 24450, the Military Academy appropriation bill, and reported it back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HAY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PRESIDENTIAL TERM, ETC.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged resolution from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] rise?

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Whom does the Speaker recognize?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas offers a privileged resolution. The Chair will state that this is the fifth Friday. If the House desires to take up bills on the Private Calendar in preference to the rule offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY], it will vote the motion of the gentleman from Texas down.

The Clerk will report the resolution of the gentleman from Texas.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 475.

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution House joint resolution 204 be taken up for consideration, and at the expiration of four hours a vote be taken on the resolution and all pending amendments thereto.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 14, noes 31.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I make the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. BOWMAN. For information. I would like to have the resolution read.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is not debatable. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] raises the point that there is no quorum present. There is only one thing to do. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, and the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BOWMAN] asks unanimous consent to have the resolution again reported. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution was again read.

The SPEAKER. The question to be voted on is the previous question on that resolution.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, to what does the resolution refer?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk has just read it.

Mr. SIMS. He read it by number, and we can not tell what the resolution is.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. This is on the previous question.

Mr. SIMS. What do you want to get up? We do not know what we are voting for.

The SPEAKER. You are voting for the previous question on this resolution, and the resolution is to give four hours of general debate to another resolution to amend the Constitution.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I am perfectly willing to state that it is to amend the Constitution.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is not debatable. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 69, nays 143, answered "present" 9, not voting 171, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. LANGLEY, and he answered "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, is a quorum present?

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. Further proceedings under the call will be dispensed with, and the Doorkeeper will unlock the doors.

Mr. BARTLETT. Is the motion lost?

The SPEAKER. The motion is lost.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] asks unanimous consent to make a statement. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HENRY. Mr. Speaker, I would not care to have pressed this resolution to-day, and would not have presented it to-day in the first place had I not been informed and had I not understood that the Committee on Claims declined this morning to go on if they could not precede the Committee on Military Affairs. Therefore I withdraw the resolution for the present.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is withdrawn.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. NYE, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

CLAIMS.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

The motion of Mr. POU was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar, with Mr. HAMLIN in the chair.

CLAIMS FOR PERSONAL INJURY AND DAMAGE TO PRIVATE PROPERTY.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar, further consideration of the bill (H. R. 23451) to pay to certain employees of the Government for injuries received while in the discharge of their duties, and other claims for damages to and loss of private property.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RODDENBERY. When this bill was under consideration on a previous day, what was the parliamentary status at the time the committee rose? Was not the committee dividing on a vote at the time?

The CHAIRMAN. The committee was dividing, and the point of no quorum was raised. The vote was being taken on an amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY].

Mr. RODDENBERY. Does not the vote now recur on that amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The vote undoubtedly now recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. FOSTER. May we have the amendment read?

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will report the amendment that was pending at that time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 15, strike out the words "one thousand."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment just reported by the Clerk.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, the committee, on page 3, in line 15, inserted the sum of $1,500 to pay Charles T. Hanson for loss of right foot while in the employ of the War Department in the Quartermaster's Department.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending.

Mr. AUSTIN. I understand there is an amendment pending. I am going to reach that in a moment. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY] moves to strike out "1,000," so that this paragraph would read:

To pay $500 to Charles T. Hanson for the loss of his right foot while in the employ of the War Department in the Quartermaster's Department at Boston, Mass.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to oppose this amendment submitted by the gentleman from Georgia, and I hope this committee will vote it down.

Mr. RODDENBERY. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RODDENBERY. The point of order is that all debate had been exhausted, that a vote had been ordered, that a rising vote had been taken, and that the gentleman from Tennessee is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order made by the gentleman from Georgia is well taken. Debate had been exhausted on that amendment. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia, which has been reported by the Clerk.

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. RODDENBERY was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

On May 29, 1912:

H. R. 17029. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to convert the regimental Army post at Fort Oglethorpe into a brigade post;

H. R. 14083. An act to create a new division of the southern judicial district of Texas, and to provide for terms of court at Corpus Christi, Tex., and for a clerk for said court, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 22999. An act providing for the construction and maintenance by the city of St. Louis, Mo., of an intake tower in the Mississippi River at St. Louis, Mo.

On May 30, 1912:

H. J. Res. 319. Joint resolution making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for contingent expenses of the Senate and House of Representatives for the fiscal year 1912, and for other purposes.

CLAIMS FOR PERSONAL INJURY AND DAMAGE TO PRIVATE PROPERTY.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay $1,000 to D. M. Rowland, father of Robert Blain Rowland, late a seaman of the United States Navy, who was killed in the discharge of his duty in the Manila Harbor during target practice.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I think this amount is wholly inadequate. I think the committee ought to increase it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman offer an amendment?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; I move to strike out "one thousand" and insert "five thousand."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 3, line 22, by striking out the words "one thousand" and inserting the words "five thousand" in lieu thereof.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, this committee will do itself no credit by voting an appropriation of only $1,000 to the dependent parents of an American seaman who, through no fault of his own, lost his life in the discharge of his duty.

In the case of Samuel A. Armour, where a lighthouse inspector lost his life in the discharge of his duty, this committee placed the amount of damage at $3,000. That sum of money was voted to his widow. Now in this particular case the proposition is to vote the parents of this seaman only $1,000. I can not understand, Mr. Chairman, how Members of this House can sit here and go on record for voting such an insignificant sum for the loss of a human life.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The gentleman does not hold that the father of a deceased sailor is entitled to as much compensation as the widow and children of the deceased sailor would be entitled to?

Mr. AUSTIN. No; but I do want to say that it is the duty of this committee to vote down these insignificant sums brought in here under the provisions of a law enacted by the Sixtieth Congress fixing a sum of money in payment of the loss of a limb or life at such a sum that it is a dishonor to us; and I repudiate it, and I hope there is honor and justice enough in this House to change these sums.

Mr. CULLOP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. CULLOP. I would like to ask the gentleman how old this young man was when he lost his life.

Mr. AUSTIN. He must have been over 18 years of age, because he was a regularly enlisted seaman. The statement was made on the floor of this House when the bill was recently under consideration by the gentleman who represents that district in Iowa [Mr. PEPPER]. He can give you information in regard to what character of young man he was, his parentage, and everything connected with his history.

Mr. CULLOP. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa if he was over 21 years of age.

Mr. PEPPER. He was past 19.

Mr. CULLOP. What pay was he getting?

Mr. PEPPER. The regular seaman's pay, I think; $15 a month.

Mr. CULLOP. Under the law his parents would be entitled to two years' pay if they had sued to recover in the courts. In other words, if they had sued in the courts to recover what the young man earned and contributed to the support of his father and mother, if he had a mother living, the measure of damages would be what he earned in two years less what it took to support him. That would be the measure of recovery under the law of the land if it was such a case in which a suit would lie. Now, why should Congress vote a larger sum than he would get if he had resorted to the civil courts to recover? What reason is there for it? These matters should be adjusted on a reasonable and sound basis.

Mr. AUSTIN. Let me ask the gentleman from Indiana, does that justify the gentleman from Indiana voting to this man's parents only $1,000 because a previous Congress passed an unjust general liability act?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks to have his time extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CULLOP. No; Congress did not pass that law, it is the law of the land, the law of every civilized country. Such is the measure of damages. It is the rule laid down for the Government of you and of every other man in the country in the civilized walks of life. If he had resorted to the courts of law to recover damages that would have been the measure of his damages. Now, why should a special law be made by Congress granting a larger sum than the miner or the railroad man or any other citizen of the Republic would have if he resorted to the courts? I can not understand the gentleman's method of reasoning on a proposition of that kind. Why should not he be bound by the same rule of law that every other citizen in the Republic is bound by?

Mr. AUSTIN. Now, if the gentleman from Indiana is through with his question I will answer it. The committee in passing on this identical bill increased the amount over that fixed in the Government general-liability law, in the case of the lighthouse inspector, Mr. Armour, and increased it to $3,000, in violation of the law quoted by the gentleman from Indiana. If it was right and just in this committee to ignore the Government liability law in that case, why not equalize and bring up all the other amounts in this bill?

Mr. CULLOP. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. CULLOP. That was not a parallel case.

Mr. AUSTIN. A parallel nothing! The lighthouse case fell under the General Government liability law like every case named in this bill. The gentleman complains of my seeking to override the Government liability act in this particular case when I offer an amendment, but the law was overridden in the lighthouse keeper's case.

Mr. CULLOP. In that case if the widow had resorted to the courts she had a right to recover what her husband would have earned and contributed to her support during the expectancy of his life.

Mr. AUSTIN. Let me ask the gentleman: Did he vote for the amount given the widow of the lighthouse inspector, $3,000? Did he?

Mr. CULLOP. Because that stood on a different line of liability.

Mr. AUSTIN. Did the gentleman vote to increase it?

Mr. CULLOP. That stood upon a different basis.

Mr. AUSTIN. Oh; because you wanted an excuse and an opportunity to get round the Government general liability law in that particular case; but in this you want to hold this seaman's parents down to a literal enforcement of the provisions of that law.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Are there not two theories involved in this question? One is the loss to the parent of the services of the minor. If he were a single man and the administrator had brought suit, would not the amount and the liability have been regulated by the laws of the State? Usually the amount is $10,000.

Mr. CULLOP. Oh, no.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. Is it not a fact that in the States generally the estate of minors goes to the father?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I want to state to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] that the report itself shows in this particular case that it was the fault of the Government and not the fault of the sailor. The Supreme Court of the District of Columbia on Saturday affirmed the decision of the lower court in a case against the Chesapeake Beach Hotel Co., where the amount fixed by the jury was $10,000 for the loss of a life, and only a week ago the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia rendered a decision against the Washington Terminal Co. fixing damages at $7,500 in favor of a brakeman who lost a limb, while here we are voting $1,000 for the loss of a life!

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has again expired.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to criticize in any way the members of the committee who reported this bill. I consider that the members of the Committee on Claims have, perhaps, the hardest work of any committee work in this House, and yet I am very strongly of the opinion that in this particular case they have overlooked, possibly, the real justice underlying this claim. I would like to see the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee adopted, because I believe this case offers an unusual spectacle, so far as the real liability of this Government is concerned. I want to call the attention of the committee to some passages in the report found on pages 34 and 35. A board or court of inquiry was appointed to investigate the facts with reference to the death of this young man, and the board reported as follows:

> The board believes that the responsibility of the death of the deceased is primarily due to the faulty system of target practice followed on board the U. S. S. Cincinnati.

Thus absolutely fixing the responsibility, not upon any man alone in this case, but upon the system followed by the Government of the United States upon one of its ships.

Again:

> The court is also of the opinion that further proceedings are unnecessary, but that Commander J. M. Robinson, United States Navy, commanding U. S. S. Cincinnati, and Lieut. J. F. Hines, United States Navy, the ordnance officer of that vessel, should be admonished for their neglect to take proper precautions while conducting Morris tube gun practice in a frequented harbor.

Again:

> The commander in chief considers, however, that to admonish two officers, whose gross carelessness, as well as neglect of duty and disobedience of the regulations, resulted in the death of one of the best young men of the fleet, is not treating the matter with the serious importance it deserves, and private letters of reprimand will be sent to Commander J. M. Robinson, United States Navy, and Lieut. J. F. Hines, United States Navy.

Thus was absolutely fixed the personal responsibility upon officers of the U. S. S. Cincinnati.

This young man was killed. Nobody claims that there was any fault or negligence on his part. He was absolutely murdered in cold blood; not by accident, not by some explosion that nobody is responsible for, not because something happened that nobody could anticipate, but by the direct and criminal neglect of a man who is a commander and represents this Government upon that ship.

As a direct result of the faulty system employed by the Government of the United States, this young man was murdered, and now the Government proposes to say to the parents, in view of the fact that their son was murdered, that it will give them $1,000, and for them to be satisfied.

I say in all seriousness that there is something more involved here than mere compensation for the loss of the life of this splendid young man. It seems to me this Government would be stultifying itself to place the value of $1,000 upon a young man's life which was lost in this way. I hope the amendment will be agreed to. I think it is fair and just, and ought to be adopted. Five thousand dollars is small enough. Let us put our stamp of disapproval and condemnation forever on the methods heretofore followed by our Government in paying its just obligations.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I desire to remind the committee that the chief difficulty that bills of this character have heretofore encountered in previous Congresses has been to get anything whatever allowed, and the difficulty which the Committee on Claims will encounter as we proceed in this case will be to get the bill through with moderate and even very small sums allotted to the several parties making these claims. As has been stated heretofore, with the exception of the claims for the Ford Theater disaster, in all the history of the previous Congresses, with thousands of such claims to be considered, only two or three for personal injuries have ever been allowed. Those are the only instances. I went through them carefully myself. If gentlemen will inquire of the members of the Committee on Claims with reference to the basis on which these sums were awarded, they will find in each instance that there was a definite principle and a definite reason for fixing the sum named.

If the committee will turn to page 36 of the report on the claim under consideration a moment, under the communication from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, Beekman Winthrop, they will see that there is a statement contained in it that the decedent did not remit to his parents a sum in excess of $15 per month. It will follow, therefore, if the parents had a right to sue in a court of law, as they have not, and recover anything from the Government, as they have not, this sum which is awarded here, taking into consideration that it is to be paid now in cash, is really as much as those dependent parents could recover in a court.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. With pleasure.

Mr. BARTLETT. Suppose this was not the United States Government as an employer, but an employer who, under any law, was liable to pay for the damage resulting, could the parents recover any more than the value of the life of the young man to them, which would be measured by what he could earn for them from the time he was a minor until he became of age?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I was trying to explain—while it is not definitely stated in the report, as I recall the fact, this young man was over 21, and so, really, there would have been no right to recover; but he was paying this sum to his parents.

Mr. BARTLETT. I understood he was 19 years old.

Mr. PEPPER. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. PEPPER. I was much interested in the question of the gentleman from Georgia. Is it the statement of the gentleman from Iowa that there is no liability in an ordinary accident if the young man is killed when he is over 21; that there is no liability to the parents whatever? Is that the position of the gentleman?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; not necessarily.

Mr. PEPPER. To his dependent parents?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The dependent parents might possibly recover.

Mr. BARTLETT. The right to recover for a homicide does not exist in common law at all.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It will be observed this young man, according to the Secretary, sent home not exceeding $15 a month, and in view of that fact this amount is put in——

Mr. PEPPER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. PEPPER. Has that rule been followed all the way through in all the cases?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. So far as I know, this is a solitary case of that kind we have in the whole bill.

Mr. PEPPER. But is that the policy?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will withdraw that statement; there is another, either in this bill or another.

Mr. PEPPER. There is hardly a case in here but what that rule, if it was adopted, would go far below what the amounts are. Is not that true?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. You could not apply that rule in any way except where the relation of a child to dependent parents exists. I believe there is another case in this bill; if not, it is in another bill.

Mr. AUSTIN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. With pleasure.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is it not a fact that the Senate on yesterday, in the case of Erskine R. K. Hayes, voted him $5,000 for an injury received in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, Treasury Department?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It is a fact, and at the time other Members in the Senate stated it was entirely a new precedent and contrary to their rules. It awarded to claimant, who had been a helpless cripple for years, requiring constant attendance, and suffering from a constant discharge, all of which was caused by the injury received.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. SLAYDEN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 21478. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

CLAIMS FOR PERSONAL INJURY AND DAMAGE TO PRIVATE PROPERTY.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina moves that all debate on this paragraph be now closed.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. PEPPER) there were—ayes 16, noes 28.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, line 22, page 3, by striking out the word "one" and inserting the word "three."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 3, line 22, by striking out the word "one" and inserting the word "three."

Mr. LANGLEY. That is the same case?

Mr. PEPPER. It is the same case. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me everything that has been said in reference to the rule governing this committee——

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much to interrupt my friend, but I made the motion that all debate upon the paragraph and amendments be now closed.

Mr. PEPPER. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to inquire from the gentleman from North Carolina if his motion included the paragraph and all amendments thereto?

Mr. POU. The paragraph and all amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand the gentleman to put it that way.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Chairman, I am perfectly willing, in view of the desire of the chairman of the committee to get this bill through, even though he did not put it that way, to waive the right of debate, and take a vote upon this question.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. PEPPER) there were—ayes 4, noes 28.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on page 3, line 22, by striking out the word "one" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "two."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PEPPER] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 3, line 22, by striking out the word "one" and inserting the word "two."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Chairman, I demand a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 18, noes 31.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on page 3, line 22, by striking out the words "one thousand" and inserting the words "one thousand five hundred."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 3, line 22, by striking out the words "one thousand" and inserting the words "one thousand five hundred" in lieu thereof.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. PEPPER. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 21, noes 26.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay $1,500 to Severin Hartman for loss of his left arm while in the discharge of his duty at Rock Island Arsenal, Ill.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, on page 4, line 1, I move to strike out the words "one thousand five hundred" and insert in lieu thereof the words "two thousand."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 4, line 1, by striking out the words "one thousand five hundred" and inserting the words "two thousand."

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to take up the time of this committee with useless discussion. I think it will be conceded by my colleagues that I have always been conservative in my vote and action on measures here in this House. When this bill was before the Committee on Claims, of which I am a member, I asked that the amount be made $3,000, as I recollect. I reserved then my right to try to have this amount increased, Mr. Chairman, on the floor of the House.

This young man was employed in an arsenal of the United States doing a certain piece of work. There was a revolving piece of machinery which carried in it certain knives for certain purposes. While this young man was engaged at his specific labor, one of these knives in this revolving machine became loose and was detached and thrown by the force of the revolution of the wheel to which it was attached a distance of 86 feet away. It struck this young man and severed one of his arms. He now is a young man with but one arm, and it is proposed by this bill to pay him for that injury the sum of $1,500. It is perfectly evident, Mr. Chairman, that the young man was not negligent upon his part in any way whatever, but steadfast at his post of duty, performing it as a faithful servant, and while so doing, by the negligence of his master, the United States, he lost one of his arms. And I say, Mr. Chairman, that he ought to have a sum whereby he would be able to support himself in some kind of decency. We all know that $2,000 is not enough, and I almost feel like condemning myself for offering an amendment for only that amount. But inasmuch as it has been shown by the temper of this committee that they are not willing to allow large sums, I have sought by this amendment to give to this young man a small additional compensation to what this bill carries.

Mr. GUDGER. I want to ask the gentleman a question. This accident occurred in 1905?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes.

Mr. GUDGER. I want to ask if this man is not now in the employment of the Government at the same wages that he received at the time of the accident, and that he is to be retained by the Government in his position just as long as he lives?

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, that is no argument whatever to my contention. I carry but one hand with me, and a man who has never lost a limb does not know the humiliation and the disadvantage with which a man goes through life maimed and decrepit by virtue of such a dismemberment.

Mr. GUDGER. Will the gentleman yield? You stated a while ago that this man ought to have some compensation with which to support his family?

Mr. FOWLER. You are mistaken. I did not. If the gentleman so understood me he misunderstood what I said.

Mr. GUDGER. Well, is it not a fact that since 1905, at the time of this accident, this man has been retained by the Government in his present position, at the wages at which he was earning at the time of his accident, and is to be retained by the Government during his lifetime?

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I repeat that what the gentleman has propounded is no argument in this case whatever.

Mr. GUDGER. But I am asking you if it is a fact.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] has expired.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that my time be extended for five minutes. I think it is the only time that will be taken up by me during the consideration of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOWLER. I think it is true the young man is in the employ of the United States——

Mr. GUDGER. At the same wages?

Mr. FOWLER (continuing). But in reply to the contention that he undertakes to interpose that because the young man is employed in the service of the Government and is earning money it is a reason why he should not be compensated for the loss of his arm, I will say that flesh and blood never can be measured by dollars and cents, and never will be measured by dollars and cents by me. [Applause.]

Mr. FRANCIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes.

Mr. FRANCIS. Wherein is the Government negligent in this case?

Mr. FOWLER. The negligence of the Government was in having knives in a revolving machine not secured so as to protect the lives and the limbs of the men whom the Government required to work in close proximity to that wheel.

Mr. FRANCIS. Does the bill show that?

Mr. FOWLER. The report, Mr. Chairman, shows exactly those conditions.

Mr. FRANCIS. Another question. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes; I will yield to the gentleman, although I want to discuss one other point.

Mr. FRANCIS. Is it not a fact that in this case the committee followed the Panama cases, in which, no matter whether the Government is negligent or not, the party is allowed to recover where he is not negligent, and was not that rule followed?

Mr. FOWLER. I do not think so. The committee originally reported one year's salary for this young man. I made a motion to make it $3,000, and we finally agreed upon $1,500.

Mr. Chairman, I repudiate the principle upon which this one year's salary is based. It is inequitable, unfair, and un-American in its character. [Applause.] Let us examine that rule which has been thrust into this case so anxiously by some of my colleagues: If an employee in hazardous employment should have a finger mashed while working for the Government, thereby incapacitating him, he would be entitled to receive $5,000 in money under that rule from the Treasury of the United States, provided he were on a salary of $5,000 a year; but if a poor man, laboring upon an arduous piece of work, should lose an arm—aye, if he should lose both arms, if he should lose both legs and both arms, or if he should lose both legs and both arms and both eyes—under that harsh rule, so inequitable in its character, all that he can draw is the pitiful sum of $300, if that be all that his wages amount to for one year.

Mr. Chairman, I say that this young man is entitled to compensation for the permanent injury he has sustained. If the Government's machinery gets out of repair, if it should break or any part of it should get into such a condition that it could not be used, the Government, at the expense of the United States, would foot the bill; and I ask this committee if machinery is worth any more to the Government of the United States than men laboring to do our work and the work of this country?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Chairman, I want to reply briefly to the arguments presented by some questions asked of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER]. The question was asked if it was not true that Severin Hartmann is now employed by the arsenal at the same wages that he was employed at before, and if he had not received assurances that he would be continued in employment for the rest of his life. I do not know whether that is true or not. It may be true. That has nothing whatever to do with this claim. But I want to say this: That if the Government of the United States is paying Severin Hartmann $1.75 a day or any other sum, it is getting the worth of its money. And if it is paying him just as much as it was paying before he lost his arm, it was not paying enough when the accident occurred. [Applause.]

The Rock Island Arsenal is not a philanthropic institution. They are not employing men out there simply to enable them to support their families.

Mr. GUDGER. I would like to ask the gentleman if they have not changed this man's work from that of a carpenter to such work as he can do with one hand?

Mr. PEPPER. I have no doubt but that they have changed his work. Naturally when you cut off a man's arm you change his work, not only that—you change his life, his hopes, and his opportunities, and you are going to pay him only $1,500 for it. I say it is wrong. I say that if that were tried in a court in Illinois or in Iowa, and my friend Judge GREEN here was on the bench and we had a jury of Iowa men out there on this case, I would like to see you get off with a verdict of only $1,500, when a man's arm is cut off, with no negligence on his part, and the negligence established entirely on the part of the Government.

Mr. FOWLER. He would not set aside a $5,000 verdict.

Mr. PEPPER. No. He would not set aside even an $8,000 verdict. I will ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] if he would.

Mr. FOWLER, who made this motion, has gone over the evidence. He is a member of the subcommittee that passed on this claim, and he has now made the motion to increase it. It seems to me if you are going to follow the advice of the committees of this House and take their judgment, you ought to pass the amendment and make this allowance $2,000. It ought to be double that amount.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that I am with the gentleman this time.

Now, as I have observed in these claims, there are two distinct lines on which damages are allowed. In some cases compensation is allowed to injured persons or to the dependent relatives of persons who are killed where there is no liability on the part of the Government and where there would be no liability on the part of a private employer. My notion is that whatever you give to such a person is a gratuity, and if that person does not get all he thinks he ought to receive, he should not find much fault, because if he should go into court the chances are that no case would be made out and no damages of any kind recovered.

But here is a case which is different. It seems to me on the facts, meagerly as they appear in this report, that this young man had a cause of action; that is, that if he had been employed by any private concern instead of the Government, he would have had a cause of action under the common law. In the first place, no one claims that he was guilty of negligence which caused or contributed to his accident. It appears that there was something the matter with this piece of machinery, that it was loose, defective, dangerous, and that while it was in ordinary use, in its ordinary work, a blade flew off and across the room 80 feet with such force that it injured this young man's arm so badly that it had to be amputated. It seems to me that any good negligence lawyer who had an opportunity to examine the facts immediately after the accident could easily have made out a case of negligence against the employer if he were a private individual or a corporation. It would have been easy to show that there was some defect in that machine, that that defect could have been discovered by the exercise of ordinary care and prudence on the part of the employer. An inspection by a competent inspector before the accident would have shown that that defect existed, and the failure to remedy the defect was negligence, which could have been established on a trial, and a case could have been made out to go to a jury. It seems to me quite a clear and strong case on the merits, because a case is always strong when a plaintiff is injured or loses an arm or leg without fault or negligence on his part.

The plaintiff's case is always weak before a jury when they can show some negligence on the part of the plaintiff which caused or contributed to the accident. It seems to me there is no question here but what a case would have been made out that the employer, in this case the United States, was guilty of negligence in permitting this machine to remain out of order to such an extent that one of the blades or knives flew off when the machine was in ordinary operation and flew 80 feet across the room with such force as to destroy this man's arm. Two thousand dollars is not enough. In any State of this Union the average verdict for that accident would be from $5,000 to $8,000. At least that would be the average verdict of a jury in the State from which I come, and it would not be set aside as excessive by any court of which I have any knowledge. This ought to be $5,000 on the case that is made out here. A recovery of that amount ought to be had. It is not a gratuity. It is not asking something for nothing. It is asking reasonable and fair compensation for an accident for which the defendant, the Government, was responsible and the plaintiff was in no respect responsible.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I take pleasure in supporting this amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER]. I know we are in a hopeless minority in this fight, but we give you notice now that we are going to fight these unjust propositions as long as we are here and can obtain recognition and have the breath to speak, because we believe the small amounts reported here are unfair, unjust, and discreditable to the American Congress, the American Government, and the American people. It is no justification to tell me that a previous Congress passed a law which every man of fair play and a high sense of honor and justice knows to be unjust. It will not do to say that we are discharging our conscientious duty as Members of this House when we follow the decisions of our predecessors who fixed this low standard of the value of human life and human limb.

The responsibility of my vote on this question is not the mere question of voting to put through an unjust Government general liability law of four years ago. I am not complaining of the members of this committee, I have no personal grievance or public criticism of them, but I do protest against this method of settling and adjusting these claims. I hope that we can see the justice of liberalizing or changing or modifying this cruel and unjust Government general liability law.

Why, the Senate has passed a workman's compensation act that gives to the widow of a mechanic killed in a private plant $4,800 for the loss of life, and where there is a child $6,000. We will pass through this House a law, a workman's compensation act, that will compel every private corporation in the United States to pay to an injured mechanic a much larger and higher sum of money than we are voting out here to-day to the same class of mechanics injured or crippled in the Government arsenals, navy yards, and workshops of the country. We have voted $1,000 here for the loss of an American sailor, and yet we are giving in a workman's compensation bill that passed the Senate, that in that case alone would compel a private corporation to have paid not less than $4,800.

Mr. BOOHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. In a moment. Let me call your attention to the unjust attempt in this bill, the indefensible action of this committee. Page 3, to Raymond R. Ridenour, for injury to his hand while in the discharge of his duty on the Isthmus of Panama, $500. An injury to his left hand $500, and upon the same page we pay the parents of a sailor who lost his life on account of a defective target practice $1,000. You think a human life is worth $1,000 and the injury to a left hand $500. Do you tell me that this is right, that this is fair, that this is just? I repudiate it. It is not, and any action of any committee, or the operation of any Government general liability law passed in the Sixtieth Congress can not make it right. It is eternally and everlastingly wrong.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. In a moment. Now, on the same page, we pay $1,500 to the heirs of Charles E. Stump, who lost his life from injuries received while in the discharge of his duty on the Isthmus of Panama.

To Loretta E. Smith, widow of George H. Smith, $1,248, who lost his life while in the employ of the Government in the erection of the Capitol power plant.

And the next item is to pay $1,500 to Charles P. Hanson for the loss of his right foot while in the employ of the War Department in the Quartermaster's Department at Boston, Mass.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I had hoped that we would not have to review the allowances which have heretofore passed the House in this bill, but the attack which has just been made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] upon these provisions probably renders some answer necessary.

The gentleman from Tennessee ought to know, with reference to the Rowland claim, that we have just passed, that that allowance was not for a loss of life; that we were not paying for a loss of life, but something to the parent as compensation for what he might have received out of the salary of this man if he had lived.

This particular claim that we have under consideration, Mr. Chairman, is one of the most liberal allowances in the whole bill. If this is raised, I do not know of one of these personal-injury allowances but that ought to be raised, too. We have taken into consideration the circumstances that surrounded this man, the fact that he was reemployed at the same wages, and all these other matters, and have made by far the most liberal allowance that has been made anywhere.

Now take, for example, the paragraph for the allowance of $1,500 to Hanson for the loss of his foot without any fault on his part. Take the allowance, page 2, of $1,500 to Florence Lambert, for loss of one hand and the other disabled, receiving frightful injuries about the face and the loss of one eye, and who suffered torture as a result of that injury. In all these cases the allowance is really much smaller than is the one under consideration.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL] has stated that here was a case which could be made out in court for full compensation. If he will examine the report more fully he will see that this is not that kind of a case at all. So far as the evidence before the committee is concerned, the report of Capt. Jamieson, shown on page 39, is that there was no precaution that could be taken further than what had been taken with reference to these knives, and that there was no negligence on the part of the other employees of the Government.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. He does not remember all of the facts.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The statement contained in the report is as follows:

The molding machine and all other machines in the shop are provided with guards to minimize danger as much as possible, and I am convinced that all possible precautions are constantly observed.

That is all the committee had before it to go upon. There would have been no case had this been a private employer, with what the committee had before it.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Did the gentleman ever know of a case where the employer or the superintendent did not come in and say that all possible precautions were taken to avoid accidents? Did the gentleman ever try a case where that did not happen? Yet here is a case where it is shown that just as soon as the machine was started up it exploded, broke, and this knife flew 85 feet across the room with tremendous force.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The trouble with the gentleman is just that which is the trouble with some others who have spoken on this subject, that they seem to think the committee must consider something entirely outside of the record.

Mr. PEPPER. Does not the fact that this knife came loose from the molding machine and flew across the room, under the circumstances, show that somebody was negligent at some time?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I think that would raise a prima facie case of negligence.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, there is no rule of law which is better settled than that the mere happening of an accident does not prove negligence.

Mr. PEPPER. But that is not this case.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Accidents may happen in some cases in such a way as to establish a prima facie case of negligence. It depends on how the accident happens.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I shall have to disagree with the gentleman as to the question of law, but in any event there is no law that renders the Government responsible, and hence we have endeavored to put these cases on the broad principle of equity, not allowing any of these people all that they ought to have, but such a sum as we thought we could get through. It is no kindness to try to put larger sums on this bill, because if it is done it will never get through the other House.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MAGUIRE of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, this is one of the bills that I reported. It is one of the bills that I as chairman had before my subcommittee. I am favorable to a liberal allowance in these personal injury cases. I went through the files of something like 150 cases that are before my subcommittee and searched out the personal-injury cases and gave them preference, and I think there are no cases before that subcommittee at this time where the evidence is complete that have not already been reported or acted upon. This omnibus bill is made up largely of these cases.

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAGUIRE of Nebraska. I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Chairman, I learned the woodworking business and have run machines similar to this. Upon examining the evidence it shows that on the day those knives were put in they were worked for several hours. The next morning the operator went there and tightened up the boxes. He did not pay any attention to the knives. He tightened up the boxes to see that the cutters ran true. In other words, he showed extra care, and I can not see anything in the evidence here that tends to show the least bit of negligence on the part of any person, but, on the contrary, the greatest care. As a matter of fact, these knives frequently break out and fly considerable distances.

Mr. MAGUIRE of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, from the information furnished the committee by the War Department there is no negligence shown at all on the part of anyone in this arsenal in the case of this accident. I searched out these cases. I believe we have been comparatively liberal with this one. It was reported for $1,500. The man would have received only about $550 if eligible and had received compensation under the regular 1908 general employer's liability act. I consider that act entirely inadequate to do justice and equity in the personal-injury cases that fall within its provisions; this case falls outside its provisions, of course, in point of time, and relief has to be sought direct from Congress.

The Committee on Claims did not follow the wide range of sentiment that prevails on the floor of the House as to the amount of the allowance, but was reasonably well agreed after full and careful consideration of all the facts in each case. Now in most of the claims with private employers, if they had to seek the courts for relief, they would be compelled to pay something like half the amount received for attorneys' fees and court costs. In most of these cases we are passing upon here there are no attorneys' fees or court expenses. It is a clear amount of $1,500, or whatever the amounts may be, and goes directly to the legal heirs or the individuals. This man is, I understand, now employed in the arsenal, receiving, I think, about the same pay as before the injury, although I am not certain about that. I am in favor of passing immediately these personal-injury cases and giving them a reasonable amount, and am not in favor of taking any chances about getting them through by an overloading of the bill with large amounts and have these meritorious cases defeated before final passage and the injured ones or their families continue without relief. Here is a case that has been running for seven years. It has been before this Congress before. The committee decided in favor of giving $1,500, so that this bill may go through and pass and give practical relief to this man now instead of appealing to abstract justice and waiting for years for relief.

Mr. Chairman, I hope this allowance will pass as it is in the bill, at $1,500, and give this man who met with this accident relief, of which he has been deprived for more than seven years. In practically all these cases of injury the relief needed is immediate, and to wait imposes great hardships to the individual or, in case of death by accident, to his surviving family. The Government ought to be one of the very best employers, and relief ought not be delayed in these hazardous occupations, as in a large number of these cases, for a long period of years. The employers' liability act of 1908 has given quite a measure of relief, but of course does not apply to those injured before its passage. In its operation it applies only to a limited number of employees in hazardous Government work, and the allowances under its provisions are not at all adequate. I hope to see the time in the very near future when the provisions of our Government liability law will be very much liberalized. But I am now for granting immediate relief in those cases that are specifically before us and have been lingering for many years.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I will take up just a few minutes and no more. In the first place, I want to remind the committee that these people could not have gotten one single cent but for this legislation. Every item in this bill, almost without exception, is a gift on the part of the Government, pure and simple. Now, speaking for myself, I want to repeat what I said before and that is in nearly all of these cases the amounts are smaller than these people would have gotten if a jury had passed on their cases, but this committee was entering upon a reform. We did not know whether we would be sustained by this House or not, and we did not want to bring in a bill which would fail of passage in this House. Under all the circumstances we have tried to allow a reasonable and just amount in every case, and in no case did we go too high.

Mr. PEPPER. That is true.

Mr. POU. Now, I ask you to cooperate with the committee in helping to put this bill through. I am afraid this is about our last day in court. To any gentleman who wishes to promote the passage of this legislation I think I feel safe in saying this is about the last opportunity to do so.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POU. I will.

Mr. AUSTIN. I wish to say to the gentleman, while I have opposed this bill, I have voted every time to take up this bill for consideration.

Mr. POU. I know that is true.

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not seek to defeat it. I hope to have it amended, and even if I fail in that I hope to create a sentiment in the House against this method of settling these cases.

Mr. POU. In that I am thoroughly in accord with the gentleman, and I am ready to shake hands with him across this aisle in amending the law of 1908 so these people will not get ridiculously small amounts, so that a man who is totally blind, who has had both legs cut off, will get more than $500 or $600 or some amount that will not pay his doctor's bill; but we are confronted with a condition here and not a theory, and I hope we may be able to get through, at least, these two omnibus bills before the day is over. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the Chairmon announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. FOWLER) there were—ayes 22, noes 36.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay $420 to Annie T. Jackson, widow of Frank W. Jackson, who lost his life in the employ of the United States Government on board the steam tug Cynthia.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer, by authority of the committee, the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, line 8, page 4, by striking out the words "four hundred and twenty" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "one thousand."

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I want to answer, if I can, a statement made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] that the other body will not agree to changes of this bill or that this House is in danger of losing this legislation. I want to call attention to the fact that in the Senate on yesterday, according to the RECORD, not a vote was cast against a bill which voted $5,000 in payment of a laboring man in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing for an injury that occurred to him, and the committee stated "That no just fault can be charged against the Government." In that case the laboring man tripped himself in some way in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and was permanently injured through no fault, as stated by the report of the committee on the part of the Government, and they voted him in the Senate yesterday $5,000. Now, here is a proposition to vote the wife of a fireman on a Government tug $1,000, and we have already voted in one case $500 to Raymond Ridenour; nature of accident, "thumb and first finger of left hand cut off."

Mr. LEWIS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. AUSTIN. In just a moment. I am not finding fault with the amount voted Mr. Ridenour. I am sorry it was not larger, but I just wish to call attention to this unfair and unjust method of settling these cases. We have voted to one workman $500 for the loss of his thumb and first finger of his left hand, which were cut off.

And we vote to the widow of a fireman on a Government tug $1,000 for the loss of her husband, and perhaps a father, and we vote a thousand dollars to the dependent parents of an American seaman for the loss of the seaman through a defective method of target practice that his superior officers were responsible for. I wish to burn these inequalities into the minds and hearts of the Members of this House who are voting on every proposition here to keep down and not increase these amounts.

Mr. FRANCIS. Will the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] permit a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not yield. It is enough to vote against the entire membership of the Committee on Claims without dividing my time with them.

Mr. FRANCIS. We will give you another minute.

Mr. AUSTIN. Now, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] this morning obtained permission to make a political speech on the floor of this House, recounting the legislation that the majority have given to the laboring people of this country. Is it just legislation to the wives and mothers of mechanics in arsenals, on ships of our Navy, in navy yards, and on the canal for this majority to vote a few dollars in payment of a human life or $1,248 or $1,500 for the loss of a right leg or a right arm? Is it heeding the cries of justice from the dependents of these laboring men and these mechanics? Is it heeding the cries of people who are made cripples for the rest of their lives through no fault of their own?

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that the gentleman has seen fit to inject politics into this matter. I wish to state that the reason this bill did not get through the last day that it was up was on account of the opposition on that side of the House.

Mr. AUSTIN. I repudiate the Government's general liability law, because it is not just and we are not responsible for it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I am of the opinion that the committee purposes to be fair with these claimants and also that the small amounts allowed are due to our system or our laws in reference to our industries. I have been in a position in life to know something about the results of this network of laws that has been thrown around men in the industries of this country that have practically made it impossible for them to get justice. These claims, in my opinion, can not be based on the grounds of justice. The idea of allowing a widow, without there are some surrounding circumstances that make it proper to do it, the small sum of $1,000 seems to me ridiculous. But I say I am of the opinion that the committee desires to be fair about this matter, and without trying to put any blame on the committee I wish to say that it is due to the condition under which we have lived all these years. I say I have been in a position to see the harm resulting from it. I have been in a position where I have seen widows condemned to the washtub and orphans reduced to destitute poverty as a result of the very bad conditions which we have in this country. I am pleased to hear my Republican friend from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN] stand up here in defense of these people who should be allowed more, in my judgment. I agree with him on the matter.

But I have had some experience in endeavoring to secure legislation in our city and State legislatures in this country, and I know that the representatives of labor unions have been endeavoring to induce the legislators of the country to pass better laws; for instance, to abolish the fellow-servant assumed risk and the contributory-negligence defense which the employers of labor in this country have successfully made where workmen who have been injured have had their rights taken away from them under the pretense of the common law and the fellow-servant law. And it is encouraging to me to have the gentlemen here now declaring for better conditions. And let us hope we may be able to secure the passage of laws that will abolish that condition that we now have of making cripples and paupers and which will give the working people of this country—the men who are responsible for the prosperity and development, the men who have made this country great, the men who, in the trade in which I have worked, take their lives in their hands every hour in which they work—their just dues. Every skyscraper in every city in the country is a monument to two or three ironworkers and every bridge that spans the mighty rivers of this country is probably a monument to a dozen deaths of ironworkers—constructions of which have made it possible for the commerce of the country to develop in the manner in which it has. Is it not high time that we give these people the consideration to which they are entitled? It seems to me that instead of making this $1,000 it should, at least, be made $2,000. Not being familiar with the circumstances, I would like to have more information in regard to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN] has expired.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "one thousand" and insert "three thousand."

Mr. BUCHANAN. I desire to make it $2,000 instead of $1,000.

Mr. AUSTIN. Why not make it $3,000, the same is the widow of the lighthouse inspector? The gentleman voted for that.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois offer an amendment?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes; I desire to offer an amendment to make it $2,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by striking out the word "one" and inserting the word "two."

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Chairman, speaking to the point of the amendment, without any particular cause to advocate or oppose the case in mind this afternoon, it is apparent that we have before us in the matter of these claims the same subject that has reached the Senate already, and I trust will reach the House very soon, with regard to accidents on railroads.

It is proper to remark in that connection that all over the world, except in the Capital of the Republic of the United States legislators have recognized that the calamity of accident, since it must happen, ought to be charged to the business as a proper element of expenditure and necessary cost in the business, and not to the victims, as now happens in our country.

In the 40 or more items that are included in this bill all the ethics of the argument which has impressed other nations to the point of effectual remedial legislation are presented. It is, of course, obviously impracticable that the Committee of the Whole can take up 43 individual cases, either in one day or two days, and dispose of them upon their particular and peculiar merits.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Would not the gentleman also recognize that the Committee on Claims labors under peculiar difficulties right there, being unable to try the case as a court of law would, getting in witnesses and going through the matter?

Mr. LEWIS. I am very glad the gentleman has made that statement. I understand the Committee on Claims has not had the ethical freedom, may I say, to deal with these subjects according to their merits. They have had forced upon them a statute with all its constraints and limitations, and have not had an opportunity of applying the principle of compensation to these respective cases.

I rise in a wholly suggestive way this afternoon. I want to know if there is any objection to this House at this moment adopting a provision that the principles of the Sutherland bill, which has already passed the Senate, shall be applied to these cases through the Court of Claims of our Government?

If that is practicable, these people will receive recognition according to the merits of each individual case—a recognition that is only beggared and mocked by the amounts allowed them in this bill, under the constraints which the committee has been operating under. I do not know of any reason why a provision like that should not be received. The Sutherland bill is a well-known and well-understood measure. There is no reason why its principles should not be adopted and applied to the subject matters of the bill now before the House and the whole subject dealt with.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman propose to apply the principle of the Sutherland bill and send these bills to the Court of Claims?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes; there to be disposed of under the principles of the Sutherland bill.

Mr. CANNON. That means, of course, if you send them to the court, a division of the amounts to be recovered with the attorneys.

Mr. LEWIS. Some limitation ought to be applied to that.

Mr. CANNON. I am perfectly willing to apply the principles of the Sutherland bill to the matter of accidents to employees of the United States. I think that would be just. But I would not be willing to send them to the Court of Claims. I would devise the machinery by which a settlement could be made at the election, if you choose, of the parties that were injured that would enable them to get the amounts that the Government pays.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Chairman, may I have a little more time—two minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEWIS. With regard to the machinery of it, I would make an application of the principle of the Sutherland bill to the facts in this case. I have no special feeling in this connection. I mention the Court of Claims because it is an established institution that ought to be competent probably in the premises.

Mr. CANNON. Under existing conditions, the Sutherland bill not having passed, I have to-day, without knowing anything of the merits of this bill, followed the Committee on Claims, which has unanimously made these reports. I did not know what else to do. I hope the Sutherland bill will pass, and other legislation that ought to follow along that line.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT]?

Mr. LEWIS. I do.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman from Maryland that so far as I am concerned, and the constituency that I represent, and the railroad employees who form a part of that constituency, I am at no time in favor of the Sutherland bill and shall not be in favor of it, nor shall I vote for it. I shall not vote for any principle which makes that the exclusive remedy for those who are injured in railroad accidents.

Mr. LEWIS. The gentleman has utterly failed to understand my discussion.

Mr. BARTLETT. Perhaps I have.

Mr. LEWIS. I said the principles of the Sutherland bill, and not the mere incident to which he refers. The principles of the Sutherland bill are in the main these, that when a man is killed as a soldier of industry, his family or those dependent upon him shall receive an equivalent to four or five years of his wages, and that when he is totally disabled he himself shall receive the same recognition from the employer. Those are the principles to which I refer.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] that the statutes already provide that Congress may send any of these claims to the Court of Claims. That is already the law. And I want to say for the benefit of one of the gentlemen who preceded the gentleman from Maryland, who complained at the inadequate compensation provided by the Committee on Claims, that until May 31, 1908, no provision was made by statute for cases of this kind. Then Congress passed the present act, which limited the liability of the Government to persons employed by the United States as artisans or laborers in any of the manufacturing establishments, arsenals, or navy yards, or in the construction of river and harbor or fortification works, or hazardous employment on construction work in the reclamation of arid lands, or the management and control of the same, or in hazardous employment under the Isthmian Canal Commission.

Now, the fact about it is that until 1908 none of these claims were cognizable by Congress. Then Congress provided a scale of compensation and an enumeration of occupations which would be compensable by Congress under the provisions of the statute. In the case now under consideration $420 would be the amount which could be collected if the injury had occurred under the law as it now exists.

Mr. AUSTIN. Under that law, if this man had lost his left arm, would not the compensation have been the same?

Mr. DIES. Very likely it would have been $420 under the law as it now exists. The question I wish to put to the gentleman from Tennessee is: Shall a person not entitled to anything by law, shall a person whose right of action accrued before the law became effective, recover more than a person who comes within the purview of the law?

Mr. AUSTIN. That is not my position.

Mr. DIES. If the gentleman's contention were enacted into law, the effect would be to give a person entitled to nothing, whose cause of action accrued before the law became effective, more than a person who was entitled to something under the law after it became operative. Now, Mr. Chairman, speaking for myself, I would prefer a general law that placed all people upon an equal footing. I detest a private claim bill or a private bill of any character. I believe if the law is to compensate A for a given injury, that law should be general and compensate all persons who bring themselves within the terms of the general statute. I know that in an attempt on the part of Congress to adjudicate these claims separately, injustice and unfairness are bound to result.

There are before the Claims Committee almost 2,000 claims. Possibly not more than 100 or 200 can be acted on by Congress, and possibly not those thoroughly. If the problem is to be solved in a spirit of statesmanship you would take it up as Congress took it up when we passed the act in 1908, making a general law applicable to professions, occupations, and a scale of injuries, and all attempts to pass upon these questions seriatim by items in each individual case must result in injustice and in giving relief to those who can quickest get the ear of Members of Congress.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a few words in opposition to the amendment which seeks to raise this amount to $2,000. The committee, following the rule laid down in the law, and also the uniform recommendation of the department in reference to these claims, saw fit to allow $1,000, although the claim was introduced for $1,500, and this committee saw fit to place it at $1,000. It has been suggested that the amount should be placed at $3,000, the same amount as was allowed in the case of the widow of the lighthouse keeper. The pending amendment is for $2,000. One element of damages in this case, which is an element in damage cases ordinarily, is the loss that comes to the party surviving from loss of wages. In the case of the lighthouse keeper the wages received were, I believe, $900 a year. In this case the amount received by this laborer was $420 a year, or a little over $1 a day.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment offered by the gentleman will not prevail, but that the amount fixed in the bill by the committee will be adhered to.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes.

Mr. BUCHANAN. In this case has the widow any children, or were there any children in the case of the widow of the lighthouse keeper?

Mr. DICKINSON. I have no definite recollection except a mere impression, and that is not sufficiently definite. My impression is that the widow of the lighthouse keeper did have some children, but as to this one I have no information about it at all. My recollection is that this party was in the service only a very brief length of time, some two or three days.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The gentleman says this matter was based in part if not wholly upon the matter of wages?

Mr. DICKINSON. We took into consideration the fact that if it was not before the committee, and was within the provisions of the law, that they would not get but one year's pay. But I do not like longer to detain the committee, and we want to get along with the bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I was merely seeking for information.

Mr. DICKINSON. I have given to the gentleman all the information I have about this matter. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate be now closed on this paragraph and all amendments.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, before that motion is put I want to ask a question or two of the chairman. I wish to know, and I want to state two or three facts before I ask the question, on what principle or theory these cases are adjusted by the committee, because they are all practically negligence cases.

Now, as I stated before, where there is no case made out that would succeed in any court of common law, or otherwise, anything you give is a gratuity, and in that case the party injured must be satisfied. But in the case which has merit and which would, if properly taken care of, succeed in a common-law court without any statute to relieve the severity of the common law, then it seems to me the damages allowed should be based on the loss and not on the gratuity here.

Now, in this case the report shows that the husband of this woman was free from negligence; there was no charge of any negligence against him.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I ask to be recognized in my own right for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the impression that all debate on this amendment has expired.

Mr. AUSTIN. No; Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri made the motion and then withdrew it.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to renew my motion to close debate, for we are anxious to get along with the bill.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I would like to have the gentleman answer my question.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, with the permission of the gentleman from Missouri I want to say to the gentleman from New York that not one of these cases has any standing in court. Every one of these appropriations is a gift, pure and simple, out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. The report says that the boiler exploded, and there is nothing to show why or how it exploded, whether on account of the carelessness of those in control of it or not, and it seems to me that ought to be stated.

Mr. POU. I will say to the gentleman the information which came to us was that if this woman could get $420 she would be satisfied.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to call the attention of the committee to the fact that this debate is out of order. Time for debate has expired. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DICKINSON] that all debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois to the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay $15 to Hermann Boges and Henry Elkman for damages to fences by United States soldiers at Leon Springs, Tex.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to line 24, page 4, for the purpose of offering an amendment to change the name of the post office.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to return to line 24, page 4, for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the word "Spring" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "Springs."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 24, strike out the word "Spring" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Springs."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman if they are selling horses in Texas for $75; and if so, what kind of horses are they?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I will reply to the gentleman from Tennessee by saying that I suppose they are $75 horses. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay $2,427.88 to J. Kennard & Sons, St. Louis, Mo., for penalties assessed against and collected from said firm erroneously.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to change the name "J. Kennard & Sons" to "J. Kennard & Sons Carpet Co."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 16, after the word "Sons," strike out the comma and insert the words "Carpet Co."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay $439.09 to W. W. Blood, of Greenville, Cal., for labor and construction work at the Greenville Indian school, at Greenville, Cal.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I notice in this item——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California offer an amendment?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I was about to move to strike out the last word, just for the purpose of making a short statement, as the report is full, and the full amount of $439.09 is included in full in the bill, and this is the amount actually and justly due, and I therefore withdraw the pro forma amendment and ask that the claim be allowed.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay $1,500 to Jeanie G. Lyles, mother of Lieut. Dewitt C. Lyles, who was the inventor of a packsaddle now in use by the United States Army.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the word "one," in line 9, page 8, and insert in lieu thereof the word "two," so it will read "$2,500."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 9, strike out the word "one" and insert in lieu thereof the word "two."

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I am authorized to say on the part of the committee that there will be no objection to an amendment increasing the amount to $2,000.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Claims a question in regard to that. Is not this one of many cases of like kind where there are claims against the Government for the use of some article which has been made by some employee of the Government?

Mr. POU. I think there are very few of these cases, but I will say to the gentleman this: That this soldier, who has since lost his life, was one of the heroes of the Philippine service. He was a man of great inventive genius, and invented a pack saddle which the Government is now using. Upon the basis of royalty which the Government agreed to pay him, he would probably have received even more than $2,500, but his mother wished the matter settled all in a lump sum, and we finally agreed on $1,500; but upon further consideration we came to the conclusion that she was justly entitled to at least $2,000. Twenty-five hundred dollars was recommended by the War Department, and this will settle this matter for all time to come. The Government at this time is using the invention of this man, and $2,000 is a very very small price to pay for it.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, all that the chairman of the committee has said is doubtless true. He presents a case that appeals very strongly to our sympathies, but it is a hard case like this that is usually resorted to for making a precedent that will be dangerous in the future. Some years ago I had the honor of serving on the Committee on Claims, and I remember that there was then pending before that committee a number of cases similar in character to this case. At that time the committee refused to report them favorably.

I rather suspect that if this is done in this case it will be used as a precedent in the future for enforcing payment of claims against the Government of like general character, but that will not possess the equity and merit of this case. Now, it is undoubtedly true, Mr. Chairman, that it often occurs that employees of the Government invent some appliance that may be of use to the Government, and the Government takes it and uses it and in some instances derives great benefit from it, but heretofore the policy of the Government has been not to pay for such use. The Government through its patent laws will protect such an inventor against all others, but will not give a monopoly against itself. Whether it is right or wrong, just or unjust, in making this appropriation you are establishing a precedent, and the result will be that there will be claims for multiplied thousands of dollars——

Mr. POU and Mr. FOWLER rose.

Mr. BEALL of Texas (continuing). Against the Government by employees of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina, the chairman of the committee.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I will say that the Supreme Court of the United States has recently decided a case on all fours with this, that the soldier is entitled to the same rights as a civilian with respect to any appliance that he patents and the Government will have to pay for it if the Government uses it. It is not optional at all.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. But here, Mr. Chairman, was something that was not patented. It was simply a contrivance that this man worked out which the Government since that time has seen fit to use, and I do not believe the chairman of the committee or anybody else will say that there is anything approaching a legal claim against the Government in this case.

Any private individual could have made use of it without incurring any obligation.

Mr. CANDLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. CANDLER. Is it not a fact, while this contrivance was not patented, that the man who invented it died before he made an application for a patent, and there is no question but what he would have been entitled to a patent had he applied for it?

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I do not know what the facts are. It seems from the report there never was any patent, never any application for a patent, nothing that would prevent any individual or would prevent the Government from using this appliance, and no legal obligation could be created. I would have no special objection to the payment of this $1,500 if that were all, but I predict that instead of being $1,500 there will be claims before the Committee on Claims, based upon this as a precedent, involving twenty, fifty, one hundred, or perhaps many hundred thousand dollars, and what argument can the Committee on Claims make against those claims which will be based upon this as a precedent?

My heart goes out in sympathy to this good mother. She deserves well of her country, because she gave her son to its service. I honor her and I honor his memory, but we are called upon here to deal with the people's money. We can give our own under the impulse of sympathy, but I question whether we are justified in manifesting our sympathy by a donation from the Public Treasury. I know it will result in many demands being made for large appropriations based upon this most distressing case as a precedent.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I had an opportunity to investigate this case personally, and went into it to some extent. The case was submitted to me by the committee for this purpose. The facts are practically as set forth in this report. Lieut. De Witt C. Lyles was a soldier in the Philippine War. During the fight with the uncivilized natives in the mountains of one of the islands it became necessary to carry a rapid-fire gun across the mountains on horseback. There was no convenient method for doing that, and this lieutenant, during his leisure hours, not at any time occupying any time which belonged to his regular military service to his country, invented an attachment to a packsaddle whereby these rapid-fire guns might be carried across the mountains easily, rapidly, and conveniently on horseback. Now, it is true that he did not make an application for a patent, although it was a patentable idea. The Government at once adopted his invention, and put it into general use in the Army wherever it was necessary to carry these rapid-fire guns. For this reason the committee thought it was necessary to make an allowance in this case, in order to create an incentive for those who were in the Army to invent that which would be beneficial to the Government. For this reason, more than for any other reason, we were induced to allow the amount of $1,500.

There is no other claim of this character that I am aware of now before the committee. Probably there may be one or two, but I have no recollection of any. I understand the rule to be different to that which the gentleman from Texas has stated with reference to the rule of the Government in paying for such inventions. I understand it to be the rule of the Government to allow compensation to an inventor in the department in which he is working if he invents an article that is useful and patentable during his leisure hours, although he does not take out a patent, in order to inspire such inventive genius, and especially is it so if the Government uses those articles. Where they are patented, of course, the Government will have to pay the patented price before it could use the article. I think there ought to be an allowance of $2,000 in this case. I stood for that in the committee, and I stand for it to-day. If the committee stands by the $1,500 I will have to go with the committee; but if the chairman of the committee, on behalf of the committee, accepts the amendment of $2,000 or $2,500, then, of course, I am in perfect harmony with the committee with the allowance, because I think it is right.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I am very sorry my friend from Texas [Mr. BEALL] has taken the position he has here without, as I know, familiarizing himself with the conditions presented by this record. Mr. Chairman, I am especially interested in this bill, more intensely interested in it than I ever was in any matter that I have before ever had in Congress, or in any matter that I have had professionally before the bar. The widow, who is the claimant in this case, is the widow of a 35-year acquaintance of mine, a comrade of mine in the Confederate service, and she not only lost her husband, but has given two of her sons to the cause of the Spanish-American War. This one who invented this packsaddle being on a hike on one of the greatest campaigns ever had in the Philippines, after the saddles had worn out and they either had to leave their guns upon the mountain side or else pack them away in some other fashion, invented this attachment for a packsaddle enabling that body of troops to make the most distinguished march against the Filipinos that is recorded in the history of the Philippine war.

After that, Mr. Chairman, leading a band of 16, he found his way through the jungles, without water, except as it would rain from heaven; without a bite of food for seven days and nights; fighting their way with bolos; eaten up by insects, as well as leeches upon their bodies, for, as you gentlemen know, in the humid regions leeches attach themselves to the bodies of people.

I have here the testimony of Gen. Funston, of Gen. Davis, of Gen. Smith, the major of the battalion; of Lieut. Lyles, showing that to his perseverence and his judgment they all owe their lives.

It was not a usual or a casual invention which he made, because he was an adept in invention. He had given more than one to the Government. He had made, as Gen. Funston and Gen. Davis say here, the map that is now used in the Philippines. He was an artist in this respect. And now, my friends, I believed that when I got this bill presented to the Sixty-first Congress, from a Republican committee, giving this widow $2,500, and but for it being the last day of Congress, and the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. Stafford, who went out of this House on that day, unmoved——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I ask unanimous consent for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent for three minutes more time. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Stafford objected to its being considered, the bill being on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, and through this objection Congress did not have an opportunity to pass upon the bill. But I say a committee of the latter, without a dissenting voice, gave this widow $2,500, and this committee, although I do not know for what reason, and I have no criticism to make of them, reduced it by $1,000.

Now, I do not want to put it upon sentimental grounds. I want to put it on the ground of the contract that has been entered ino on the part of the Government. This young man died before the expiration of the time when he could have obtained the patent on this invention. The mother did not secure a patent because the Government had already agreed with her to pay her 10 per cent royalty upon this invention.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will my friend yield?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I want to ask if the mother of this soldier is not drawing a pension?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Yes, sir.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. How much is she getting?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Twenty-five dollars.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Does not the gentleman think the Government is treating her liberally, inasmuch as it grants only $12 as a rule?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I hope the gentleman will not put it upon the ground of compensation.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I would suggest to the gentleman that possibly that had something to do with the committee cutting the amount down.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. That may be true. At the same time, if she is drawing two pensions because of her two sons, $25 a month is not too much for her with which to take care of an invalid daughter, for upon the very day that this committee reported this bill she lost the only daughter she had to help her. That was two months ago. Now she has to get along with an invalid daughter on her hands with this pitiable sum of $25.

But I was going on to say that I put this upon a legal ground.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Yes, sir.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Is not this woman drawing a pension at this time?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I have already answered that.

As I say, I am putting this on legal ground. Here is my friend from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD], who was on the committee that gave me $2,500.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I would like to have two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Now, as I have said, he did not take out a patent and she did not take out a patent, because the Government had already agreed with her for a 10 per cent royalty upon this invention, based upon the price of $1.80 for each saddle.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Did the Government pay that royalty?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. They gave her credit for it, and the reason why it is put here at the sum of $2,500, I want to say to you, gentlemen, is because I made the contract with the Secretary of War for $2,500 instead of carrying the account from year to year upon a 10 per cent royalty.

I agreed with the Secretary of War, and the report that was agreed upon by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD] and presented to this House showed fully the contract that was made between the Government and this widow for $2,500 instead of a 10 per cent royalty; and if I had not carried out an agreement which, in my judgment, I thought I was under obligations to my Government to carry out, I would have put in a claim here for $20,000 instead of $2,500. But I made that contract with the Government, and I stood by it, and I want this committee to stand with me. [Applause.]

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I merely wanted to explain a mistake that I inadvertently made. I am not authorized by the committee to agree to an amendment fixing the amount to $2,500, but I am authorized to agree to an amendment fixing the amount at $2,000.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. POU. Yes.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. RUCKER] has just given a very interesting account of the services performed by this soldier, and the very great benefits derived from this invention. I would like to know why these facts are not incorporated in the report. Did the Government ever enter into an obligation to pay any royalty upon this contrivance?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I can show you that it did.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I do not express any doubt about it; but I wondered why a statement of these very material facts was not incorporated in the report.

Mr. POU. I will say to the gentleman that the report is not as full on this case as on the others, and does not cover the question of royalty; but this was the very last item, and the printer had the bill and was asking us not to send him any more matter to be incorporated therein, and we thought that in view of the fact that it was a unanimous report, the report itself would take the place of the evidence.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I was on the Committee on Claims when this original report was made. I am not at present a member of that committee, but, as stated, I was a member at the time the original bill was pending before the committee and when the original report was made.

I am an economist. I do not believe in extravagance of any kind or in paying something for nothing, but I do believe in paying just and honest compensation for anything that is acquired either by an individual or by the Government of the United States. This Government is too rich and has too many resources to appropriate to itself the property of one of its citizens and then refuse to make to him just and reasonable compensation for the property taken. [Applause.]

I have made it a rule all my life to pay my honest debts, and may the good Lord grant that I may always in the future have the ability to meet the obligations which I incur; and as I pay my own obligations, I am in favor of this Government meeting its obligations and meeting them promptly. One criticism of the Government of the United States of America is that it does not meet its obligations as promptly as it ought to meet them. [Applause.] There is complaint to-day against the Government to the effect that while it is the most exacting creditor it is at the same time the most dilatory debtor that there is in the country. [Applause.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. CANDLER. In a moment. There are many honest claims pending against the Government of the United States which the Government fails to meet and pay. Now I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. RUCKER] has said that this invention was not patented. Is the gentleman from Mississippi aware of the fact that there is no property right in an invention vested in anyone until a patent has been taken out? And does not the gentleman know that this party has no right to compensation whatever because no patent was issued to him and this is merely a gratuity? Is not that the correct position?

Mr. CANDLER. No; it is not a gratuity; it is an honest debt. I have great regard for the judgment and opinion of the gentleman from Texas, and while it is true that this invention was not patented, yet it still remains that the Government of the United States took and appropriated the invention. Unfortunately, the inventor died before he had secured a patent. If he had lived, if God had spared him to present his claim to the Patent Office, there is no question but what he could and would have obtained a patent. The fact that his death intervened prevented him from securing a patent. His invention was his property whether patented or not, and if the gentleman from Texas had taken it he ought to pay for it, and as the Government did take and appropriate it it ought to pay for it.

This good mother of his not only gave, as my distinguished colleague from Colorado [Mr. RUCKER] says, her husband to the cause of the Confederacy that she loved, where he was a comrade of my friend from Colorado, but with the patriotism that beats in the heart of every American to-day, whether he lives in the North or in the South, that loves and admires Old Glory that floats above us all, she gave two sons to the cause of that flag in the Spanish-American War.

If you vote to her to-day the amount which is asked, you will pay her no more than the War Department says she is entitled to. You will simply pay her an honest debt which the Government owed her son and which has descended to her as his heir. Certainly she is entitled to the highest consideration of the Members on both sides of this House. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. CANDLER. Let me have five minutes more to close my remarks.

Mr. LITTLEPAGE. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Mississippi have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman from Mississippi have five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANDLER. I thank my distinguished friend from West Virginia [Mr. LITTLEPAGE] and the House for this courtesy.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Before the gentleman resumes his argument let me say that this is a case that appeals very strongly to sympathy. I will ask the gentleman, if this bill passes and this payment is made, can the gentleman estimate what the probable cost to the Government of the United States is going to be?

Mr. CANDLER. It will be $2,500.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. In this case.

Mr. CANDLER. Yes.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. How many scores of other cases are there in which the same principles are involved, which cases have been uniformly denied by Congress? As far as I am concerned I am perfectly willing to have this good woman get $1,500.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Twenty-five hundred dollars.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. But it means hundreds of thousands of dollars in the days to come.

Mr. CANDLER. I do not think so. In this case it will be $2,500 if this amendment is adopted, and the War Department says a fair calculation of what will be due to this good woman is $2,500, and that that is a reasonable amount. That is what the official authorities of the Government say. As to what it may cost the Government in other claims that is not a matter which should be considered in passing upon this claim. I believe every claim presented against the Government of the United States should be considered upon its own merits, but if this claim involves the presentation of other claims that are honest and in accordance with equity and in accordance with law, as this claim presents itself, then the Government of the United States ought to pay them. In other words, the Government ought to pay its honest debts—no more and certainly no less. I do not believe in going out into any field of speculation. I believe the members of this Committee on Claims are honest. I believe they are sincere. I believe that they give to every claim proper and sufficient consideration, and if a claim is presented and is found to be honest and just and right they will report it to this House and recommend its payment. If it is not honest, if it is not just, if it is not right, they will report adversely to this House, and this House will refuse to pay it, exactly as it ought to. They will properly consider and honestly approve or disapprove future claims which may be presented, and "sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." That emergency and situation will take care of itself when presented and be properly and judiciously determined.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. The gentleman seems to base his argument on the proposition that this woman ought to be paid 10 per cent on the probable cost. Where does the gentleman get the idea that on that basis the amount would be $2,500?

Mr. CANDLER. On the statement made by the War Department.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. This estimate was made by Gen. Crozier.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. It has been repeatedly quoted here at $570.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Oh, no.

Mr. CANDLER. If the Government continues to use this device the amount will increase from year to year, and, as was suggested by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. RUCKER], in the course of a few years it will amount to $20,000 or $25,000 instead of $2,500. Had not the Government better settle for $2,500 now?

Mr. BEALL of Texas. You are paying for the future, and proposing to settle it in a lump sum?

Mr. CANDLER. Yes. The claimant would have a continuous claim and the amount would accumulate during the future. We can and ought to settle it now in a lump sum which is reasonable and honest and be done with it for all time.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. The report shows it to be three thousand, and that would be six thousand, and 10 per cent of that would be $600.

Mr. CANDLER. That report contains the amount up to the time the report was made, and it would now run into the thousands. But the gentleman from Colorado says he, representing this good woman, made a contract with the Government of the United States that they would settle and settle in full for $2,500, and that would be the end of the whole matter. I think that is a good settlement on the part of the Government, and it ought to be adopted and accepted. The Government ought to stand by its contract as the gentleman from Colorado stood by his contract. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, I was a member of the committee that considered this claim. It appeared that the device had been used and adopted by the Government for the future, and we agreed, as the gentleman from Colorado says, upon the recommendation of an amount which I do not now remember, but I think it is as he says. I am in favor of the allowance of this claim. It ought to be paid, and I am going to vote for it. But there have been some things said here in connection with it that I can not agree to. Gentlemen say—and I have heard such statements made before juries many times—"this woman gave her husband and she gave her sons. She never had but one father; she never had but one mother" [laughter], and various other claptrap that is thrown in as a makeweight to get cases through Congress. Such appeals ought not to be made here.

Here is a claim against the Government of the United States. If it is a valid claim it should be paid. If it is not a valid claim the fact that the claimant is a widow woman, that her husband is dead, that she had sons, none of these appeals to the sympathies ought to be made. Let every case stand or fall accordingly as it is a legitimate claim or not.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I appealed to the House to pay this claim because I believe it is a just claim and honest.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I concur in that.

Mr. CANDLER. And because the War Department reported in favor of the amount which is embodied in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado. If I did not believe that it was honest and right I would not advocate this payment from any sympathetic or sentimental standpoint, but from a calculation made by the War Department it is conclusively shown that $2,500 is a reasonable settlement on the part of the Government of the United States for the property of this man, which the Government took from him and which it appropriated for Government purposes. I do not believe that I have a right to take your property, Mr. Chairman, unless I pay you what it is reasonably worth, and that is a principle of law which no man will deny. I do not believe that the Government of the United States should be permitted to take the property of its citizen and appropriate that property to its own use without paying for it any more than that one citizen should take the property of another citizen without paying for it. The law is if a man takes and appropriates to his own use property of another he shall pay that other its reasonable value, and the War Department says the reasonable value of the property taken by the Government of the United States from this man and appropriated to the use of the Government is $2,500. That being true, this claim ought to be paid.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RUCKER of Colorado) there were—ayes 16, noes 26.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the words "one thousand five hundred" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "two thousand."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 9, strike out the words "one thousand five hundred" and insert in lieu thereof the words "two thousand."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

PAYMENT OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES FOR INJURIES RECEIVED.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee now proceed with the consideration of the bill (H. R. 24121) to pay certain employees of the Government for injuries received while in the discharge of their duties, and other claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That $61,555.74 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay certain employees of the United States Government for personal injuries received while in the discharge of their duties, without any fault on their part, and to pay certain other claims arising under the various departments of the United States Government as hereinafter stated, the same being in full, and the receipt of the same being taken in each case as full and final release and discharge of the respective claims, namely.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 1, strike out the word "and."

Page 2, line 2, strike out the word "being" and insert in lieu thereof the words "to be."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The question was taken, and the committee amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay $3,000 to Emma H. Ridley, wife of the late Dr. George V. Ridley, who lost has life January 7, 1907, in the discharge of his duties in the Canal Zone while in the employ of the Isthmian Canal Commission, said sum being equal to one year's pay at the rate of compensation being paid him at the time of his death.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph just read, being on page 2, beginning on line 17 and concluding on line 23.

I dislike always to oppose the committee of which I am a member, but I gave notice when this matter was before the committee that it was my purpose to oppose this paragraph when it came up for consideration in the House. This Congress has paid, or is preparing to pay, a good many claims against the Government. Most of those meet my approbation. I have voted that certain persons employed by the Government, who were injured in the course of their employment, should be paid a year's salary, and in some cases more. My reasons for that action were that if the party injured had been in the employ of a private corporation he would have had a right of action based on the injury received, and could have recovered in a court of law. In this case, however, we have an entirely different matter.

Mr. Chairman, this man was a physician in the employ of the Government. He took the risks incident to his employment. I have voted, as I say, that other men who were injured in the employ of the Government should be paid, because if they had been injured while in the service of a private corporation they could have recovered. But in this kind of case no such right of action or right of recovery existed. He was a physician there in the employ of the Government and while performing an autopsy he contracted a disease, and from that disease died. Now, Mr. Chairman, we ought to be fair, we ought to be just; but we ought not to be more than fair and more than just, because the money comes out of the Federal Treasury. I am in favor of this physician being placed upon the same basis as any other physician and as every other physician in this land. Suppose this doctor had not been employed by the Government and had gone out in his private practice and performed an autopsy and contracted a disease, would any right of action have accrued to him or to his family? Not at all. If any physician in the country exposes himself and contracts a disease which causes his death, his widow and children have no right of action for damages nor can they look to the Government for aid. If a physician engaged in private practice had died under exactly the same circumstances as Dr. Ridley, his wife could have recovered nothing. It is remarkably strange to me that Members of Congress think that the whole legal or equitable status of the case is changed simply by the fact that this man was employed by the Government.

I insist, Mr. Chairman, that this claim ought to be considered just in the same way that any claim might come to a physician engaged in his private practice.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I do.

Mr. GARNER. Is the gentleman a member of the Committee on Claims?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I am.

Mr. GARNER. Is this the only item in this bill that the basis of recovery is not considered from the standpoint of the right to recovery if the beneficiary had been working for a corporation?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Why, I think so.

Mr. GARNER. In other words, it is an exception?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Yes; an exception.

Mr. GARNER. To the items contained in this bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I think that is true.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I will.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman being upon the committee and having heard this matter discussed, what is the real basis of the contention that this doctor is entitled to this allowance?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Why, the matter has been pressed by some one who seems to be especially interested in this claim, and it has been considered by the committee. I have no criticism, of course, to any member of the committee, but I think that the matter of sentiment enters very largely into it.

Mr. RAKER. What I meant was I understood that Dr. Ridley was an attending physician at the hospital.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Yes; he was on the Panama Zone.

Mr. RAKER. And at the hospital; and after attending upon several patients he himself took down with the same disease, pneumonia I think it was, and died.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Yes; he was performing an autopsy, and the body was full of pus, and it burst, and his face became bespattered with the pus and he contracted some kind of pneumonia that I never heard of before—incipient pneumonia, I think it was—and he died in a few days after the pus struck his face.

Mr. GARNER. To make the situation perfectly clear to the committee, your position is this: That the Congress ought not to pay a claim where the person doing work for the Government would not have the right to recovery in case he was working for a corporation, and this is an exception?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. And, of course, if we pass this it will set a precedent for paying all claims, regardless of whether or not the law compels corporations to pay them.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I merely want to say a word. I do not think that this claim is an exception. This physician lost his life without any fault on his part from an accident pure and simple, just as we have reported——

Mr. MONDELL. What sort of an accident?

Mr. POU. I am going to explain in a few minutes—where we pay an injury where the blame could not be put on either side. Now, this man was a physician, a pathologist at the Ancon Hospital. He was ordered to perform an autopsy, and while he was performing that autopsy the pus spurted in his face. Shortly thereafter he contracted the same disease from which the deceased lost his life, and the superintendent of the Ancon Hospital reports that, in his opinion, this doctor contracted the disease by reason of the accident. Now, there was no fault on the part of the physician, and the Committee on Claims, as I understand it, has not undertaken to bind itself by any hard and fast rule. The only question that appeals to the Committee on Claims is whether the payment is just and right and this physician was in the discharge of his duties.

Mr. BOWMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POU. Yes.

Mr. BOWMAN. May I ask if this principle did not guide the committee, that this doctor was there acting in a certain sense as a soldier to protect others from that disease and in his endeavor to observe the cause of the disease he contracted the disease and died in the line of his duty?

Mr. POU. Certainly the suggestion of the gentleman is a good one, and he puts it in better form than the committee did. No doubt that is one of the considerations that prompted the committee to act.

So you have these facts.

Mr. RODDENBERY. If this death had occurred subsequent to May 30, 1908, would the physician have been entitled under the general law relating to accidental death?

Mr. POU. I suspect not. I want to say to the gentleman that the Committee on Claims is not following the law of 1908, because it is not a just law. It is a travesty on justice in a number of instances. We are trying to blaze away for a new era in this country. I take the position that the Government ought to pay every man who is injured in its service, or his dependent relatives when he loses his life in the service, without any fault on his part. The day is coming, and coming very shortly, when no man may think he can stand in opposition to that.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Does the gentleman maintain that by these special private bills he can accomplish the end he desires, or is that the way in which to compensate justly?

Mr. POU. I have just stated that the Committee on Claims took each case and considered it upon its own merits. If it believed that the claim was just and right against the Government the Committee on Claims allowed it, and I was simply expressing my own sentiments with respect to the payment of these claims about which I have been talking. So in a nutshell the matter was just this: This man was in the performance of duty. He lost his life without any fault on his part in the line of duty, and we have allowed him one year's pay, and I fail to see any difference in this injury and that in the case of a man who is injured by machinery where the blame can not be put upon either side. In other words, a pure accident.

Mr. HAWLEY. Are there not other instances where claims of this character have been paid?

Mr. POU. I think there are two or three other cases.

Mr. RAKER. I find in the report of the Isthmian Canal Commission, on page 12, in the committee's report, referring to Dr. Ridley, that he had been on the Isthmus at the time of his death for nearly two years without being able to get his leave, and owing to such conditions he was physically unable to throw off the disease when it was contracted. Now, the position taken by the chairman of the committee as to the doctor attending the patients at the hospital is that if in his doing his regular work he should contract a disease from which he should die then the Government should pay——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that he be given one minute longer, so that he can answer my question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. And that this same principle would apply to any working man or woman in or about the hospital where the disease could or would be contracted, and therefore if they might get it, then the Government should likewise pay for their deaths. I can see no difference in these cases, and both cases should be considered alike and payment made.

Mr. POU. I think not. The superintendent of the Ancon Hospital reported that the spurting up of the pus—which is almost too disgusting to talk about here—was the cause of his losing his life.

Mr. RAKER. I did not find that in the report.

Mr. POU. That was the fact, though.

Mr. RAKER. There were peculiar and particular conditions in this case.

Mr. POU. I will say to the gentleman that the report is not as full as we should have had it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield? This person is not the only one who died of that disease there. Does not the report say it was a virulent kind of disease?

Mr. POU. I do not know. I can not answer that question.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. And it was shown that it might have been contracted if the patient had not been treated?

Mr. POU. I move that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, at the time I made the motion I was not aware of the fact that my colleague on the committee [Mr. GREEN] desired to be heard. I ask that the time be made eight minutes instead of five, and that five minutes be allowed to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY], and that my colleague on the committee [Mr. GREEN] be allowed three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, in this case the physician, according to the contention of the honorable chairman of the committee, stands on a footing of having contracted a disease accidentally, which produced his death, contending therefore that the death resulted from an accidental cause. The alleged accident was that in the discharge of his duty a sputum of some sort was emitted, and from contact with it he contracted the disease from which he died. The report discloses that a very virulent type of pneumonia was prevailing at the time among the employees, and numbers contracted it. Upon the line of the argument of the gentleman, the other employees in the zone who, in line of their duty, contracted the disease were just as much accidentally brought to their death as was the physician. It is too radical a departure, and opens the way by such a precedent to make the Government liable for too great a number of private claims, to permit the innovation without a quorum voting. If this physician had come to his death since May, 1908, in the alleged accidental manner, his wife could not recover under the law. I therefore shall feel constrained to insist on having a quorum present on establishing such a far-reaching new standard and precedent for future liability.

The physician in the discharge of his duty contracted from his patients this virulent disease. The other employees on the zone in the discharge of their duties also contracted this virulent disease and numbers of them died. Now, if upon the theory announced by the gentleman as representing the committee the physician, drawing $3,000 a year, is entitled to have his dependents compensated, the other employees, drawing $20, $40, and $50 per month, by coming into contact with the same virulent disease while in the discharge of their duty, are entitled to have compensation extended to their dependents. They are not found in this bill; and, gentlemen, the chairman of the committee announces that it is covered by no general law, but that the committee, recognizing the trend of sentiment and public justice, propose to set a precedent and perform justice in this and similar cases. If so, they might as well extend it to these other lower-salaried employees; and I would be glad if the distinguished member of the committee on the minority side, when he comes to utilize the three minutes he has asked for, will distinguish and explain to the committee why the physician at $3,000 a year, when he contracted a disease in the discharge of his duty, should be compensated, while the other less-favored employees on the zone, also in the discharge of their duty, who are thrown in contact with the same virulent disease, are not entitled also to be the recipients of special compensation by special acts of this character. I deem it proper to announce to the committee that if it undertakes to carry out the established precedents by providing for persons who could not recover anterior to 1908, but who could have recovered if they had been injured since the enactment of the law of 1908, I shall make no point; but if they undertake, in the language of the chairman of the committee, to set a new precedent and a new standard authorizing recovery, as is proposed in this case, it should take at least a quorum with which to do it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I doubt whether the distinguished gentleman who has just spoken fully understood the statement of the chairman of the committee. If he did, the chairman of the committee does not fully express the reasons that I had for the approval of this claim when I made this report.

It is true that there is no law authorizing the payment of these claims, for the reason that the Government compensation act did not go into effect until 1908, and each one of these matters that pertains to injuries received on the Isthmus of Panama occurred prior to that time.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. How many died of the same disease, approximately, when the doctor died?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The committee has no record of that. I am unable to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. TURNBULL. Was not the physician required to make these autopsies at the time?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes. I was just coming to that. This doctor was assigned to what the committee thought to be an extremely dangerous and special duty, namely, the duty of making autopsies on those parties who had died of this virulent type of pneumonia, an exceedingly infectious disease, as the testimony taken before the committee showed. Having been assigned to this dangerous duty, the committee thought he was entitled to be classed among those who were engaged in hazardous employments, according to the language of the act, and the committee believed that those who received injuries prior to the enactment of the compensation act of 1908 should be placed in the same status and have the same standing as those who received injuries since that act was passed. And, believing that this physician was engaged, by direction of his superiors, in a hazardous and extremely dangerous duty when he was making these autopsies, the committee thought he ought to receive compensation in the same manner.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa yield to the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I understood the gentleman to say a moment ago that there was nothing to show the occurrence of other deaths from pneumonia at this time.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; nothing to show the number of them.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. There is nothing in this report, I think, that shows how many there were. It says, "Many autopsies were required of this character," indicating that there were many deaths from this type of pneumonia.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There were a number, but I could not say how many.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. The report says there were many. Of course, how many we do not know.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. These claims were allowed regardless of whether or not negligence was shown on the part of the other employees of the Government. That is frequently to be shown by the terms of the compensation act, and in most of these claims which were found in this bill for injuries received on the Isthmus of Panama there was no negligence shown on the part of the Government or its employees.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] has expired. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 12, noes 20.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of no quorum.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to eliminate from the bill this paragraph, extending from line 17, page 2, to line 23, inclusive.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I object. I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY] makes the point of no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia withdraws the point of no quorum. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] asks unanimous consent to eliminate from the bill the paragraph beginning on line 17, page 2, and extending to line 23, inclusive. Is there objection?

Mr. AINEY. I object.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, then I renew the point that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia renews the point of no quorum.

Mr. SIMS. I move to strike it out. The other was a matter of unanimous consent.

Mr. RODDENBERY. I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee moves to strike out the paragraph, commencing with line 17, page 2, and ending with line 23 on the same page.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. I make the point of order that that has already been voted on.

Mr. SIMS. Then I will move to strike out the word "thousand."

Mr. AINEY. I withdraw my objection to the request of the chairman of the Committee on Claims.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina renew his request?

Mr. POU. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to strike out the paragraph beginning with line 17 on page 2 and ending with line 23. Is there objection?

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman why he wants to strike it out.

Mr. POU. Because there is a different principle involved in this, and I will say to the gentleman that it is the intention of the committee to bring this in as a separate bill. I want to put this bill through to-night if I can.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. But you have got it in this bill now.

Mr. POU. That is true, but the point of no quorum is threatened, and we are practically at the mercy of any gentleman who wants to make the point of no quorum. There are so many items in this bill about which there is no controversy that I should like to have it put through to-night if I can.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. I will suggest that if the bill is amended in the committee by striking out the paragraph it will be in order to move in the House to reinsert it.

The CHAIRMAN. There being no objection, the paragraph is stricken out, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay $1,375 to Marcellus Troxell, as compensation for the loss of a leg while in the discharge of his duties in the Canal Zone on April 7, 1908.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out on page 3, from line 9 down to and including line 12. I will state that that is erroneously in the bill. It was not called to the attention of the committee to be acted upon, but it is a fact that that man's bill passed during the last session, and he has got his money.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU].

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman of the committee with reference to an item we have just passed to pay to Pedro Sanches a compensation of $1,200 for the loss of both hands. How did that accident occur? Was it through any fault of his?

Mr. POU. I do not think there was any fault on his part. The bill which he authorized to be introduced here only asked for $600, and we increase the amount, because we thought it was right and just to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay $1,500 to Benjamin Demorest, for the loss of a leg on the U. S. lighthouse tender Oleander, on the Mississippi River.

With the following committee amendment:

In page 3, line 20, after the word "for," insert the words "personal injuries and."

The amendment was agreed to.

Also the following committee amendment:

Page 3, line 21, insert at the beginning of the line the words "while employed."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The chairman of the committee moves to strike out the lines referring to the claim of Marcellus Troxell. I notice on page 10 of the report is a copy of a bill which contains a number of the claims in this bill, and among others the claim of Marcellus Troxell. Is that the bill which became a law, and under which Troxell was paid his money?

Mr. POU. The bill became a law during the Sixty-first Congress. It was a separate bill introduced by the gentleman from West Virginia, Mr. Woodyard, and I looked up the law myself with Mr. Sabine, and we found the statute. It was approved, and the money has been paid.

Mr. MONDELL. The bill printed in the report has not become a law, then?

Mr. POU. Oh, no.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is a bill of this Congress and this session.

Mr. MONDELL. I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay $5,000 to Theodore E. Rollett, for injuries received while serving as quartermaster on the lighthouse tender Marigold, which injuries crippled and wholly incapacitated said Rollett for any manual labor during the remainder of his life.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have an explanation. It appears that we are paying this claimant $5,000, and in the previous case only $1,200. Now, why is it that we pay $5,000 in one case, and in the two cases following the Rollett case, $800 to John Moynihan and $1,500 to Robert Coggan?

Mr. POU. I will say to the gentleman that the difference in the amount was varied because of the difference in the degree of helplessness. Now, this man was crippled and wholly incapacitated for any manual labor during the remainder of his life. The injuries were incurred without his fault or negligence and solely through a defective track used for the carriage of a car on which he was riding in connection with the performance of his duties, and through the improper handling of the cable attached to the car. As I recollect, this man is absolutely helpless.

Mr. AUSTIN. I am not complaining of the amount; I would vote to double it. But what I want to know is, What is the basis on which you fix the amount of damage for a permanent injury in one case at $1,200 and another case at $1,000 and in another case $5,000? Is it a year's salary?

Mr. POU. No; of course we took into consideration the salary.

Mr. AUSTIN. Well, take this $800 case.

Mr. POU. To which case does the gentleman refer?

Mr. AUSTIN. To the Moynihan case. That is an injury which resulted in total helplessness, and $800 is recommended. It is for the loss of both hands. I understand that it is the man who fell down the elevator in the Kansas City post office.

Mr. POU. The difference is this: In Moynihan's case the injury resulted in paralysis of both arms. In the other case the man is totally helpless, is compelled to lie on an inclined plane, and has to be fed with a spoon by a nurse who has to attend him. In the other case the man, as I recollect, goes about his business, but to a certain extent has lost the use of both arms.

Mr. AUSTIN. But here is a man with both hands blown off by a premature explosion, through no fault of his own, and we only give him $1,200. That man is just as helpless as the man who was paralyzed and is allowed $5,000.

Mr. FRANCIS. That man that the gentleman speaks of only asked for $600.

Mr. AUSTIN. Well, suppose he only asked for $25, would that relieve us from a sense of justness and fairness in giving him what he is entitled to?

Mr. FRANCIS. Would you give him $2,500 if he did not ask for it?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; if he was entitled to it. I would not dishonor myself by voting $25 or $600 to a man permanently injured.

Mr. FRANCIS. This man resides in Spain, and all he asked for was $600.

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not care where he lives. I want to know how and why here in one case you give $800 for a permanent injury and in another case $1,200 and in another $5,000. Why should not all these cases be settled on the same basis and by the same standard?

Mr. FRANCIS. If the gentleman from Tennessee will search the records of the courts of his State he will find that in the thousands of awards of damages by jurors there are more discrepancies than he will find in this bill here. He ought not to expect to draw these cases out of a basket as you would eggs and find them all alike. The committee has gone over these cases carefully and thoroughly, looked into the evidence and all the attending circumstances, which can not be put into a report. They have looked into the merits of each claim separately. We have taken them up carefully and gone through them and have found that there is a difference in them, and have awarded in each case such sum as the committee thought was just and fair. The party to whom the gentleman refers is a Spaniard. He lives now in Spain, and he sent over here a claim for $600. Six hundred dollars in his country is more than $1,200 in ours. We did not want to put our hands in the Treasury to give him any more money than he asked for.

Mr. AUSTIN. Well, Mr. Chairman, let us see.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. AUSTIN. The Chair means to state that my time has been exhausted by a member of the Committee on Claims.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not responsible for that.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay $800 to John Moynihan for personal injuries received from a defective elevator in the United States post-office building in Kansas City, Mo., said injuries resulting in paralysis of both arms.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to increase the amount from $800 to $2,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 8, strike out the words "eight hundred" and insert in lieu thereof the words "two thousand."

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me from the statement made by the gentleman who was answering my question a few moments ago that the basis in the particular case he cited was the fact that the claimant was living in Spain, and that he asked for only $600. Here is the case of an American citizen, a citizen of Missouri, who was injured in an elevator shaft, and it is proposed to give him $800 for a permanent injury. In a case that we have just passed on we voted $5,000 for a permanent injury, and then in another case we are told that this committee is restricted in these amounts on account of the Government's general liability law, passed in the Sixtieth Congress. Yet there are a number of instances where the committee has not followed the Government's general liability law for allowing to the party injured a year's salary, but they have exceeded that amount.

Mr. FRANCIS. Does the gentleman want us to follow that law?

Mr. AUSTIN. But the gentlemen on the committee have, in defense and in explanation and in answer to my questions respecting certain insignificant sums recommended here, stated that the committee is following the Government's general liability law, passed by a Republican Congress. I pointed the gentleman to the fact that the committee is ignoring the Government's general liability law in a number of these cases, and if it can be done in a number of cases, and the amount can be brought up to $5,000 for a permanent injury in one case, why can it not apply that same rule to all other cases where there are permanent injuries, and especially in the case of where a man has lost both of his hands?

Mr. FRANCIS. But the gentleman has known of men who have gone into court, men of affairs and money, and who have recovered as much as $5,000 for the loss of an arm, and he has also known of men who were common laborers who have gone into court and for the loss of an arm would get five or six hundred dollars or maybe $1,500. Is not that true?

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not know of a single case where an employee or a mechanic was voted by an honest jury $500 for the loss of a hand or an arm or a foot, where he suffered the injury through no fault of his own. I do not believe that any jury in the gentleman's district or in mine would dare bring in a verdict of such an amount, and I do not believe there is a man in this Congress who would dare in his own town or district or State bring in a verdict for $1,000 in any case where a man lost his life through no fault of his own. I think an outraged public sentiment would drive that man not only out of public life but out of the community in which he lives. Yet we are supposed to be the jurors in these cases, and these helpless cripples and these poor widows and orphans of mechanics and laboring men are looking to the 400 sworn officials of the Government, the lawmakers of the land, to give them equal and exact justice, and that is not what we are doing when we vote $1,000 for the loss of a human life or $1,500 for the maiming of a workingman who lost both his hands through no fault of his own.

Mr. FRANCIS. The committee has possibly as much sympathy for the workingman as the gentleman from Tennessee. They probably would be as ready to go down into their own pockets and pay the workingman for any injury he might have sustained, but they are not quite as willing to go into the United States Treasury and lavish upon any claimant such an amount as he may ask at the hands of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay $325 to the dependent parents of James J. Feeny, Brooklyn, N. Y., as compensation for injuries received at the Brooklyn Navy Yard May 24, 1910, while in the discharge of his duties; said sum equals one year's pay at the time the accident occurred, and the said James J. Feeny has died since the introduction of the bill for his relief on February 7, 1912.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 4, lines 16 and 17, after the word "to" following the word "dollars," insert the words "Patrick Feeny."

Line 17, strike out the word "parents" and insert the word "father."

Line 18, after the word "York," strike out all of line 18, and all of lines 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, and 24 and insert in lieu thereof the words "who died as a result of injuries received in the discharge of his duty at Brooklyn Navy Yard, May 24, 1910; the said sum being equal to the amount the said James J. Feeny would have received for one year's services at the rate he had been paid when so employed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I understood the gentleman in charge of this bill to state the other day that he would offer an amendment to increase this amount.

Mr. POU. Yes; the Clerk has the amendment, and I will ask him to report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 16, amend by striking out the words "three hundred and twenty-five" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "seven hundred and fifty."

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by making that $3,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by striking out the words "seven hundred and fifty" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "three thousand."

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I believe the proof in this case showed the father of this boy had expended some $300 for physicians' bills, drug bills, and so forth, in connection with the accident which resulted in his son's death and I believe also the proof shows that this boy was aiding in the support of his father. Now, the amendment offered by the chairman of the committee is to place a value of $750 on the life of this boy who worked in the New York Navy Yard.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to make it $1,500.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by striking out "seven hundred and fifty" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "fifteen hundred."

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. AUSTIN) there were—ayes 7, noes 17.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out "seven hundred and fifty" and insert "one thousand," and I am going to have a quorum here on that proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by striking out the words "seven hundred and fifty" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "one thousand."

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. AUSTIN) there were—ayes 19, noes 21.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment by making the sum $999.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by striking out the words "seven hundred and fifty" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "nine hundred and ninety-nine."

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. FOWLER) there were—ayes 13, noes 25.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The vote now recurs on the original amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out all of line 1, page 5, after the word "ten" down to and including the word "employed" in line 4, page 5.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay $27 to W. H. Carter, of Wilkes County, N. C., in full compensation for services and expenses incurred as brandy gauger during December, 1897.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 5, line 19, and insert in line 19, before the words "Peter Deel," the words "legal representatives of."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 19, insert, after the word "to," the words "legal representatives of."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add, at the end of the last line as a new section, the following:
"Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be paid to any person on account of injury or death of any employee, except when such injured or deceased employee was at the time of such death or injury a citizen of the United States."

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to limit the appropriation to such persons as were citizens of the United States at the time the injury is sustained, or to the representatives of such deceased persons as were citizens of the United States at the time of injury resulting in death. It appears by this bill and report that Pedro Sanches, a laborer, a citizen of Spain, in 1907, or some other time, received while employed by our Government an injury, and there are other instances in the bill where laborers from other countries while working in the Canal Zone likewise received injuries, and Congress is providing by a special bill to compensate them for the injuries sustained. Now, if this item were for an injury since May, 1908, it would be legally justified; but when these employees, laborers and other persons, engaged their services to the United States prior to May, 1908, they did it with full knowledge that there was no law in this country which would entitle them to any compensation for injuries to themselves or compensation to their dependents if death might come to them.

I perceive no right and no duty in the Congress of the United States, in cases where there is no statute providing it, to put alien laborers and alien employees on the same footing with injured or deceased citizens of the United States.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is aware they are so put by the present law?

Mr. RODDENBERY. By the present law; and I have stated if it were under any general law the objection might not obtain, but now the Congress in special cases is going beyond and outside of any general statute in recognizing what gentlemen call a moral obligation. We go behind the statute and provide for compensation. If we go behind any statute we should confine it, in my judgment, to citizens of the United States. I see no reason why we should go out of the citizenship of our country to appropriate from the Treasury of our people to pay Spaniards, Italians, and other foreigners. They left their own country, where they could neither find labor nor bread, and to obtain employment came to our possessions, which the money of our people have made wholesome and habitable, and where they obtain a salary equal to three times what they could get in their own country, and under better conditions than they could get at home. While thus employed they sustain an injury, and we are asked to pass an act by Congress to pay them for injuries sustained or damages to their dependents in case of death.

I submit to you that such legislation would not receive the approbation of the people of this country whom we represent. It is not founded in justice or wise public policy, and there is but slight precedent for it.

The amendment I offer will not affect any appropriation in this bill for a citizen of the United States who sustained an injury as such citizen or who lost his life as such citizen, nor will the amendment relieve the United States from liability where the injury or death results from negligence or fault of the Government. If the amendment is adopted it means that Congress will say, "We will not tax the people of the United States to pay compensation in the nature of damages to Spaniards, to Italians, to Turks, to imported negroes, and to every other class of alien people who come across the Gulf or across the ocean seeking employment at the hands of our inviting and beneficent Government."

I hope the committee will adopt the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I see no reason why the Government of the United States should treat a foreigner differently in this respect than its own citizens. I will say that this man was very badly injured. He had to be deported by the Government. The State Department is very anxious that this claim be allowed. It has been the subject of diplomatic correspondence for three years between the two countries.

I move that all debate on the bill and all amendments thereto do now close.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill, together with the amendments thereto, be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. ROBERTS] rise?

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. I wish to offer an amendment by adding a new section. It is at the request of the officials of the Forestry Department, and is for a small amount.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] withhold his motion? The gentleman from Nevada was on his feet and the Chair recognized him at the time. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add a new section at end of bill:
"To pay to Joe Cook, of Manhattan, Nev., a balance due him from the United States on account of the erection of a ranger's headquarters on the Toiyabe National Forest, under contract with the United States for the construction of a building costing $922.25, which contract was, after the completion of the building, held to be invalid as to the excess above $500, by the Comptroller of the Treasury, the sum of $422.25."

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that a motion has been made and carried, closing the debate on the bill and all amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] is right in that; but that does not shut out amendments. All debate has been closed on the paragraph and the amendments.

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. This is a new amendment, Mr. Chairman. I ask unanimous consent for just two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nevada asks unanimous consent for two minutes in which to discuss his amendment.

Mr. POU. How much time does the gentleman wish?

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. I do not believe I will take more than two minutes.

Mr. POU. If he will not make it more than three minutes, I will not object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say to the committee that the officials of the Forest Service have been trying for some time to see that this poor man, Mr. Cook, of Manhattan, Nev., gets the balance that is due him, $422.25. This amendment that I have offered is an outline amendment which was sent to me for my guidance.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Nevada yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. Well, I have only three minutes.

Mr. DICKINSON. One question. Has any bill ever been introduced for this claim?

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. No; there has not been. But Mr. Potter, the Assistant Forester, wrote this letter which I hold in my hand and prepared the text of the amendment which I have offered here. They have been trying to find a way to pay this man what is due him. The Solicitor ruled that it was impossible to pay him because this contract could not go above $500. But the United States entered into a contract with Mr. Cook to build this house, and he built the house, and they paid him $500; but under the law the Solicitor could not pay him any more, notwithstanding the fact that the Government entered into a contract with him signed by the Assistant Secretary of the Interior, and Mr. Cook performed his work. They paid him, I say, $500, but they could not pay him any more. I ask that this amendment be adopted in justice to this man who has performed the work and who is without fault in the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nevada.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 15, noes 29.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. POU rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] is recognized.

Mr. POU. I move, Mr. Chairman, that the bill H. R. 23451, with amendments, be reported to the House with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

INTERNATIONAL OPIUM CONVENTION (S. DOC. 733).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication of the Secretary of State covering the report of the American delegation to the International Opium Conference held at The Hague from December 1, 1911, to January 23, 1912.

In submitting this report the Secretary of State makes certain recommendations regarding bills now before the Congress for the control of our foreign and domestic traffic in habit-forming drugs. I have several times called the attention of the Congress to the necessity for the passage of the proposed measures, and I now indorse the view of the Secretary of State that the Congress should promptly pass these measures, more especially because this Government took the initiative and has been generously supported by 12 other Goverments in its efforts to mitigate, if not entirely suppress, the world's opium evil.

Inasmuch as the international opium convention and its protocol de cloture, signed at The Hague by representatives of the United States, China, France, Germany, Great Britain, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Persia, Portugal, Russia, and Siam, have been given publicity by the conference and by the signatory Governments, it is deemed not improper to accompany the report with authentic copies of them.

I am not able at the present moment, however, to ask the advice and consent of the Senate to the ratification of the convention, for it is provided by the final articles of the convention that ratification is to depend upon the Netherlands Government securing, by the 31st of December next, the supplemental signatures of 34 States named in article 22 of the convention, and that in case the signatures of all the powers invited to sign the convention shall not have been secured by December 31, 1912, the Netherlands Government shall immediately invite all the powers who have signed by that date to designate delegates to proceed to The Hague to examine into the possibility of nevertheless depositing their ratifications. It is my hope and belief that the Netherlands Government will secure the necessary signatures to the convention by the date fixed, and that I can then ask the advice and consent of the Senate to the ratification of the convention.

Therefore, at the present time the international opium convention and protocol de cloture are submitted to the Congress merely for its information as to the great step in advance which has been taken by 12 States in cooperation with the United States to bring the opium evil to an end.

LAND AT PENDLETON, OREG.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I report back favorably from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment in the nature of a substitute the bill (S. 3203) to authorize the sale of certain land within the Umatilla Indian Reservation to the city of Pendleton, Oreg., and I submit a report (No. 839) thereon. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill. I will state that my reason for making the request is that the sale of the land is for the purpose of furnishing a reservoir site for water for municipal purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The SECRETARY. The committee report to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to sell and convey to the city of Pendleton, a municipal corporation in Umatilla County, State of Oregon, under such terms, conditions, and regulations as he may prescribe, not to exceed 200 acres of unallotted tribal Indian lands within the Umatilla Reservation at not less than its appraised value, said lands to be used by the city of Pendleton, Oreg., for municipal waterworks purposes: Provided, That the net proceeds from the sale of said lands shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of said Umatilla Tribe of Indians and shall draw interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum and may thereafter be paid to the said tribe of Indians pro rata or used for their benefit, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WARREN. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back with amendments the bill (H. R. 24023) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 832) thereon.

I desire to give notice that I shall move to take up the bill Monday morning, and I hope it may be the pleasure of the Senate to proceed with it to a finish. As it is quite a long bill, with many amendments, I hope that Senators who desire to give it attention may do that meantime, so that we may proceed as rapidly as may be, on account of other appointments which have been made for next week, as shown on the calendar.

Mr. BRISTOW. When can we get copies of the bill? It is a very important bill.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator desires a copy, I can furnish him one now.

Mr. BRISTOW. Printed, with the amendments?

Mr. WARREN. A printed copy showing the amendments.

Mr. BRISTOW. I would be greatly pleased to have a copy. I should like to have a copy at my desk and one for my office.

Mr. HEYBURN. Would it not be better to have the bill printed showing the amendments and giving such information as we usually have upon the face of the bill? We will want to give attention to it between now and the time when it is taken up, and being so lengthy a bill we, of course, can not take it up right on the moment it is before us in print.

Mr. WARREN. It is printed in the usual way and shows every amendment printed in italics.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is now printed and available to all Senators?

Mr. WARREN. It will be available immediately. It is available now as to a few copies, and the others will follow in a few moments. I presume the Senator does not desire any different plan of printing than the usual form, because every amendment is shown in italics.

Mr. HEYBURN. The only question was as to the short time that will intervene before the bill is taken up.

Mr. WARREN. If it is the pleasure of the Senate to take any more time, I can certainly afford to wait, if the Senate can, but it seems to me, with the notices given here, which run late into next week, with the long, tedious struggle that will necessarily ensue in conference, we ought, if possible, to dispose of the bill on Monday.

Mr. HEYBURN. I entirely agree with the Senator, only I thought, if the copies were available to-day, we could then take up the bill for consideration.

Mr. WARREN. The copies will be here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

In view of that, I have concluded to call the matter up on Tuesday morning instead of Monday morning, and I will address the Senate on the question at that time.

ANTI-INJUNCTION BILL.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I desire to make an inquiry of the chairman of the Judiciary Committee. What is known as the Clayton anti-injunction bill, being House bill 23635, was referred to that committee on the 15th day of May. I have had numerous inquiries about the bill, and I desire to ask the chairman of the committee what the probabilities are in respect to a report? It concerns——

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I failed to get the preliminary statement of the Senator.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The bill known as the Clayton anti-injunction bill was passed by the House of Representatives some time ago, and has been referred to the Senate Committee on the Judiciary. I desire to know something about the probability of getting it reported to the Senate from that Committee. I will say to the Senator that I have had quite a number of inquiries, from labor organizations particularly, as to the status of the matter, and I should like to be able to answer as to the probabilities in respect to a report on the bill. I will say that I would be very glad to have the bill brought before the Senate just as soon as it can possibly be considered by the committee and reported.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I will give the Senator all the information in reference to the bill which the chairman has. The bill has not been for a great length of time before the Judiciary Committee. Immediately upon the receipt of the bill by reference from the Senate to the committee, a subcommittee was appointed, to which the bill itself and subjects connected with the bill were referred. That committee as yet has made no report to the full committee. I know that the members of the subcommittee are diligent, as are the members of the entire committee, never missing a meeting at least once a week, and sometimes on two days in the week. I can assure the Senator that action will be taken upon the bill as soon as possible.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I am very glad to have that assurance from the Senator. The bill concerns a large number of people, and they are very importunate regarding it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I will say to the Senator that I myself have received a large number of letters indicating interest in the bill, and I want to assure the Senator that there has been no undue delay nor will there be any in the consideration of the bill.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair again announces that morning business is closed and calls attention to the fact that there was a unanimous-consent agreement that the Senate should proceed to the consideration of executive business after the morning business had closed.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 4 hours and 50 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, June 3, 1912, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, June 1, 1912.

The House met at 11 a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, in the broad fields of endeavor, in the complicated conditions of our civilization, in the mad rush for wealth, power, and influence help us to remember our dependence upon Thee; that Thy laws are imperative, and if we are saved from the impending dangers which threaten us it must be through loyalty to Thee and the laws which Thou hast ordained. Increase, therefore, our faith and make us susceptible to the heavenly influences that right may prevail in the individual and in the powers which control the destiny of our Republic. For Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MABEL ADLER.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 553 (H. Rept. 814).

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House is hereby authorized to pay, out of the contingent fund, to Mabel Adler, widow of Henry Adler, late a folder of the House, a sum equal to six months of his salary as such employee and an additional amount, not exceeding $250, for the funeral expenses of said Henry Adler.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, in this case one of the employees of the House, a folder, died a few days ago, and this is the usual resolution that we pass following the death of one of the employees of the House. I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FITZGERALD). The question is on the resolution offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

PAYMENT OF EXPENSES OF INVESTIGATION BY COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 536 (H. Rept. 817).

Resolved, That all expenses that may be incurred by the Committee on the District of Columbia in making the investigation authorized by H. Res. 154, to an amount not exceeding $10,000 in addition to that heretofore authorized by H. Res. 200, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives on vouchers ordered by said committee, signed by the chairman thereof and approved by the Committee on Accounts, evidenced by the signature of the chairman thereof.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, several months ago the District of Columbia Committee was authorized to make certain investigations by House resolution 200, and following that the limit of cost was fixed at $5,000 which they might incur. They have expended nearly the $5,000 in their investigation, and are doing some splendid work in ascertaining conditions in the District. They feel that they need $10,000 more to meet the expenses of investigations that will be made hereafter. The committee is of the opinion that it is proper to allow them the limit of cost, and therefore report favorably the resolution.

Mr. DALZELL. What particular investigation is it?

Mr. LLOYD. The Committee on the District of Columbia has been examining the methods of city government in the District, the method of assessments, the method of collection, the methods of bookkeeping, and making a general overhauling of the business methods of the District of Columbia.

Mr. DALZELL. Is it not a fact that there are two or three different investigations of the District now going on?

Mr. LLOYD. No; not that I know of.

Mr. MONDELL. Is this being carried on by the District of Columbia Committee?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes. I might say that there are some subcommittees which are not incurring expense that are making investigations of one subject and another. One of these subcommittees, as I gather from the committee, is investigating the Insane Hospital, and there may be other subcommittees investigating some other matters in the District, but I do not think any of these subcommittees have thus far incurred any expense.

Mr. DALZELL. This is the only one authorized up to this time to incur expense, is it?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the gentleman think it is necessary to appropriate $10,000 more for this investigation?

Mr. LLOYD. It may be necessary to have the $10,000. This limits the amount that can be expended; it does not direct them to expend $10,000.

Mr. FOSTER. If I remember correctly, when the other resolution came into the House, it was stated that it was the judgment of the committee that $5,000 was all that was necessary to complete the investigation.

Mr. LLOYD. I think that statement was made, but it has developed a very much wider scope of investigation than they thought was necessary at the time.

Mr. FOSTER. The single question is whether they are not going into a field so wide as to incur unnecessary expense to be borne by the Government. It seems to me that the House is entitled to some explanation as to why this $10,000 is necessary.

Mr. LLOYD. I will yield to the gentleman from Kentucky, the chairman of the committee.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Before the gentleman takes his seat, I want to ask the gentleman if the committee has already expended the $5,000?

Mr. LLOYD. It has expended nearly $5,000.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And now asks to be authorized to expend $10,000 more?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman from Kentucky, as I understand, is to be asked to explain why this extra amount is necessary.

Mr. LLOYD. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. We desire an explanation as to how this very large amount of money can be expended in the District of Columbia where there can be no traveling expenses.

Mr. HILL. Before the chairman of the District Committee takes the floor, I want to say that I assume the chairman of the Committee on Accounts has some reason for making this recommendation, and that the Committee on Accounts has fully investigated the matter, and I would like to ask him what has been the character of the expenditure thus far. Has it been for counsel fees, or what is the character of the expenditure that has already been made?

Mr. LLOYD. The expenses thus far incurred have been mainly expenses for accountants, for experts to examine books and methods.

Mr. HILL. And not for counsel fees?

Mr. LLOYD. No; not a cent for counsel fees. As far as I have information, the experts who have been employed are genuine experts, and are not paid exorbitant fees, and have really earned their money.

Mr. DALZELL. How long have they been at it?

Mr. LLOYD. Nearly a year.

Mr. DALZELL. And what have they found out?

Mr. LLOYD. They have found out a good many things.

Mr. DALZELL. I saw a statement in the paper the other day that they have not found out anything except that they were entitled to their salary up to this time.

Mr. BARTLETT. That is information from people who do not want to be investigated.

Mr. LLOYD. I think the gentleman will find that they have already ascertained that there is a very large amount of money that belongs to the Government which has heretofore not been shown by the books of the District and that this will amount into the hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the District pay one-half the expense of the investigation?

Mr. BARTLETT. No; the Government pays it all.

Mr. BUTLER. Why should the Government pay it all?

Mr. BARTLETT. Because it is paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. BUTLER. Is there not some way in which we could compel the District to pay part of this investigation?

Mr. LLOYD. Not unless it is in an appropriation bill.

I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I have anything to add to the statement already made by the chairman of the Committee on Accounts, unless it be that the greater portion of this money has been expended for accountants who have been investigating the accounts between the Federal Government and the District of Columbia.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman how he expects to spend the $10,000?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Along the same lines of former expenditures. A good portion of this money has been expended in stenographers' fees and the employment of a man to help ascertain property which has been assessed too low, as well as that which has been assessed too high. For instance, it has developed only this morning that a very prominent man, associated with a former Federal administration, has had his property in the District of Columbia assessed entirely too low, and it is contemplated that we will take his deposition to prove that fact. Then the accounts of the purchasing agent have been gone over; and, as was anticipated in the beginning, nothing criminal was found, but he has improved his methods as a result of this investigation, which has now been printed in the form of hearings.

We found that the District had an incomplete inventory of the property that it owns.

I will say at this point that the gentleman from New York [Mr. REDFIELD], who has been conducting that part of the investigation, has just this moment come into the Chamber, and I prefer to have him explain that feature.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman does that, I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky if it is contemplated to proceed with these investigations during the summer recess?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It is, and for that reason we want this money allowed before Congress adjourns.

Mr. LONGWORTH. All summer?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. As nearly so as possible.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Why is it expected that the committee will sit here all summer, when, as I understand it, it is rather difficult now to get a quorum of the committee, even when Congress is in session?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. We have a subcommittee that is investigating these matters, and they have been most active, always having a quorum when needed.

Mr. LONGWORTH. As I understand it, less than $5,000 have been expended in over a year.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And now it is contemplated to expend $10,000 between now and the 4th of next March.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes. I will say this to the gentleman, that before this original resolution was introduced I myself during the preceding three years had found what I believe to be hundreds of items of money owing from the District of Columbia to the Federal Government. An accountant has gone over those. In a number of the items that I had selected he found nothing due.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, in looking up the items which I had hunted out during the preceding three years the accountant has been constantly going through these books. Some of the items which I thought were owing to the Government by the District have been found by him, as I said, not to be due. Others have been found to be due from the District to the Federal Government. He is going along now from book to book—musty books stored away for years—and, day after day, he is finding money owing to the Federal Government by the District of Columbia.

Mr. DALZELL. If the gentleman will allow me, How many experts have you now engaged on these books?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. We have now two.

Mr. DALZELL. How much salary has been paid to them?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. In round figures, about $3,000.

Mr. DALZELL. Are they employed by the committee by contract—how much are they paid?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. One is getting $105 a week and the other is getting $30 a week. The one who is getting $30 a week is calling off to the accountant, in order that an employee of the District government may not do that for him. In other words, to make sure the tallying is correct; and he also helps to take out these books. Besides, he is a good accountant.

Mr. DALZELL. Has the gentleman contemplated the employment of others?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. We do not.

Mr. DALZELL. Ten thousand dollars will go to those two?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No; it will go also to stenographers. We are just getting to the point where stenographers are used in the investigation.

Mr. DALZELL. Well, it will go to these two employees and stenographers?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. And to a real-estate expert.

Mr. DALZELL. Ten thousand dollars seems to be a pretty big sum for this.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Certainly.

Mr. DYER. This is the first time such an inquiry has been made in the District of Columbia matters for years.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. My information is the first in 30 years.

Mr. DYER. I will ask the gentleman another question, if he will permit. Does the gentleman think the resolutions, 154 and 200, under which this special committee was authorized by Congress to make this investigation, sufficient to justify the expenditure, if need be, out of this fund for an investigation of public hospitals?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. There is no question in my opinion about that; and I will say to the gentleman that a little later along it is my purpose to go into that, and I trust to have his assistance in it.

Mr. DYER. I will say to the Members of the House that it is the purpose of the subcommittee which the gentleman selected, of which I am chairman, to ask that a special investigation be made in connection with these other investigations of the hospital service in this city and the money that has been expended for charity, not only for public hospitals, but for private hospitals and also of charitable organizations. I believe out of such an investigation the Government will receive a great deal of benefit, and it is the purpose in the investigation of these other matters to ask for an investigation of that.

Mr. CANNON. I just came in, and I understand this is an investigation, under a former resolution of the House, touching the contributions that have been made from the Federal Treasury or appropriations for the services of the District. I recollect when the resolution was adopted—$10,000 it is to cost in the end.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Five thousand dollars was the original amount.

Mr. CANNON. And now it is $10,000 more.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Not exceeding $10,000 more.

Mr. CANNON. Of course it is useless to prophesy what the end will be, and I desire to criticize in no unfriendly manner this investigation, but I am thoroughly of the opinion that if one-tenth part of that had been expended getting at the status from public documents touching District and Federal expenses in education that we would get much better results than we are liable to get at the end of the investigation.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has again expired.

Mr. LLOYD. I yield five minutes additional to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I have never been upon the District Committee, but I have had experience touching District appropriations. The District, upon the one hand, complains, and with something of equity, that we throw expenditures upon the District that, on the half-and-half principle, ought not to be there. Of course we have plenipotentiary power that we divide expenses where they had not heretofore been divided.

I do not desire to criticize, because criticism would be in vain, but just to make a great, big interrogation point. Not playing the rôle of prophet, I believe in the end the Treasury will be out $15,000 and no good will come.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, it is my opinion that as a result of this investigation conducted by the gentleman from New York [Mr. GEORGE] probably $100,000,000 of taxable property will be added to your assessors' list at the next assessment.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will allow me, that is by jacking up the assessors of the District.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. And the large part of this money has been used for that very purpose, and more of it will be used for that purpose.

Mr. CANNON. And if the gentleman can find some means to compel assessors to comply with the law in assessing property as the law provides, he will be entitled to sainthood if he can only spread that throughout the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I do not expect that the gentleman from Illinois will ever be "canonized." [Laughter.] I am making no pretensions to that myself. But if he will cease his objections along this line and let the committee pursue the lines they have undertaken, I believe that we will establish here an assessment plan that will reach throughout the Union and have beneficial results. [Applause.] As I just said, I believe that as a result of this investigation $100,000,000 of property in the District of Columbia that has escaped taxation will, at the very next assessment, be taxed. In addition to that, as will be stated by the gentleman from New York [Mr. REDFIELD], the stores—the property belonging to the District of Columbia—have not been correctly accounted for. The man who kept the store will admit that anybody can come into that storehouse with an old lantern, an old shovel, an old anything, and say that that belongs to the District of Columbia and take out a new one in exchange for it, when he has no knowledge that the transaction is right or not. In addition to that, the accountant who is going through the books containing accounts between the District of Columbia and the Federal Government has found enough, which we will prove by the people who kept this account, to pay the amount now asked for thousands of times over. Now, if that is not money well spent, then no dollar has ever come out of the contingent fund of this House that ever has been well spent.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. The gentleman's statement of increasing the assessment roll a million dollars is very interesting. Does he expect to find property that has not been assessed in the past or expect to increase assessment on property that has been assessed in order to get the other million dollars?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] has again expired.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GEORGE].

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. Speaker, I should like to answer that question. This committee has found a vast amount of property, real estate, in the District of Columbia systematically undervalued and underassessed. It has also found a great amount of property, mainly in the east part of Washington, overassessed. It has found square blocks where the average increase of assessment at this triennial period is 20 and 30 per cent over the preceding assessment on identically the same unchanged little homes, whereas the assessments on buildings in the northwest and in the business area have not materially increased. This committee has found and will present the evidence to this House in its report that the Willard Hotel, for instance, has been underassessed something like $800,000. It has found that the little homes in the eastern part of the District have been assessed for more than they will sell. It has found that there are no proper rules for assessment. It has found grossly inadequate machinery for assessment. It has found that three men are engaged in the work of assessing real estate in the District of Columbia, while six men are engaged in the work of assessing personal property in the District of Columbia. By all the rules of adequate assessment there should be not 3 men on the work of real-estate assessment, but 10 men; and Mr. Lawson Purdy, president of the tax board of New York, the greatest municipal tax expert in th world, is of the opinion that 16 men ought to be engaged in that work here.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. What system of personal tax is now in practice—of personal tax on personal property?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. One dollar and fifty cents on $100.

Mr. SIMS. That is the rate, but the assessment is only on tangible property.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. Are residents of Washington taxed on personal property except that which is tangible?

Mr. SIMS. Tangible.

Mr. MICHAEL E. DRISCOLL. How are you going to change that system?

Mr. GEORGE. We are not going to change that system. The District Committee is not purposing to do anything about that matter at this time. It is inquiring now only into real-estate taxation and assessment. I am referring to them to indicate the inadequacy of the machinery. I think that this is the most careful and, in fact, the only real examination into the assessment and taxation of real estate that has occurred since Congress has been founded. I think that we can, as a consequence of this inquiry, get enough increased revenue from the proper assessment of one piece of property, the Willard Hotel, to pay for this whole examination many times over.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit a question there?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GEORGE. With pleasure.

Mr. CULLOP. What is the Willard Hotel assessed at?

Mr. GEORGE. The ground at about $525,000 and the building at about $700,000.

Mr. CULLOP. How much does the gentleman estimate that that is undervalued?

Mr. GEORGE. The testimony would indicate that the assessment of both land and building should be approximately $2,000,000.

Mr. CULLOP. What is the rule adopted by the assessor?

Mr. GEORGE. That would be the assessment.

Mr. CULLOP. What is the rule adopted by the assessors for assessing property? What valuation?

Mr. GEORGE. There is scarcely any rule.

Mr. CULLOP. Is there any uniformity about it?

Mr. GEORGE. There is no uniformity.

Mr. CULLOP. It is a partial matter to persons in the location of property, is it not?

Mr. GEORGE. It would appear to be.

Mr. CULLOP. Now, I understood the gentleman to say that intangible property was not taxable.

Mr. GEORGE. It is not. But I also say that the committee has not gone into that question in this inquiry, nor does it propose to use in such an inquiry any of the money now being asked for.

Mr. CULLOP. By what authority do they let that class escape?

Mr. SIMS. There is no law to do it.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, as I understand, the law provides that the property shall be assessed at its value, and then it is listed for taxation, as I recollect it, at three-quarters of its value.

Mr. GEORGE. Two-thirds.

Mr. CANNON. Two-thirds of its value, and 1½ cents on the hundred?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; taxed at the rate of 1½ per cent on two-thirds of the value.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman allow me to make a statement there?

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The law under the organic act of 1878 was that both real property and personal property should be assessed at $1.50 a hundred. Some years ago there was tacked onto the District appropriation bill an amendment which left personal property taxed at $1.50 a hundred at a fair cash value and real estate was reduced, and since that time it has been assessed at $1.50 on a two-thirds valuation.

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. GEORGE] has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield me five minutes?

Mr. LLOYD. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I am not a so-called "sharp," touching District of Columbia affairs, yet I have some general knowledge about them. I recollect very well the legislation that the gentleman refers to touching taxation on the District of Columbia bill. Representative Babcock, at that time chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, was incapacitated and seriously ill, and we were running behind in the District revenues, and the House adopted an order making in order the production of a revenue bill, so far as the House was concerned, upon the appropriation bill.

I recollect very well that as a result of that legislation the revenues of the District government began at once to increase materially, and they have increased from that time to this and are still increasing. I have no particular pride in that matter, but I happened to be chairman of the Committee on Appropriations at that time, though I was not a member of the District Committee.

A good many tolerably drastic provisions, as some people in the District thought, were put into that legislation. If I recollect aright, the banks had been practically without taxation, and there was a tax of 3 per cent—I will not be positive as to the exact figure—placed upon their gross earnings; also a material and substantial tax required to be paid upon the gross earnings of the public-service corporations, if I recollect aright.

It was a shaking of the dry bones. Now, it may be that the dry bones ought to shake again. But I wonder why it is that, with the discriminations existing touching the assessment of real estate, the gentleman from New York [Mr. GEORGE] says, "We have paid no attention to assessing intangible personal property"? He says they are nonassessable. Is that right?

Mr. GEORGE. Intangible personal property under the law was not assessable.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely; and you have not investigated that matter at all?

Mr. GEORGE. We have found real estate taxation a sufficiently large job at this time.

Mr. CANNON. But you have paid no attention to the other. Is that of any kinship to the gentleman's theories that taxation ought to be on real estate especially?

Mr. GEORGE. I do not understand that my peculiar views have anything to do with the committee.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely; but there is probably more of what you call intangible property that is not, under the law, assessed than there is real estate in the District.

Mr. SIMS. How could the committee find that out?

Mr. CANNON. Take the contingent fund and "smell" as they are "smelling" now. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMS. It seems, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman says he was proud of having passed the law as it stands.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman from Missouri tell me how much has been appropriated so far out of the contingent fund of the House for the purpose of these various investigations?

Mr. LLOYD. About $74,000 for all investigations of every kind. Does the gentleman mean expended or authorized?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Authorized.

Mr. LLOYD. The amount authorized is from $150,000 to $200,000.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Two hundred thousand dollars authorized.

Mr. LLOYD. For all expenditures of every kind, and about $74,000 has been expended. There has not been more expended out of the contingent fund this year than is usual, notwithstanding these investigations.

Mr. BARTLETT. Ten thousand dollars more.

Mr. LLOYD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REDFIELD].

Mr. REDFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I have a natural reluctance to report upon an unfinished job. I have never found that when a piece of work was half done it was in such shape that an adequate and final statement could be made about it.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield? I should like to ask him a question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. REDFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. DYER. I should like to ask the gentleman from New York if he believes that he is required to make a report now.

Mr. REDFIELD. If I may be allowed to proceed, I will explain. Although that is so, I think it is very well that straight questions are asked which call for straight answers as to what the committee have done to justify their request for more funds, in which request I am very glad to join.

In the first place, it ought to be said, in justice, that the work that has been done has in large part met with the approval, cooperation, and support of many of the officers of the District of Columbia. It would be doing them wrong not to say that. It has been done in an economical way, for the subcommittee has been divided again into five subcommittees, each person doing one job and doing it so that the five go along together.

Now, as to what definite things can be said to have been found justifying a further study, let me say very frankly, without meaning to imply more than I now say and reserving always the fact that I am speaking of an unfinished work and subject to other evidence that may come, that certain things have been found that are worth your very serious thought, and that I, as a business man, would not be content to leave in their present condition. For example, it has been found that there are public funds in the hands of private persons or private boards, subject to private check, and without bond, and deposited in private institutions and not in the Treasury of the United States. We have from the auditor of the District a written statement of such funds, and the matter has not yet been examined to the bottom; but there appear to be a number of such funds having fairly considerable balances over which the shadow of the law has not yet been cast. It is a fact, now a matter of sworn testimony, that, in a certain sense, there is no tax roll at all in the District of Columbia; and I want, if I can, to explain that technical matter, so that you may see just how it has worked. This is a case of accidental interference on my part with my friend Mr. GEORGE in his work, outside of my own province, but illustrating how things turn up.

The property is assessed upon field books. The field books are taken and turned into office books. The office books are turned into cards. Up to the point where the cards are made representing each piece of property there is no actual extension or figuring of the tax to be paid in dollars, but merely the facts from which that may later be figured. At that particular point the cards are transferred onto the ledger, and there, for the first time, appear the dollars and cents in actual money to be paid. From these ledger accounts the bills are made. Those bills go to the collector of taxes, and there remain in the assessor's office no original vouchers with which to verify the totals of those bills. The cards not having been extended and footed there, the ledger having been extended and footed there, there are not two footings to compare with one another, but only one, with no basis of comparison. There exists no total aggregate tax roll to verify the total of the tax bills, with the result that, although some years ago—for 1902—all the taxes were supposed to have been collected, they have yet been receiving since taxes for 1902 to the extent, if I am correctly informed, of some thousands of dollars. That is obviously a matter none of you would stop at, and we have got to go further.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. REDFIELD. It is a fact, a small fact, but I found in one of the supply rooms of the District no system whereby the supplies of the District were marked as belonging to the District. That is, on a shovel there was no mark "D. C." and on a lamp no mark "D. C.," nothing to prevent any man who was friendly with the foreman taking an old lamp and getting him to take it back to the supply house and giving him a new one in its place. Immediately on that fact being pointed out it is a part of our evidence that a die was bought, and now all goods are marked "D. C." I venture the assertion that that stamping of the letters "D. C." on the supplies may pay a fairly large interest on the $15,000.

Now, as to supplies in schools—this is incomplete and I would rather not speak of it at all, but I think you are justified in knowing what seems to be true. The system of dealing out supplies in schools is so much per teacher per annum, and that, apparently, without regard to whether the teacher has 20 or 40 or 50 scholars. The teacher gets so many gross of pens, so much chalk, and so many pencils per annum. It is a part of the testimony that it is largely "a matter of faith." I am using the language of the testimony.

There are also other matters and methods. The District Commissioners rule in a somewhat personal way. The present judgment of some of the District officers prevails in a very peculiar manner. I have had some reason to feel that specifications were unduly exclusive. It is certainly a fact that where other cities can get bids from 15 or 20 manufacturers, Washington gets them on like goods from only 2. It is a fact that the lowest bidder is sometimes not given the contract. I have personally examined into the facts of a half dozen such cases, and in all those cases with the cooperation and approval and support of the District officers themselves. It seems to me that we are going to find a certain laxity of business methods, a certain want of system which will be willingly corrected. It will not make a fuss, but it will save money, and I believe it will result in tangible, plain, ordinary, nonspectacular gain to the people of the District. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Before the gentleman takes his seat I would like to ask him a question.

Mr. REDFIELD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Is there any board or system of equalization of assessments whereby, before the final levy, the tax on a piece of property which has been undervalued may be raised, or that which has been incidentally overvalued may be reduced, so that the entire tax roll may be made up on a system of equalized assessments?

Mr. REDFIELD. I shall have to say that my friend from New York [Mr. GEORGE] has had everything to do with the assessors and assessments, and I can not answer that question. My work has been confined to investigating the purchasing methods of the District.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; there is an appeal board, but that appeal board is made up of some of the gentlemen who made the original assessment. An appeal board is availed of by the large taxpayer, who manages to get his assessment down, but not by the small taxpayer.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. In other words, the appeal is made from the assessors to the assessors.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Is that a fault in the law itself?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That is a fault in the law itself, the law of which the gentleman from Illinois a few moments ago expressed his pride.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman from Kentucky will allow me, the "gentleman from Illinois" performed a duty cooperating with his committee to correct an abuse and want of legislation that should have come from the Committee on the District of Columbia. The section he does not claim, but a betterment of conditions and constantly increasing revenues. If the gentleman can improve upon it, he will have my commendation.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I am heartily in favor of voting the appropriation for the information we will get out of the investigation, but after all it is a mere contention between who shall pay the part the District pays. If we increase the assessment, if we discover property that has not been assessed, it does not help the Government of the United States one particle, because we only get half of the entire budget from the property of the District taxpayer.

As a matter of justice between themselves, assessments ought to be equal, and I am heartily in favor of it; but we will never have a logical scientific system of assessment, taxation, and appropriation in this District until we abolish the so-called half-and-half plan. Just think about this city growing to 500,000 inhabitants. The very fact of its growth will increase the city's burden to be paid in gross, but it will not increase the benefits to the Government as a Capital. The Government pays now about $6,000,000 a year as one-half, when it is only one-half of that part that the city is taxed for, because there are a great number of expenses that the Government pays exclusively that are naturally and necessarily a city benefit. Why should the people living in the best kept city in the United States pay less taxes for it than is paid for living in any other city in the United States? There is no taxation of intangible personalty here at all, and but one half of the general burdens, though many of them are absolutely local and incidental to the fact of citizenship. Why should the Government of the United States that does not send 10 per cent of the children to the public schools here pay one half of all the public-school taxes?

On the other hand, it would be unjust to the taxpayers of the District of Columbia to ask them to pay one cent toward an expenditure of a national character, such as the opening of a great highway to the boundary or doing anything else of a national character. The people of the District of Columbia can not bond themselves like other cities and place part of the burden upon the future. We ought to abolish the half-and-half system and let the Government make the appropriations, pay them, and then tax the people justly and fairly without any reference to half or any other mathematical proportion of the District budget, and until we do that we will have these troubles galore.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I said a few minutes ago that in my opinion the taxable property as a result of this would be increased $100,000,000. I do not have that upon my own information, but it is given to me by the gentleman from New York [Mr. GEORGE], who has been conducting this examination.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. The result of this investigation may enable the District Committee to report some legislation to the House that would be worth one hundred times more than the investigation or a thousand times more than the investigation would cost?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Why not fix it at a hundred thousand?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri a question. The discussion seems to lead along the lines that these inequalities in taxation and assessments will be corrected along with this investigation. Of course if we raise $1,000,000 more by the increased valuation in taxation, that goes into the Treasury, and the Government of the United States under the law of course pays one dollar out for every dollar that the District pays out. If that is true, does not the gentleman think that the expense of this investigation ought to be borne at least equally by the District of Columbia and the United States, and not wholly by the Federal Government?

Mr. LLOYD. I hardly think it should, because this is a Government investigation to determine whether the funds of the Government are properly cared for.

Mr. FOSTER. That is true, but still the people of the District are getting the benefit of this investigation if it accomplishes anything along those lines.

Mr. LLOYD. More than that, if there was anything of that kind authorized, it would have to be done through the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. FOSTER. I realize that, but in my judgment it ought to be done.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I call for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, there is another resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman to withhold that for a moment until some conference reports are disposed of.

Mr. GARNER. Very well.

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 20111) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky calls up a conference report on the fortification appropriation bill. The Clerk will read the conference report.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 686).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 20111) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 3.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 4, 5, and 6, and agree to the same.

SWAGAR SHERLEY,
GEORGE RAUCH,
JAMES W. GOOD,
Managers on the part of the House.

GEO. C. PERKINS,
REED SMOOT,
LEE S. OVERMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. 20111) making appropriations for fortifications, etc., submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying report as to each of the amendments, namely:

On amendments Nos. 1 and 2: Makes certain verbal corrections in the reappropriation of an unexpended balance for the purchase and installation of searchlights at our most important harbors.

On amendment No. 3: Strikes out the appropriation of $150,000 proposed by the Senate for the acquirement of lands at Cape Henry, Va.

On amendment No. 4: Makes the appropriation for tools, electrical and other supplies, and appliances for the use of troops, available for maintaining searchlights as well as for electric light and power plants at seacoast fortifications in the United States, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 5: Makes the appropriation for preservation and repair of structures erected for torpedo defense in the insular possessions also available for maintaining channels for access to torpedo wharves in the insular possessions, as proposed by the Senate.

On amendment No. 6: Makes the appropriation for tools, electrical and other supplies, and appliances for the use of the troops also available for maintaining searchlights at seacoast fortifications in the insular possessions, as proposed by the Senate.

The bill as finally agreed upon appropriates $4,036,235, the same amount as passed by the House, and is $1,437,472 less than the appropriations for the current fiscal year.

SWAGAR SHERLEY,
GEORGE RAUCH,
JAMES W. GOOD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, the conference report leaves the bill exactly as it was as it passed the House, so far as the amounts are concerned, but it makes certain verbal changes and authorizes certain moneys, repair and maintenance funds, to be expended for maintenance of particular works that were not directly authorized in the bill.

Unless some gentleman desires a detailed explanation, I move that the conference report be agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask the Chair to lay before the House the pension appropriation bill, with Senate amendments, now on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 18985) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and the Speaker announced as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. BARTLETT, Mr. BORLAND, and Mr. GOOD.

AGRICULTURE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to Senate amendments to the agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 18960) and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia moves that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

NIGHT TELEPHONE OPERATOR.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 533.

Resolved, That the salary of the night telephone operator shall hereafter be $900 per annum instead of $720, as now provided by law.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to passing the resolution, but it can not be passed as a privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for its present consideration. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

HOMESTEAD ACTS.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill S. 3367, the homestead bill, and ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The conference report is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 794).

The committee on conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3367) to amend section 2291 and section 2297 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to homesteads, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House, and agree to the same with amendments as follows:

Amendment numbered 1: On page 2, line 7, of the House amendment, strike out the word "any" and insert in lieu thereof the word "that."

Amendment numbered 2: On page 2 of the House amendment strike out the following words: "That the entryman may be absent from the land for not more than five months in each period of one year after establishing residence," and in lieu of the words stricken out insert the following: "That upon filing in the local land office notice of the beginning of such absence, the entryman shall be entitled to a continuous leave of absence from the land for a period not exceeding five months in each year after establishing residence, and upon the termination of such absence the entryman shall file a notice of such termination in the local land office."

Amendment numbered 4: On page 2 of the House amendment, at the end of section 2291, insert the following: "Provided further, That the entryman shall, in order to comply with the requirements of cultivation herein provided for, cultivate not less than one-sixteenth of the area of his entry, beginning with the second year of the entry, and not less than one-eighth, beginning with the third year of the entry, and until final proof, except that in the case of entries under section 6 of the enlarged-homestead laws double the area of cultivation herein provided shall be required, but the Secretary of the Interior may, upon a satisfactory showing, under rules and regulations prescribed by him, reduce the required area of cultivation: Provided, That the above provision as to cultivation shall not apply to entries under the act of April 28, 1904, commonly known as the Kinkaid Act, or entries under the act of June 17, 1902, commonly known as the reclamation act, and that the provisions of this section relative to the homestead period shall apply to all unperfected entries as well as entries hereafter made upon which residence is required: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall, within 60 days after the passage of this act, send a copy of the same to each homestead entryman of record who may be affected thereby, by ordinary mail to his last known address, and any such entryman may, by giving notice within 120 days after the passage of this act, by registered letter to the register and receiver of the local land office, elect to make proof upon his entry under the law under which the same was made without regard to the provisions of this act."

That the House agree to the same.

REED SMOOT,
W. L. JONES,
FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

SCOTT FERRIS,
EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
FRANK W. MONDELL,
Managers on the part of the House.

The statement was read, as follows:

STATEMENT.

The conference report as adopted leaves unchanged the two important features of the bill as it passed the House, to wit, the provision for a three-year homestead period and for a five-month leave of absence in each year for homestead settlers. The leave of absence provision is, however, modified in form.

The amendments to the House amendment are as follows:

Amendment No. 1 corrects a typographical error.

Amendment No. 2 relates to the leave of absence and was adopted with a view of making the character of the leave and the conditions under which it should be exercised clear.

Amendment No. 3 was adopted at the suggestion of the Secretary of the Interior in order to make the requirement of citizenship under commuted entries uniform with the requirement under other entries.

Amendment No. 4, first paragraph, provides a definite and uniform minimum requirement of cultivation applicable to all homestead entries except reclamation entries and Kinkaid entries in Nebraska, with regard to which the law as to cultivation remains unchanged. The effect of the provision upon entries under the enlarged-homestead acts amounts to a reduction by one-half of the area of cultivation now required. The second proviso designates the classes of entries to which the provision of cultivation applies and excludes entries under section 6 of the enlarged-homestead acts from the provision reducing the homestead period.

The third proviso makes it the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to send copies of the act to entrymen affected by it and gives the entrymen the option of accepting the provision or proceeding to proof in accordance with the law at the time the entry was made.

SCOTT FERRIS.
EDWARD T. TAYLOR.
F. W. MONDELL.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, the report is a unanimous report, the bill has been carefully considered in conference, and unless some one has a question to ask I move the adoption of the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was adopted.

UNALLOTTED INDIAN LANDS, ETC.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill S. 405 and move that the House recede and concur in the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 405) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to classify and appraise unallotted Indian lands.

The conference report was read, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 689).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (S. 405) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to classify and appraise unallotted Indian lands, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

Amendment numbered 1, on page 1, line 7, after "reservation," insert "heretofore."

That the House recede from its amendment to the Senate bill.

JNO. H. STEPHENS,
SCOTT FERRIS,
C. H. BURKE,
Managers on the part of the House.

MOSES E. CLAPP,
P. J. MCCUMBER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement is as follows:

STATEMENT.

Amendment No. 1 in the disagreement between the two Houses, found on page 1, line 7, inserts the word "heretofore" after the word "reservation," so that the bill as amended would only apply to lands opened to settlement and entry before the passage of this act. This amendment of the House having been receded from would leave the unallotted or otherwise unreserved lands in any Indian reservation open for settlement and entry that had not been classified and appraised in the manner provided for in the act or acts opening such reservations to settlement and entry, or where the existing classification or appraisement, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, had been erroneous, subject to reclassification or reappraisement.

JNO. H. STEPHENS,
SCOTT FERRIS,
C. H. BURKE,
Managers on the part of the House.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 20111. An act making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

TERMS OF PRESIDENT, VICE PRESIDENT, SENATORS, AND REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following privileged resolution from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 475 (H. Rept. No. 832).

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution House joint resolution 204 be taken up for consideration, and at the expiration of four hours a vote be taken on the resolution and all pending amendments thereto.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution to which this resolution applies, so that Members can understand what they are doing.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution 204, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the Constitution and as a substitute for Article XII thereof:

"ARTICLE —.

"SECTION 1. Beginning with the Sixty-third Congress, the term of office of the President and Vice President chosen at the election immediately preceding shall continue until the last Thursday of April, in the year 1917, at noon, and the last Thursday of April, at noon, shall thereafter be the commencement and termination of the official term of the President and Vice President.

"SEC. 2. The second Tuesday of January, at noon, shall constitute the commencement and termination of the official term of the Senators and Members of the House of Representatives. The Congress in existence when the Members of the first House of Representatives are elected after the ratification of this amendment shall hold no annual session after such election, and its term shall expire on the second Tuesday of January immediately following. The Senators whose existing term would otherwise expire on the 4th day of March next succeeding the day on which the term of the first Congress shall commence after the ratification of this amendment shall continue in office until their successors are appointed or elected. Congress shall assemble at least once in each year, and such meeting shall be on the second Tuesday in January, unless Congress shall by law appoint a different day.

"SEC. 3. The electors shall meet in their respective States and vote by ballot for President and Vice President, one of whom, at least, shall not be an inhabitant of the same State with themselves; they shall name in their ballots the person voted for as President, and in distinct ballots the person voted for as Vice President, and they shall make distinct lists of all persons voted for as President and of all persons voted for as Vice President, and of the number of votes for each, which lists they shall sign and certify and transmit sealed to the seat of the government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate; the President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates, and the votes shall then be counted; the person having the greatest number of votes for President shall be the President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of electors appointed; and if no person have such a majority, then from the persons having the highest numbers, not exceeding three, on the list of those voted for as President the House of Representatives shall choose immediately, by ballot, the President. But in choosing the President the votes shall be taken by States, the representation from each State having one vote; a quorum for this purpose shall consist of a Member or Members from two-thirds of the States, and a majority of all the States shall be necessary to a choice. And if the House of Representatives shall not choose a President, whenever the right of choice shall devolve upon them, before the last Thursday in April next following, then the Vice President shall act as President, as in the case of the death or other constitutional disability of the President. The person having the greatest number of votes as Vice President shall be the Vice President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of electors appointed, and if no person have a majority, then from the two highest numbers on the list the Senate shall choose the Vice President; a quorum for the purpose shall consist of two-thirds of the whole number of Senators, and a majority of the whole number shall be necessary to a choice. But no person constitutionally ineligible to the office of President shall be eligible to that of Vice President of the United States. In all cases not provided for by Article II, clause 5, of the Constitution, where there is no person entitled to discharge the duties of the office of the President, the same shall devolve upon the Vice President. The Congress may by law provide for the case where there is no person entitled to hold the office of President or Vice President, declaring what officer shall then act as President, and such officer shall act accordingly until the disability shall be removed or a President shall be elected."

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I would be very glad to ask for some information on this subject.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this resolution, and I want to be advised at the proper time of an opportunity when I will have a chance to express my views of opposition against this constitutional amendment. I do not want to let the opportunity slip.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I will state to the gentleman that he shall have all the opportunity he desires and the time necessary to express his views either for it or against it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Well, it is against it, and I am very much obliged for the information.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. CULLOP) there were—ayes 82, noes 11.

So the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas has 20 minutes and the gentleman from Pennsylvania has 20 minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to inquire whether the distribution of the time is among gentlemen who favor and oppose the proposition?

Mr. DALZELL. I suppose the 20 minutes' time is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. SHERLEY. I understand; but there may be some gentlemen opposed to the resolution. I think we are wasting time——

Mr. DALZELL. I have no application for time on this side.

The SPEAKER. The invariable practice on the rule matter is that the chairman of the Committee on Rules has one half the time and the leading member of the minority the other half.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I think we might as well have a vote on the resolution and then have the four hours of general debate on the bill. We might as well vote on the rule.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the rule——

Mr. SHERLEY. I suggest that with all the great power of the chairman of the Committee on Rules, it is not within his province to determine whether the matter shall be debated. It may be that gentlemen opposed to the rule may want to be heard before the vote is taken, and if the gentleman desires to discuss a little matter like an amendment to the Constitution of the United States he can do so.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I have no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. Objection! It is a matter of right.

Mr. DALZELL. Does the gentleman want some time?

Mr. SHERLEY. No; I do not. But I do not propose to have the matter disposed of as a matter of course.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. The gentleman says he does not want time now, but on the resolution he shall have all the time he wants.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. RODDENBERY. If necessary, I rise to consume a part of the 40 minutes. I want to control 20 minutes of the time, if possible.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I understand the previous question has been ordered.

Mr. RODDENBERY. The previous question has been ordered, and that is the reason each side is entitled to 20 minutes.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Does the gentleman wish to speak on the resolution?

Mr. RODDENBERY. I wish to speak on the rule.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I ask that the gentleman be allowed to control 20 minutes, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] does not object.

Mr. DALZELL. I do not object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY] has not stated which side he is on.

Mr. RODDENBERY. May I inquire, as a parliamentary question, if in order to be heard it is necessary to state whether one favors the rule or not?

The SPEAKER. Ordinarily it would be, but if the gentleman from Texas yielded 20 minutes to the gentleman to oppose the motion, and it turned out the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY] was in favor of it, it might put some other gentlemen in the House in rather an awkward predicament.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make this suggestion. The rule says that 20 minutes shall be had on a side. It is not for the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] to say who shall represent the opposition. Naturally he, as proposer of the proposition, should be recognized in the affirmative; but as to the other 20 minutes, it is not a matter of gift of his, it is a matter of right.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to oppose the rule, the motion, the previous question; in fact, I am opposed to everything connected with it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has already had assurance that he will have all the time he wants.

Mr. RICHARDSON. We are using some time to find some one who is opposed to it, and I think I shall occupy 20 minutes' time in opposition to the resolution.

Mr. GARNER. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] will permit a suggestion, it seems to me this matter could be adjusted in a moment. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania, having 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY], 20 minutes, and only the gentleman from Georgia wishing 20 minutes, either of them yielding him 10 minutes the thing might be settled.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say if the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON] desires to oppose the rule I will yield him my 20 minutes.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Well, Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard briefly on the rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] is recognized. The Chair will state, in order to save trouble, by inviolable usage, in the first instance, the practice is that the gentleman from Texas shall have 20 minutes, and the leading member of the Rules Committee on the other side 20 minutes. If it ever turns out that the Committee on Rules does not want to discuss a rule and anybody else does want to discuss it, the Chair will assume the authority, without any reference to the practice, to divide the time equally between those who want to advocate the rule and those who do not.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, this rule brings up for consideration and makes privileged the House joint resolution providing for a change in the date of inauguration of the President and Vice President. The rule does not limit the right of debate for four hours in any respect. Any amendment that is pertinent and appropriate may be offered to the joint resolution.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does not the rule expressly limit the debate to four hours and provide then that the vote will be taken, and does not the right to offer amendments depend on recognition, and does not any man who is recognized have an hour?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Any man who is recognized will have the right to offer an amendment and it shall be considered as pending.

This is not an effort to suppress the views of any Member of the House in regard to this question, but to give the utmost freedom of debate and of amendment during the consideration.

This resolution was reported six months ago from the Committee on the Judiciary. As the author of the resolution, it has been my purpose to report it to the House and state fully every pertinent fact and leave it open for amendment and allow it to remain on file in the document room in order that Members might procure copies of the report and resolution and thoroughly understand every provision of the same.

It is a most important resolution. If the Members of this House are in favor of changing the inauguration date and the other four important matters set out in this amendment, they can so vote by a two-thirds majority here to-day after the resolution has been discussed for four hours and amendments have been offered. I have no desire to thrust this resolution into the House and keep any gentleman from speaking upon it or offering any proper amendment. If two-thirds of this House is not in favor of the resolution, carrying five very important changes to the Constitution, then I make no complaint. It is a nonpartisan matter.

It does not refer to the proposition of making the term six years, nor would I be in favor of putting that kind of amendment on this resolution, because I realize that if we can not continue to keep this resolution before this House as a nonpartisan matter, it has no chance to pass through the House and Senate. There is nothing partisan in it, and there shall be nothing partisan so far as I am concerned. But it is a plain proposition to change the inauguration date, to eliminate the short session of Congress now held under the present Constitution, and provide for the convening of Congress on the second Tuesday of January. Thus the short session will be eliminated and Congress will meet on the second Tuesday in January. Then it can hold until the next January if it sees proper to do so.

The resolution provides that Members who are elected in November shall take their seats at the convening of Congress about 60 days thereafter, on the second Tuesday in January. It provides that the Speaker can be elected about 60 days after the election, and this House will not be without a Speaker and the officers necessary to organize it for a single day. As it is now, for nine months we are without a Speaker and officers of the House.

There are other important changes embraced in this resolution. I have referred to two important changes that are set out. The third change is a provision in the event that the President elect and Vice President elect should die between the assembling of the electoral college and the inauguration on the 4th day of March there may be congressional action. There is here a complete hiatus in our Constitution, and there is no method by which successors to the President elect and the Vice President elect could be chosen between the assembling of the electoral college and the inauguration of those officials. In other words, to make it perfectly plain, if Mr. Taft and Mr. Sherman had died between the casting of the electoral votes in the various State capitals and the 4th day of March there would have been no power to choose their successors, and for four years this Government would have been without a President or Vice President, and there would have been no power to which a bill could be sent and signed and no authority to convene Congress in extraordinary session. And, strange as it may seem, during all our 125 years of existence as a Government that occurrence has not yet happened.

But there is a manifest hiatus in the Constitution, pointed out by James G. Blaine, the brilliant statesman from Maine, by Senator Hoar, of Massachusetts, and referred to time and again by some of the greatest statesmen this country has produced. In this joint resolution we provide a method by which the successors to the President elect and the Vice President elect may be chosen.

Mr. BARTLETT. You mean you provide that Congress may provide a manner?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. The resolution provides that Congress may prescribe a manner, copying exactly the language of the present Constitution, which is that Congress may enact a method by which a successor to the President and a successor to the Vice President may be chosen, repeating word for word the old language of the Constitution, by which these vacancies may be filled. In pursuance of that provision the Congress in 1886 for the first time prescribed how successors to the President and Vice President should be chosen in case of their death or disability. If you will examine the Constitution of the United States, on page 98 of the House Manual and Digest, you will find this language, written there when the Constitution was written:

> And the Congress may by law provide for the case of removal, death, resignation, or inability, both of the President and Vice President, declaring what officer shall then act as President, and such officer shall act accordingly until the disability be removed or a President shall be elected.

The framers of the Constitution provided the method whereby the successors to the President and the Vice President, after their inauguration, could be chosen. So, following identically the same language and extending it, we cure the hiatus by providing that the successors to the President elect and the Vice President elect, should they die or be disabled, can be chosen by any method fixed by Congress. I assume that we are no wiser than those who drew and passed the statute of 1886, which has worked well.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. HARDWICK. So far as this provision provides for shortening the term of Congressmen, and for having the Congressmen who are elected in November come here and begin their duties in the following January, I am heartily in favor of it; but why, on the other hand, should we lengthen the term of a defeated and discredited administration? Why not require the President to come in and be inaugurated at the same time that the new Congress comes in?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. That is a question of judgment or choice with every individual Member. If the gentleman wishes, he may offer an amendment providing that the President shall come into office on the second Tuesday in January. Just two or three words will make the amendment effective, providing that he shall come into office when the Members of Congress do.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Under that sort of an arrangement what provision would you have for counting the electoral votes? You would have no Congress in session until the second Tuesday in January.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. You would have to provide for the new Congress counting the electoral vote, and then make provision for the inauguration of the President and Vice President a week or two thereafter. You would necessarily have a short period there, and the old President would have to lap over for a week or two in any view of the case. There might be a contest. So I have assumed that it is not much worse, if it is any worse, to allow the President to hold on about 60 days longer than he does now. He holds on now from November until the 4th of March, although he and the House may be discredited.

Under this amendment the Members hold from November until the following 4th of March and are entitled to count the votes electing the President and Vice President. Under my proposed amendment the new Members come into office in January and they count the electoral vote. There is no election between the Congresses; all the elections come in November, September, and June, and then Congress convenes in January, and there are no more elections until that Congress expires.

Gentlemen, I beg of you to take this amendment, take this report wherein I have set out all these things, analyze them, and you will find that the resolution makes some important changes demanded by the American people.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I will.

Mr. BARTLETT. Does not the gentleman think that with such important changes demanded by the people as this is, that the term of President should be limited to one term of six years, and is not this a good place to put it on?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. That would come in another part of the Constitution.

Mr. BARTLETT. In Article II.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. But I will say to the gentleman that a resolution has been reported to the Senate and one is pending before the Judiciary Committee, and I understand that the Committee on the Judiciary intends to report out that resolution, but that belongs to another part of the Constitution. Besides, to be perfectly candid with my colleagues here, that raises a partisan question that I do not wish to be tied onto this meritorious joint resolution.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will allow me, I was going to suggest to the gentleman that inasmuch as we have four hours of debate, and anybody has the right to offer amendments, that we can easily consider all these questions and amend the Constitution in any particular.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. That is true.

Mr. SHERLEY. An amendment to the Constitution is so simple a thing that it ought to be easily discussed in all of its bearings and attended to in four hours. It is such a simple thing, amending the Constitution for the Government of 90,000,000 people.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I will say that I do not want any snap judgment on this resolution, and am willing to discuss it four hours, four days, or four weeks.

Mr. SHERLEY. Then why did the gentleman bring in a rule limiting it to four hours' debate? It is perfectly absurd to talk about amending the Constitution of the United States with four hours' discussion.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. But if gentlemen will take this report——

Mr. SHERLEY. But I am not willing to accept the gentleman's report as the last word.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I think if the gentleman would read it, with all his learning and legal knowledge, he would be so thoroughly convinced that he would make a speech in behalf of the joint resolution. In my judgment, whenever any Member of this House will take the resolution and analyze its features, it will commend itself to his judgment.

Now, if Members do not want the inauguration on the last Thursday in April, why, adopt an amendment by a majority vote making it the second Tuesday in January. If, as some gentlemen say, they want the President of the United States sworn in by a justice of the peace in a room 16 by 16 feet, if that is the view they take of the question, by a majority of this House they can write that amendment on this joint resolution. As for me, I am proud of my country; proud of the inauguration of the President of the United States. I wish 100,000 or 200,000 of patriotic citizens could come here and witness the inauguration of the President, whether he be Republican or Democrat. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, it is one of the greatest schools of patriotism, and speaks well for the American people that they take an interest in the installation of the highest official in the Republic.

But if they do not want a parade, if the last Thursday in April is not the proper inauguration day, then let them put an amendment on here to make it the second Tuesday in January. But let us make the other change, eliminate the short session of Congress, which is becoming an intolerable evil and an obstacle to the transaction of business. Make the change and prescribe the other provisions, curing the hiatus in the Constitution as pointed out. Take time, read the report, the documents appended to it, by Judge Parker, former chairman of the Judiciary Committee; by William Henry Crain, a distinguished Member of Congress from Texas; and by Mr. J. Hampden Daugherty, an able member of the New York bar, pointing out all these defects, making them so plain that even by friend from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], with his superior knowledge, if he will read them, will be convinced. I hope he will take up these things and do me the honor to read them, as I always read all of his productions and listen with pleasure to his discussion of public questions.

How much time have I left, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has one minute remaining.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, if I am correctly informed, including the proposition of the gentleman from Texas, there will be, if this resolution should pass, three propositions pending before the American people to change the Constitution of the United States. That is enough of itself to attract the attention of thoughtful people. We are all satisfied that in the present condition of public sentiment this is the most unfortunate and inopportune time that we ever have had in the history of our great Republic to suggest or submit to the people the question of a change of our Constitution. The people are in a less deliberate and less calm frame of mind than for a long time. I will not attempt to picture the causes for this mental disturbance. We all know it. Suppose the question were submitted to the thoughtful Members of this House to-day as to which of the different methods proposed by the Constitution of the United States, if that great and vital instrument is proposed to be amended, they would prefer or select. Would you incline to the authorized mode by conventions in three-fourths of the States, or otherwise? I am not precipitate in act or thought in my disposition to favor change of the provisions of our Constitution. There is nothing light or trivial in such a proposition to me. To my mind it is a solemn work. I confess that I am opposed in every respect to the alteration or amendment of the Constitution unless a strong, practical, good reason is given for it which conserves the interests of all the people. I have read with a great deal of care every proposition that has been made for several years past to change the Constitution of the United States in respect to the inaugural date, including that of that great lawyer, Judge De Armond, Judge Parker, and others. This is a very different proposition from that which was suggested by Mr. De Armond, and the fact is, as I recall it, not a single proposition corresponded with the others. It matters not what the gentleman from Texas may say about knowledge, as yet I have never been able to find any good and sufficient and imperative reason why the Constitution should be amended and inauguration day changed as a mere matter of benefit to the people of the United States. Where are they concerned? I do not pretend to say that the great city of Washington is not properly and very much interested in it. That is true. Even the distinguished chairman of the Rules Committee and a member of the Judiciary Committee has in the past made several propositions to change the day of inauguration, but they were not all the same. I am not only talking about the rule, but I am entirely opposed to the whole proposition and proceedings to amend the Constitution. There is no occasion for me to confine myself to a discussion of the rule. It is enough for me to know that a rule is proposed here to-day among thoughtful, prudent, patriotic Members of Congress that after a discussion of four hours we shall vote to amend the Constitution of the United States. Is that time enough to consider and pass upon this grave question, hampered as we will be by the rules in the hands of the chairman and others?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I want to ask the gentleman two questions. He said there ought to be some good reason given for making the change.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think so. That is what I said.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Does the gentleman think the hiatus, the omission, in the Constitution wherein there is no way to provide a successor to the President elect and the Vice President elect in case of their death should be remedied?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I think this, that the contention that the gentleman makes that the fathers of our Constitution left within its own bosom the instrument of death is not true. I do not believe that this Government would go to pieces or be the victim of lawlessness or be destroyed or would have been in any serious danger if Mr. Taft and Mr. Sherman had both died before the 4th of March. I do not believe that our fathers left any such menace to their well-finished work.

Mr. HENRY of Texas and Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi rose.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman from Alabama yield?

Mr. RICHARDSON. To the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Then the gentleman does not agree with Senator Hoar and the unanimous Senate, which passed through the Senate two or three times identically the language that I have here.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is not a fair way to put it. I have read the able speech of Senator Hoar on that subject, but I still think it is not the time to change our inaugural date.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, does not the gentleman believe that if Mr. Taft and Mr. Sherman had died, as suggested——

Mr. RICHARDSON. That the Government would have gone to anarchy?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Oh, no; but that the gentleman who then occupied the Presidency would then have been willing to make further sacrifice and to fill up that hiatus for four years, until his successor could have been selected? [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that the fathers of our country left a provision in the Constitution, or the absence of a provision, which meant destruction of our own Government and the instrument which they made. I believe that if such a calamity as that were to befall us—and it would be very extraordinary—the Government would find some way to go along and be maintained in every respect and preserve its life. I believe that some temporary provision would be resorted to until the people could properly provide for the failure of the President and Vice President to fill their offices. It is at least comforting to us to know that for 130 years of existence we have not encountered any such difficulty, even if it exists at all.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, this resolution, as I understand it, provides that the terms of Members of Congress shall be shortened to January.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. And that the President's time shall be lengthened until May.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. So that we would cut off the terms of the people's representatives by two months and shorten the opportunity for legislation and give the President four months extra in which to veto what those representatives did.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes; that is true.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to yield to anybody at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama declines to yield.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do say, Mr. Speaker, I am disposed to admit, so far as I am concerned, that there is one constitutional amendment for which I might be induced to vote, and it is the only one I know of, and I am not going to commit myself entirely to that, and that is to make the term six years and the President not eligible to reelection. I am disposed to think I should support that to make the term six years and not to have the President eligible for another term. I am not, however, in favor of this change in the inaugural date, chiefly on account of inclement weather. I was about to say from my reading of the Constitution and knowledge about it, but my recollection of reading the Constitution of the United States and its contemporaneous history and studying it is that Gen. Washington was inaugurated as President of the United States on the 30th of April purely accidentally, and my judgment as a student of American history is that I do not think that there was ever so important a period in the history of our Republic as occurred between the 4th day of March and the 30th day of April when Washington was inaugurated, and if the American people ever gave, in my opinion, a proper estimate of appreciation of that great man's character it was in that period between the 4th of March and the 30th of April, when his great manhood and character asserted itself and established the fundamental principles of our Government. [Applause.] Why do I say that? Why, Congress was to have met on the 4th day of March. There were only eight Senators there and a few Members, not a quorum, and day after day they continued to meet until Adams came some time in April and was sworn in as Vice President, and then Washington came in April and was inaugurated, and it was then that our Government was fully equipped and launched. Now, gentlemen, the reason that I said my friend, Mr. HENRY, had never satisfied my mind, that he had given no good reason why the 4th of March should be changed as the date of inauguration, is this: I have never known much complaint to come from the people about giving the 13 months' time to think before assuming the authority of a lawmaker. No body or people have ever suffered or complainted about that. It has worked well. It is a great pity we have not the time and leisure to think now. [Applause.] To think what is best for our Government. That is why I say he has never presented to me a good and sufficient reason, and I have never heard any genuine complaint from the people. I have heard it here in Washington through various and divers resolutions introduced, every one of them different. Every statesman that the gentleman has spoken about presented a different day and a different hour for the inauguration, presented a different time for Congress to hold over and for the President to be inaugurated at a time different from what the people elected him. These are grave questions; these are serious questions.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. They are grave questions, but twice the Judiciary Committee has reported this resolution unanimously. Now, would the gentleman be willing to accord the Judiciary Committee some consideration after they have studied this question for years——

Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly I do.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. As against the judgment of the gentleman, when it is perfectly apparent he has not read the report lately?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Read what?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Read the report lately.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes; I have read it; read it lately and read it years ago. Why, my dear sir, you are not the only Member of Congress who has read it. [Laughter and applause.] You are not the only one. That is a direct implication that I was talking about a matter I had not read.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Oh, I did not mean that at all.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not care how——

Mr. HENRY of Texas. But I meant lately. I assumed the gentleman had.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have it on my table there and at my room.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. And it will take two hours to read it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is very true, and it is difficult to understand even then. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Yes; that is true. It is difficult to understand—by some.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes; so it is. I yield a great deal of courtesy and respect and reverence to the Judiciary Committee, guided, influenced, and controlled, of course, supremely by the gentleman from Texas, chairman of the Rules Committee. Of course I yield a great deal of regard and respect to the opinion of that committee, but I do not undertake to say that they are the only lawyers in Congress. I do not say that which probably some of them want to have accorded to them, but I do say that I do not think when the hard, common-sense Members of this House come to look at it they will ask themselves the question wherein and how and in what respect do the people of this country find any benefit from changing the inaugural date from the 4th of March to the 30th of April simply on account of inclement weather. That is the question we are asking ourselves. That is the question that is being asked, and that is the one that Mr. HENRY has to answer and the Judiciary Committee or any other committee that comes in here and says that because we do not see it as the committee sees it, yet because they bring the resolution in we all must vote for it. Not at all; and I put a question that is a right question to be asked, and it is a right question for him to answer. Why, my recollection is in the last decade—the Weather Bureau shows that in the last decade there are about as many wet days on the 30th day of April—and I have it in my possession—as there are on the 4th of March. So, if it is a matter of inclement weather and the matter of a great parade day, we ought to be advised whether we have any guaranty that the last Thursday in June will furnish us good weather for the show.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Will the gentleman from Alabama yield?

Mr. RICHARDSON. No; I will not. But I wish to say that I have from Mr. Moore, the Chief of the Weather Bureau, a statement for the last decade comparing the 30th of April and the 4th of March, and I find there is not a great deal of difference, considering natural conditions and the seasons of the year, but there is a little difference. Probably there are a few more wet and colder days in March than in April. I will supply the weather report as soon as I can reach my room at the hotel.

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has three minutes left.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, the three minutes which the gentleman from Alabama has been so kind to yield will not be adequate for the remarks which I desire to submit.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. The gentleman will have the time later.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Then I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Will the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON] yield me the three minutes?

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes; I will.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I favor the general purpose of changing inauguration day along the line of the resolution of the gentleman from Texas, but I do oppose the form of the rule which the gentleman asks us to adopt on so important a matter as a constitutional amendment. Here is a rule not to limit general debate on this section, but providing a time absolutely when the vote must be taken. Four gentlemen may get recognition under that rule and take up the four hours, and it will cut off the further offering of amendments.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. In a moment. An amendment to the Constitution of the United States ought not to be passed by a gag rule to limit the time to the moment when the vote must be brought to bear, without any knowledge of how serious the desire and the necessity for amendment of the resolution in the particular form the gentleman has prepared it.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. There is no intention to gag any Member of the House, and I always intended to state that half of the time be given to one side of the House and the other half to the other side of the House.

Mr. SHERLEY. If that be true, I will say that there will be no general agreement made that this rule be carried.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Four Members may get recognition and consume not only the time, but shut off all opportunity for amendment.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. If the gentleman will allow it, I will ask unanimous consent now that amendments may be offered and be considered as pending.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The gentlemen, in trying to put through a rule of this kind, ought to bring in a rule which will allow amendments.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Has the gentleman an amendment?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I may have. I think it is unfair——

Mr. HENRY of Texas. The rule allows it.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. It does not allow it. It provides after this rule is adopted that the House must vote on the resolution at the end of four hours.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. The rule provides for pending amendments.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. It does not limit general debate.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN] has expired.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. The gentleman ought not to assume that attitude. This rule provides for a vote on the resolution and all pending amendments, and any gentleman can offer an amendment and he can get a vote. Now, if you are for it let us adopt the rule, and you can offer your amendment, and if it is a good one the House will adopt it.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Will not the gentleman concede that although you might offer an amendment you can not debate it and can not offer it after four hours?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I will give you all the time you want out of my time.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] has expired. All time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the rule.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 39, noes 41.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. DIXON of Indiana. Pending that motion, I would like to present a joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. The House can not do anything without a quorum. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] moves that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 41, nays 184, answered "present" 9, not voting 158, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read House joint resolution 204, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the Constitution and as a substitute for Article XII thereof:

"ARTICLE —.

"SECTION 1. Beginning with the Sixty-third Congress, the term of office of the President and Vice President chosen at the election immediately preceding shall continue until the last Thursday of April, in the year 1917, at noon, and the last Thursday of April, at noon, shall thereafter be the commencement and termination of the official term of the President and Vice President.

"SEC. 2. The second Tuesday of January, at noon, shall constitute the commencement and termination of the official term of the Senators and Members of the House of Representatives. The Congress in existence when the Members of the first House of Representatives are elected after the ratification of this amendment shall hold no annual session after such election, and its terms shall expire on the second Tuesday of the January immediately following. The Senators whose existing term would otherwise expire on the 4th day of March next succeeding the day on which the term of the first Congress shall commence after the ratification of this amendment shall continue in office until their successors are appointed or elected. Congress shall assemble at least once in each year, and such meeting shall be on the second Tuesday in January, unless Congress shall by law appoint a different day.

"SEC. 3. The electors shall meet in their respective States and vote by ballot for President and Vice President, one of whom, at least, shall not be an inhabitant of the same State with themselves; they shall name in their ballots the person voted for as President, and in distinct ballots the person voted for as Vice President, and they shall make distinct lists of all persons voted for as President and of all persons voted for as Vice President, and of the number of votes for each, which lists they shall sign and certify and transmit sealed to the seat of the Government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate; the President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates, and the votes shall then be counted; the person having the greatest number of votes for President shall be the President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of electors appointed; and if no person have such a majority, then from the persons having the highest numbers, not exceeding three, on the list of those voted for as President the House of Representatives shall choose immediately, by ballot, the President. But in choosing the President the votes shall be taken by States, the representation from each State having one vote; a quorum for this purpose shall consist of a Member or Members from two-thirds of the States, and a majority of all the States shall be necessary to a choice. And if the House of Representatives shall not choose a President, whenever the right of choice shall devolve upon them, before the last Thursday in April next following, then the Vice President shall act as President, as in the case of the death or other constitutional disability of the President. The person having the greatest number of votes as Vice President shall be the Vice President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of electors appointed, and if no person have a majority, then from the two highest numbers on the list the Senate shall choose the Vice President; a quorum for the purpose shall consist of two-thirds of the whole number of Senators, and a majority of the whole number shall be necessary to a choice. But no person constitutionally ineligible to the office of President shall be eligible to that of Vice President of the United States. In all cases not provided for by Article II, clause 5, of the Constitution, where there is no person entitled to discharge the duties of the office of the President, the same shall devolve upon the Vice President. The Congress may by law provide for the case where there is no person entitled to hold the office of President or Vice President, declaring what officer shall then act as President, and such officer shall act accordingly until the disability shall be removed or a President shall be elected."

REQUISITIONS FOR MEMBERS' SALARIES, ETC.

The SPEAKER. Before proceeding with the joint resolution, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. DIXON] on an important matter which involves the business of the House.

Mr. DIXON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following joint resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, this is without prejudice to the pending order?

The SPEAKER. Yes. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution 323.

Joint resolution authorizing Charles F. Riddell, cashier in the office of the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives, to sign all checks, requisitions, and papers in the place of U. S. Jackson, Sergeant at Arms, to obtain money appropriated for the salaries and mileage of Members of the House of Representatives during the temporary disability of the said U. S. Jackson.

Resolved, etc., That Charles F. Riddell, cashier in the office of the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives, be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to sign all necessary checks, requisitions, and papers in the place of U. S. Jackson, Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives, to secure the money appropriated for the salaries and mileage of the Members of the House of Representatives during the temporary disability of the said U. S. Jackson, Sergeant at Arms; and the Treasurer of the United States is hereby authorized to pay the said money to the said Riddell, cashier, in conformity to the provisions of this resolution, upon the approval by the Secretary of the Treasury of a bond in the sum of $50,000 of the said Riddell, payable to the United States of America.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana if he is able to say whether there is any precedent for this resolution?

Mr. DIXON of Indiana. No; I do not know that there is. I consulted with the Treasurer and also with the comptroller, and it seems that at one time in the Forty-seventh Congress they passed a bill authorizing the Treasurer of the United States to pay the Members in such a contingency. In conference with the Secretary of the Treasury he said that he would very much prefer to have it this way on account of the bookkeeping.

Mr. MANN. Then this has the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. DIXON of Indiana. The Secretary of the Treasury was not there, but his chief assistant read it and the comptroller read it, and both approved it.

Mr. MANN. Who pays the expense of this bond?

Mr. DIXON of Indiana. Mr. Riddell is already under bond for $50,000, and it will be made payable to the United States instead of to Mr. Jackson.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. DIXON of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. The resolution provides for a bond of $50,000, but the terms of the bond are not provided in the resolution.

Mr. DIXON of Indiana. No; it provides that the bond shall be satisfactory to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. BARTLETT. Ordinarily in providing for a bond in special cases the conditions are for the faithful performance of the duty, or the faithful payment of the money. I merely make the suggestion to the gentleman.

Mr. DIXON of Indiana. At the Treasury they said this would be satisfactory.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to bills of the following titles, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conferences asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. MCCUMBER, Mr. BURNHAM, and Mr. SHIVELY:

H. R. 21230. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

H. R. 20585. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

H. R. 21597. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war; and

H. R. 22261. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 23557. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and to certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war; and

H. R. 23063. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. KOPP, by unanimus consent, was given leave of absence indefinitely, on account of important business.

TERMS OF PRESIDENT, VICE PRESIDENT, SENATORS, AND REPRESENTATIVES.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for one hour.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. This rule provides that immediately on the adoption of this resolution, House resolution 204 shall be taken up for consideration. The parliamentary inquiry is whether, that rule having been adopted by the House, proceedings can now be interrupted so as to set aside the rule by a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Yes. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin wish to make a request for unanimous consent?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Very well; I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LENROOT. Before entering on the general debate, I want to ask whether or not an agreement can not be entered into for general debate, leaving some time for the reading of the bill and amendments?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I am perfectly willing, as far as I am concerned.

Mr. LENROOT. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to two hours.

Mr. SHERLEY. I object.

Mr. LENROOT. Three hours?

Mr. SHERLEY. I again object. It was the Committee on Rules that forced us into this situation.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the situation is not bad, and we will take care of it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the rule just adopted provides for four hours' debate on the joint resolution and pending amendments, and, of course, any gentleman who secures recognition from the Chair has the right to offer any pertinent amendment to this resolution. The rule does not undertake to prevent the offering of amendments and the freest discussion of this resolution. Notwithstanding the efforts of some gentlemen to make it appear that this is a gag rule and brought in for the purpose of precluding amendments, such is not the case. The rule provides for a vote on the joint resolution and all pending amendments, and so far as I am personally concerned, it would please me if any gentleman who thinks he can improve this joint resolution to have him offer his amendment and submit it to the judgment of the House.

This should be a nonpartisan question. Gentlemen should lay aside all feeling and prejudice, if there be any on this occasion, and take up the questions involved and consider them as become Representatives of the people who have a great duty to perform. I shall not be chagrined personally if this joint resolution is not passed through the House, for it is nothing to me. It proposes a great reform, which will be for the betterment of our Government and make the Constitution conform to the necessities and emergencies of the times.

If I may have the attention of gentlemen, permit me briefly to point out what is proposed in the joint resolution. Under the present Constitution it happens that inauguration day falls on the 4th day of March, although the 4th day of March appears nowhere in the Constitution except in the twelfth amendment, and did not appear there until some years after this Government was organized, when the contest arose between Thomas Jefferson and Aaron Burr for the Presidency of the United States. It was then necessary to submit to the States the twelfth amendment, when, for the first and only time, the 4th day of March appeared in that instrument. It is not prescribed there that the 4th day of March shall be the day of the inauguration, but it so happens that this Government, which began its career under the organization by our fathers, commenced operations on the first Wednesday in March, which was the 4th day of March, and then became the beginning and the ending of the terms of the President, Vice President, Senators, and Representatives. Their terms began on the 4th day of March, although George Washington was not inaugurated as President of the United States until the 30th day of April thereafter, because a quorum had not appeared in either branch of Congress until several days after the 4th day of March, when the vote for the President and Vice President could be counted. Washington went out of office after he had served two months less than four years the first term.

It is now said that we are extending the term of some President. What if we do? We are doing no more than was done by our fathers when they lessened the term of a President and took from him 60 days. What merit is there in an objection of that kind? A constitutional amendment is necessary in order to change the date of inauguration, and it can not be brought about by statute or joint resolution. You can not shorten the terms of Members of this House and of the Senate by statute or joint resolution, and in order to change the beginning of terms of Members of Congress from the 4th day of March you must either curtail the term of some future Congress or extend it. This can only be done by constitutional amendment.

Having recited that much of our early history, permit me to analyze the resolution. It proposes five things:

First. There is a proposition that, beginning with the Sixty-third Congress, the term of office of the President chosen at the election of November, 1912, immediately preceding, shall continue until the last Thursday of April, 1917, at noon, and the last Thursday of April at noon shall thereafter be the commencement and termination of the official term of the President and Vice President.

Second. Upon the ratification of the proposed amendment the second Tuesday of January at noon shall constitute the commencement and termination of the official terms of the Senators and Members of the House of Representatives. The Congress in existence when the Members of the first House of Representatives are elected, which is always the short session, immediately following the general election for Representatives in Congress, after the ratification of this amendment, shall hold no annual session after such election, and such short session of Congress as now provided shall terminate on the second Tuesday of January immediately following. The Senators whose existing term would otherwise expire on the 4th of March next succeeding the day on which the term of the first Congress shall commence after the ratification of this amendment shall continue in office until their successors are appointed or elected.

Third. When the proposed amendment becomes operative Congress shall assemble at least once in each year on the second Tuesday in January, unless Congress shall by law appoint a different day. This may be done by joint resolution or statute, as was frequently done in the early days of our history.

Fourth. In the proposed amendment the time for an election of a President, when that duty devolves upon the House, is extended to the last Thursday in April, because it is limited now by amendment 12 to the 4th day of March, and this extends the time so as to make it conform to the inauguration day.

Fifth. In the last two sentences of the proposed amendment Congress is given power to provide by law for the danger of the death of the President elect, or of the death of the President elect and Vice President elect, before the beginning of their terms of office, as well as for the failure to elect such officers. The joint resolution here reported is indicated by showing the present article 12 in Roman type and the proposed changes in italics. So if anyone will take the resolution, which is in this report set forth at length, it will be found that the present article 12 is set out in Roman type and the proposed changes are set out in italics, which are the additions or the new parts of article 12.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are five important changes proposed by this joint resolution which, if submitted to the States of this Union, I believe will be ratified by a three-fourths vote. There may be some who believe that this inauguration event should occur in January. There may be others who think it should be in March, as it is now, and there may be those who contend it should occur on the last Thursday in April, as I insist. The truth is our fathers thought and planned and desired that this Government should begin its career on the first Monday in December; that the President should then be inaugurated; that Congress should convene on that day; but, by reason of certain States not having ratified the Constitution in time, nine of them not having given their assent, it was impossible to carry out the plan and desires of our fathers, and they were unable to inaugurate this Government on the first Monday in December. So they waited for certain legislatures to act on the Constitution and ratify it, but when they finally acted the first Monday in December had passed. The next thing done was that the constitutional convention which framed this Constitution in Philadelphia passed a resolution, which is set out in the report herewith, calling upon the Congress of the Confederation of States to set a time when they would begin operations under the new Constitution. The resolution which was passed by the constitutional convention was received, and George Washington wrote a long letter explaining what had been done, and then the Congress passed a resolution that on a certain date elections should be held and the people should vote for President and Vice President, for Senators and Representatives, and on another day the electors for President should convene and cast their votes for President and Vice President, and in the same resolution it provided that the first Wednesday in March, which happened to be the 4th of March, this Government should begin its operations under the new Constitution.

Now, gentlemen, that is the way the 4th of March had its beginning for the presidential term. There ought to be some change. That situation brought about the short session of Congress, because when you elect a Member of Congress in November then the old Members serve until the 4th day of March, and Congress convenes in December and their terms terminate on the 4th day of March and then the terms of the new Members commence, and unless an extraordinary session is called they draw their salary for nine months before they take the oath of office and really begin their service. For nine months we are without a Speaker and an organization of the House. If you wish to get rid of the short session and desire to eliminate this three months' session, where more vicious legislation is put through than at any other time during the existence of the Congress, you can only do it by a constitutional amendment. If you do this, you can provide for the convening of Congress on the second Tuesday in January or the third or the fourth, whenever you please. The new Congress will go into power 60 days, a little less or more, after it is elected. Members who have been discredited at home go out of office in 60 days, a little more or less, and the new administration begins its term. But it is said we prolong the term of the President. The President's term is prolonged under the present system, and no matter how you write your amendment, no matter in what phraseology you couch it, it is utterly impossible not to lap over the term of the President after the election.

You must give him time to make his preparations to get out. You must give Congress time to count the votes and prepare for the inauguration. The President is elected for four years anyway. Here we have the spectacle of the Republican President in power two years after there is a Democratic House. Who knows what may be the result of the coming election? Who can say that this House may not again be Democratic and the Senate Democratic? Or that this House might not be Republican and the Senate Democratic, and with a Democratic President? You can not make these objections fit into one another. So here is the sensible thing to do. The reasonable thing is to eliminate this short session by a constitutional amendment, provide that 60 days after this Congress is elected it shall take the oath of office, Congress shall convene and shall begin its labors.

And then from the second Tuesday in January it can sit as long as both bodies agree, whether 60 days or 9 months or 11 months, or whatever time it chooses. And the other session shall begin the second Tuesday in January and may run until the next Congress, which begins on the second Tuesday of January following. There will be no election coming between to distract the attention of Members. A Member can remain here until the business is finished, and when Congress has adjourned it will not be necessary to return home and enter a campaign, as he must do under the present arrangement. So there will be no election between sessions of Congress. Members will have nothing to do except devote their attention to their public duties. There will be no campaigns at home. That will be attended to just before the convening of the first session of the Congress to which they are elected.

Now, gentlemen, is not there some wisdom in such a proposition? Have we not seen bills fail here in the short session that should have passed? Have we not seen things put through in a few brief moments after midnight without due consideration that could not be passed in that way if this constitutional amendment should be adopted?

Take up the propositions one after another. If you are not in favor of changing the inauguration date in this way, then choose some date that suits you. For six long years I have studied this question. I have conversed with a majority of the Members of this House and now ask some gentleman to propose a date that would suit everybody if he can. It is out of the question. The 4th of March does not suit them; the second Tuesday in January would not suit them. Let us see if we can not get together on a reasonable date for inauguration of the President and change this system and put it back where our fathers intended it should be in the beginning of our Government.

On the inauguration proposition, what do you want? If you do not like the last Thursday in April, propose an amendment, which you may do, and change, in a few words, the date, and I will not have a word to say if the House so wills. Some say that this change is only desired by the local inhabitants of Washington City. Why, gentlemen, practically every governor in the United States has appealed to Congress to change the inauguration date. We have sentiment coming up to us from all over the United States asking for this change. There are those who say they do not care how cruel the weather may be; that they would leave it at it is. I remember when Mr. Taft was inaugurated as President of the United States on the 4th day of March as one of the bitterest and coldest days ever experienced in Washington. There was a terrible snowstorm blowing all day.

Thousands upon thousands had come here from every part of the country. They had come from the South, from the North, from the far West, from Pennsylvania and Virginia, and from all over this land, to witness a patriotic ceremony in the inauguration of the President of the United States. Many of you remember that day, and what a terrible ordeal those men in the uniform of the United States suffered. It meant death and destruction to our soldiers and sailors assembled here. I have heard men say the more cruel the day the better it would be. Are we going to decide a great question on such reasoning as that? Are we going to allow ourselves to say our form of Government can not be changed in that respect, when a simple resolution changing the Constitution will bring about the desired result?

Gentlemen, let us take up the other proposition, about the hiatus in the Constitution. Examine that provision to which I have referred, which is on page 98 of the Constitution, Manual, and Digest, and you will find that there is a provision for electing a successor to the President and Vice President after their inauguration. Our fathers made ample provision in that regard. But notwithstanding the reasoning and argument of the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON], I undertake to say that Blaine and Hoar and Walthall and George and Ransom and Vance and Vest, and all of those Senators who voted for the proposition to cure that defect in the Constitution were absolutely correct. If any man pretending to be a lawyer will read the Constitution, he will find that if the President-elect and the Vice President-elect die between the casting of the electoral vote and inauguration day there is no power in our Constitution to fill the vacancies for four years.

There is written in this amendment the simple language used by Senator Hoar, which passed the Senate on two occasions. It is not my language. If gentlemen want to criticize it, let them criticize the phraseology of that great lawyer, so long representing the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. The Committee on the Judiciary carefully worked it out. They submitted it to the Senate and passed it through that body, and then it came over here, and I am sorry to say it was lost in some committee of the House. Who will oppose curing that defect in the Constitution? What is there radical and revolutionary in it that causes gentlemen to shrink?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I do.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is it not that same lack of interest which makes people absent themselves here while the author of it is discussing it?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Well, I am glad at least to say that the absence of so many distinguished gentlemen is compensated by the presence of my friend from Kentucky.

Mr. SHERLEY. But the Constitution, which the gentleman is treating so lightly, requires that two-thirds of the House shall vote for it.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Oh, twice the Committee on the Judiciary has reported that resolution. This resolution has been reported for about six months, and has been on the calendar, and I have put the report in the hands of every Member on both sides of this House, and asked them to consider it in order that no one might say there is snap judgment. And, so far as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] is concerned, I do not expect to convince him, I am sorry to say, on this or any other matter.

But, Mr. Speaker, here is a plain proposition that can be understood. If Members will only take advantage of the report that has been filed and read it, they can vote intelligently on it. There is no difficulty in understanding it. The facts are set out at length. There are appended to it documents bearing on the question giving the history. It makes no real difference to me whether gentlemen express great approval, or whether they vote for it or against. It is not with me a personal matter. But I believe there is an interest in it throughout the country, and it matters not to me whether or not I father the resolution, whether or not I am the author of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States. That is immaterial. The important thing is that this inauguration date should be changed, and along with it these other things ought to be written in the Constitution. And I believe if this House will submit the amendments to the various States, no matter what the inauguration day may be, eliminating the short session and thus providing a long session for the convening of Congress in January and curing the hiatus pointed out, it will be ratified.

It is not an unimportant question. It is a great question for the American people to perfect their organic law, and all that I desire is to have the judgment of my colleagues in this House. There are many reasons that I could urge in favor of changing the date of the inauguration from the inclement day of March 4 to a later date, but those things are set out in the report; and, notwithstanding what the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON] has said, if you will take this report you will find appended a statement from the health department and from the Weather Bureau giving the state of the weather for the last 20 years and showing what the 4th of March has been during each of those years. It is idle to say that the 4th of March is an appropriate time for that ceremony. The experience of more than a hundred years has demonstrated that such is a failure and was not the day designed by the framers of the Constitution. And I here submit a statement throwing light on the inauguration days:

CHANGING INAUGURATION DAY.

[Baltimore Evening Sun.]

After three years of discussion and delay Mr. HENRY'S resolution changing inauguration day from March 4 to the last Tuesday in April is reported favorably by the House Committee on the Judiciary, and the indications are that it will quickly pass the House. It involves, of course, an amendment to the Constitution, for whenever the proposed change is made the term of the outgoing President will be lengthened by about seven weeks, and so it must receive a two-thirds majority in each House, and after that it must be approved by the legislatures of three-fourths of the States. Consequently 1917, and not earlier, has been specified as the time when the change will take place if the amendment is approved.

The present movement is not new. It was launched so long ago, in truth, that nobody remembers the date. After the second Cleveland inauguration, on March 4, 1893, a day of snow and high wind, it gained a good deal of strength, but Congress, after a tedious discussion, dropped the matter, and it was not revived until after the Taft inauguration, in 1909, when the weather was so bad that most of the customary ceremonies had to be abandoned. As the following brief table shows, the chances of bad weather on inauguration day are about two in three:

Year.	President.	Weather.
1873....	Grant	Cold, high wind.
1877....	Hayes	Snow and wind.
1881....	Garfield	Sleet on ground.
1885....	Cleveland	Fair and cold.
1889....	Harrison	Cold rain.
1893....	Cleveland	Snow, cold, gale.
1897....	McKinley	Clear.
1901....	McKinley	Drenching rain.
1905....	Roosevelt	Fine.
1909....	Taft	Blizzard.

Thus it appears that since 1873 there have been but three fine inauguration days, and on one of these the temperature was uncomfortably low. We all know the result. Thousands of participants, exposed to wind and cold, fall ill afterwards and many of them die. On several occasions the incoming President has himself suffered much, and there is always the risk that he may be seriously and even fatally affected. Late in April the weather is almost certain to be fine, and even should there be rain it is commonly warm rain, and unaccompanied by snow, sleet, or Arctic winds.

The Constitution did not provide where Congress should assemble. The first session of Congress was held in the city of New York, and George Washington was inaugurated there.

I do not think there was ever a better time to take up an amendment to the Constitution when the people are stirred to action, and when they are more patriotic, perhaps, than ever in the history of this Government. And let me say to gentlemen that our Constitution has been amended on numerous occasions. Only a few years ago we submitted an amendment providing for an income tax. We have submitted amendments on numerous occasions.

The other day we submitted an amendment providing for the greatest reform that has come to the American people since the foundation of the Government, the election of Senators by a direct vote of the people. [Applause.] Now is the occasion to seize the opportunity and amend this Constitution as it should be. And in the wisdom of the American people it will not be many months until the income-tax amendment and the one providing for electing Senators by direct vote of the people will be written into this Constitution as part of our governmental system. [Applause.]

Now, by providing for these three changes, for another date for the convening of Congress, and for the beginning of the term of the President, Vice President, Senators, and Representatives, you have perfected this system, which has proven to be the greatest upon which the sun ever shone.

Yes, now is the time to submit the amendment, when all the people who are taking governmental affairs in their hands will assemble around the ballot box and vote and instruct their senators and representatives in the State legislatures to recognize their will and carry out their commands. [Applause.]

Now is the time to do it, when a few individuals can not sneak into legislatures and thwart the will of the American people. Let us submit these amendments now. Why should gentlemen be afraid of this? Some men are afraid of amending the Constitution. Others are afraid they can not properly word the amendment, and are afraid of themselves.

The system we have now is good, and the people are electing the President just as fast as they can in every State. If I would accede to the desires of every one of my friends and put all the amendments on that they propose we would handicap this joint resolution so that it would never be heard of again. One friend wanted to make the term of Representatives three years. Another one sitting by said, "I would never vote for that in the world; let us make it four years." [Laughter.] When an amendment of that sort was submitted once it was voted down by a large majority in the House. If we were to make the term of a Representative for life we might get some votes on both sides. [Laughter.]

Mr. RODDENBERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I will yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. RODDENBERY. What are the views of the gentleman with reference to submitting an amendment providing that the terms of office of Members of Congress, Senators, and the term of the Vice President shall begin on the first Monday in December?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I have thought of that a great deal, and would not object to it but from the fact that you have your elections in November, and under some State constitutions you can not get your certificate of election until the end of 40 days, and therefore a Member elect would not have his certificate in time to come here in December. So I have concluded, after ransacking all the constitutions of the States in the Union, that the ideal time to begin a session of Congress would be the second Tuesday in January. In the State of Oregon they elect their Representatives in June. In two other States, Maine and Vermont, they elect them in September, but in the great majority of States on the second Tuesday in November, and that day is fixed by the constitutions of various States, and you could not have the amendment that the gentleman speaks of without amending those State constitutions. So when you think of these things and make a search you will find that you run up against constitutional provisions in some States and provisions in the Constitution of the United States. But if you take the matter and endeavor to work it out, study the reports of Senator Hoar and Senator Vest and Senator Platt, of Connecticut, and those great lawyers on the Judiciary Committee, and others named, you will come to the conclusion that there is only one way, and that is as it is worked out here, and the only place where there should be room for difference of opinion is as to the proper day for the inauguration of President.

You can not inaugurate the President on the day that Congress convenes, no matter when you put it, because Congress must begin, organize under the Constitution in regular session, the Senate must come over here, the Vice President must preside with the Speaker, the Vice President must take the envelopes containing the electoral votes, open them in the presence of the joint session, and hand them down to the tellers in front of the Speaker's desk. Those are the constitutional requirements for these things. Let good judgment rule, and join in passing this resolution demanded by the American citizens.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FLOYD] is recognized.

Mr. STERLING rose.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to speak in opposition to the resolution.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STERLING. I will ask if the time upon this side is controlled, or if the time has been equally divided?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No division of the time has been arranged. Recognition is in the discretion of the Chair. The gentleman from Arkansas is a member of the Judiciary Committee, and the Chair understands is opposed to the resolution. The gentleman from Arkansas is recognized.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, may I now ask the gentleman from Arkansas a question?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GARNER. It is a question that I intended to ask my colleague, but he said he did not have the time to answer it.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DIES. Does the gentleman from Arkansas desire to speak in opposition to the amendment?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Yes; I do.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I rose for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] a question as to the effect of this resolution, but he did not have the time to answer it, it seemed. It is a question which I think of great importance, so far as the State of Texas is concerned. This resolution provides that on the second Tuesday in January the office of Senators and Representatives shall expire. The Legislature of the State of Texas meets for the election of a Senator on the second Tuesday in January. They do not elect for some two or three weeks under the form of the present constitution. Would there be a vacancy in the Senate of the United States from the State of Texas during that interim?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Just a moment, and I will take it out of my time. I will say to the gentleman that the Senators of the United States are elected under a statute of the United States, and that statute provides that we elect Senators two weeks after the convening of the legislatures. Now, that statute can be amended providing for the election on the first day of the convening of the legislatures, which would cure the defect in Texas and other States.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I am not taking this out of the gentleman's time.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. But I have the floor.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry: How does the gentleman from Arkansas get the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognized him.

Mr. MANN. How came he to be recognized by the Chair? I insist that this side of the House is entitled to recognition.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. I am opposed to the resolution offered by the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MANN. Whether the gentleman is opposed to it or not, this side of the House is entitled to recognition.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order the gentleman is not in order.

Mr. MANN. I am in order; I am making a parliamentary inquiry. How does the gentleman from Arkansas get the floor?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. By recognition from the Chair.

Mr. MANN. Does the Chair consider that there is a Republican side of the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman stated he was opposed to the resolution and secured recognition from the Chair.

Mr. MANN. But this side of the House is entitled, certainly, to some time in opposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that no Republican arose and asked for recognition.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt gentlemen arose if the Chair had looked around to see them, but he only recognized the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman from Illinois is mistaken. The gentleman from Texas had the floor, and the gentleman from Texas ceased and yielded to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. MANN. That was rigged in and the gentleman from Arkansas takes the floor in his own right, and I insist the gentleman from Arkansas is not entitled to recognition.

Mr. SHERLEY. But, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Arkansas is entitled to recognition in opposition unless some member of the committee reporting this resolution had claimed the floor, and then it would be in the discretion of the Chair. There is no rule of this House that divides this House here in the middle of the aisle. It is not a political question.

Mr. MANN. It is only one of fair play.

Mr. SHERLEY. And fair play is being recognized, and it is not for the gentleman from Illinois to make the inference that the Chair has not been fair.

Mr. MANN. The ranking Republican on the Committee on the Judiciary was entitled to the floor.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present. You will have to have men here to do that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Eighty-five Members are present; not a quorum.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

Mr. MANN. I have made a motion to adjourn, and that is a preferential motion.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were—ayes 25, noes 36.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia, who moves a call of the House.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. HENRY of Texas) there were—ayes 27, noes 33.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Nineteen gentlemen have arisen, a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are ordered.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that 19 is not a sufficient number; we are in the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order is overruled. There were 50 present according to the last count.

Mr. MANN. That could only be determined by taking the other side.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Nobody has demanded the other side, and I make the point of order it is too late.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It takes one-fifth of those present, and the point of order is overruled.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 126, nays 59, answered "present" 14, not voting 194, as follows:

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call my name.

So a call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk announced the following additional pairs:

For the session:

Until further notice:

Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio with Mr. ANTHONY.

Mr. ANSBERRY with Mr. CRAGO.

Mr. BURLESON with Mr. HELGESEN.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas with Mr. WOOD of New Jersey.

Mr. LEVY with Mr. MCGUIRE of Oklahoma.

Mr. WEBB with Mr. WILLIS.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I would like to vote "aye."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall when his name was called?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. No.

The SPEAKER. The only way the gentleman can vote is to vote "present."

The name of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Moss] was called, and he voted "Present."

The SPEAKER. The roll call discloses that 200 Members have voted—a quorum being present.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As a quorum is present, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] moves to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 109, noes 0.

So the motion to dispense with further proceedings under the call was agreed to.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. At what time under this rule will the vote be taken?

The SPEAKER. The vote will be taken four hours after the debate began, taking out the time that has been used.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will that time be taken out?

The SPEAKER. Of course that time will be taken out. "Four hours of debate," the rules says.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I beg the Chair's pardon, but——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will examine the rule.

Mr. MANN. If the Chair will permit me, I will read the rule. It is very short.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. The rule reads:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution House joint resolution 204 be taken up for consideration, and at the expiration of four hours a vote be taken upon the resolution and all pending amendments thereto.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposed, when he said what he did before, that the rule provided for four hours' debate. Undoubtedly the vote must be taken at the end of four hours after the debate began.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That is the reason why I asked the question. Then the vote must be taken four hours after the rule was adopted, regardless of whether the rest of the time be taken up in roll calls or not?

The SPEAKER. Yes; under this peculiar rule that is the case. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. "Peculiar" is a very modest word for it.

Mr. BUTLER. This is a hot way to amend the Constitution. [Laughter.]

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, if gentlemen would rather filibuster than debate the rule, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to speak in opposition to this resolution. I desire to call attention to what I think is a serious defect in the resolution. This proposes an amendment to the Constitution——

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DIES. Do I understand that under this peculiar rule a plea of personal privilege is not in order?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman understand what?

Mr. DIES. Am I to understand that under this peculiar rule a plea of personal privilege is not in order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not take the gentleman from Arkansas off the floor.

Mr. DIES. By an appeal to personal privilege?

The SPEAKER. By anything. [Applause.]

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention to one or two points of objection to the joint resolution now under consideration. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] has said that this is not a party question, and it is not. It deals with the Constitution of the United States. It affects all the people of all parties, and I insist that when we consider the fact that during the entire history of our Republic there have been only 15 amendments to the Constitution, and that 12 of those amendments were made by the very men who framed the Constitution itself and that the other three amendments were made after four years of terrible war in this country, as a result of that conflict, and that with these exceptions the people of the United States have stood firmly by the Constitution, it is evident that it is not their disposition to seek to amend it lightly. And I want to declare here that no greater constitutional chart of the rights of any people has ever been written than this Constitution of the United States.

I am not one of those who oppose all amendments to the Constitution. Do not understand me in that way. I am one of those who insist that when we do make amendments to the Constitution we ought to improve the Constitution; that when we submit amendments to the Constitution there ought to be some great public interest involved, affecting the people of the United States; and that to make a greater holiday for Washington is no justification for an amendment to the Federal Constitution. [Applause.]

Now, I want to call your attention to what in my judgment is a serious defect in this resolution as it has been drafted, and in order to do so I want first to call your attention to provisions in the first and second sections thereof. Section 1 proposes an amendment to Article XII. Section 1 reads as follows:

SECTION 1. Beginning with the Sixty-third Congress, the term of office of the President and Vice President chosen at the election immediately preceding shall continue until the last Thursday of April, in the year 1917, at noon, and the last Thursday of April, at noon, shall thereafter be the commencement and termination of the official term of the President and Vice President.

Now, I want to call attention to the peculiar wording of that provision. I understand that some gentlemen are advocating the proposition now that we ought to have a six-year term for President, and make him ineligible for a second term. But if you will read the language of this provision, it is susceptible of the construction that this proposed amendment limits the term of President to one year. Read it and see. Let me read it again:

SECTION 1. Beginning with the Sixty-third Congress, the term of office of the President and Vice President chosen at the election immediately preceding shall continue until the last Thursday of April, in the year 1917, at noon, and the last Thursday of April, at noon, shall thereafter be the commencement and termination of the official term of the President and Vice President.

If that does not mean every year, what does it mean? It does not say every successive four years. It says—

Thereafter—

Every year. Now, if the meaning of that language is not to the effect that the President is to be elected for one year, what does it mean?

It is true Article II of the present Constitution says that the President shall have a term of four years, but this new amendment to the Constitution says that after 1917 the term shall begin and end on the last Thursday of April without any qualifying words.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Yes.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I simply desire to suggest to the gentleman we are dealing with terms, and if the gentleman will take pains to read the whole Constitution and the other articles, he will find his point is not well taken.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Yes; but you are amending the Constitution, and the subsequent amendment, when it comes in conflict with any of the provisions of the Constitution, gives rise to a construction and contention that the intention of the people was to change the original provision. And I will call your attention to some other provisions in this particular amendment upon which you rely, that appear to make it further conflicting with the original instrument.

That is one objection. It is not clear what it means. It is not definite, and therefore is objectionable.

Now, there is another proposition I wish to consider.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Yes.

Mr. MANN. In speaking of its being indefinite, suppose this amendment to the Constitution was submitted, and on the 4th of March, 1917, it had not yet been ratified by three-fourths of the States. Then I take it that the President then in office would go out and the President who had been elected would go in on the 4th of March.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. I should think so.

Mr. MANN. Suppose that between that time and the last Thursday in April a sufficient number of additional States should ratify the amendment so that three-fourths of the States had ratified the amendment. Who would be President of the United States? And would war ensue?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. That would create another complication. I can not tell the gentleman from Illinois who would be President or what might happen in such contingency, and I want to say in this connection that there are numbers of complications that might be produced and arise by reason of this amendment not only in the election of the President but in the election of Representatives and Senators, and in other ways.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will yield to somebody to say who would be President, and whether the man who had been sworn in would be kicked out and another one would take his place.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. I am going to discuss later who would be President in certain contingencies.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Would Roosevelt be President?

Mr. MANN. I can tell the gentleman that Roosevelt will be President until the 4th of March, 1917, anyway.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Now, I wish to call attention to another provision and to another vital objection to this amendment. Section 2 provides that—

> The second Tuesday of January, at noon, shall constitute the commencement and termination of the official term of the Senators and Members of the House of Representatives. The Congress in existence when the Members of the first House of Representatives are elected after the ratification of this amendment shall hold no annual session after such election, and its term shall expire on the second Tuesday of the January immediately following. The Senators whose existing term would otherwise expire on the 4th day of March next succeeding the day on which the term of the first Congress shall commence after the ratification of this amendment shall continue in office until their successors are appointed or elected. Congress shall assemble at least once in each year, and such meeting shall be on the second Tuesday in January unless Congress shall by law appoint a different day.

Now, what is proposed? Take section 1 and section 2 together. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] proposes, by constitutional amendment, to lengthen the term of some one President and make the expiration and beginning of all future terms on the 30th day of April. In the same amendment he proposes to make the beginning and the end of the terms of Members of Congress on the second Tuesday in January, thereby disjointing the Constitution. Thus you destroy the uniformity and symmetry of those constitutional provisions relating to the terms of Representatives, Senators, and the President in a most vital respect, and such fundamental change will affect and may utterly destroy the autonomy of the successful party after any presidential election, and especially will this be true where an adverse or opposite political party succeeds at the election.

Now, what reason is there that the new administration and the Members of the new Congress should not go in at the same time? This is a most vital objection to this proposed legislation. The President's term necessarily ends the 30th of April; the terms of Members of Congress commence and end on the second Tuesday in January. What is the reason for that? Nearly four months intervene; the new Congress comes in, but the old President holds on to hamper, to interfere, and to block any legislation that might be sought to be enacted by the new Congress.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Yes.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Is not the old President holding over now over a Democratic House?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Yes; but as one Democrat I do not desire to pass any legislation that will give him 30 days additional term of office.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. But you expect a Democratic President next year.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. It does not matter; I am opposed to this on principle. The Constitution of the United States ought to be simple and harmonious. I think the Representatives in Congress, Senators, and President ought to take their offices on the same day, and I think the fundamental defect in this amendment is the separation of these two events, providing that the President shall take his seat at one time and Congress shall be organized and enter upon their duties three or four months before a newly elected President is qualified and inaugurated.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. SIMS. Does not the gentleman know that the third Tuesday of April is a much better time to have a street fair and a parade, which is a matter that some overlook?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. I do not think that we ought to deal with the Constitution on information gathered from reports of the Weather Bureau or at the instance of people who want a great quadrennial pageant and parade in the city of Washington. This is too serious a proposition. Under our form of government the people are supposed to rule, and theoretically they do rule, and we ought to stand for legislation that will enable the majority to rule; and where the majority in one party succeeds the other we ought to throw the full machinery of the newly elected party into power and let them exercise their efforts to carry out the reforms in legislation that they have pledged themselves to the people that they would enact.

Why hamper the new Congress for four months with the old President, antagonizing the wants of the people who have elected the Congress and the new President? This is no party matter. If past history is repeated, this Constitution will stand unchanged for another 100 years. What matter who is going to be President for the next four years when we are dealing with great fundamental propositions that will last for a hundred and, I doubt not, for a thousand years if only right principles are incorporated into our fundamental law and if we remain true to our past traditions, true to the spirit of the fathers, and true to the principles of those great men who formulated, ordained, and established the Constitution of the United States?

Mr. BOOHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. I will.

Mr. BOOHER. I would like to ask the gentleman if he thinks the second section fixes the length of the term of a Member of Congress or of a Senator. I will read the language I refer to:

> The Congress in existence when the Members of the first House of Representatives are elected after the ratification of this amendment shall hold no annual session after such election, and its term shall expire on the second Tuesday of the January immediately following.

What does that language mean?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. It means that the Congress that is in existence at the time of the ratification of this amendment shall cease in January instead of the 4th of March, and the effect will be to cut off the difference of time in the terms of Representatives then in office between the second Tuesday in January and the 4th of March. In other words, their terms will be cut short about two months.

Mr. BOOHER. Now, suppose that they have the election in November, when Members of Congress are elected, and before the second Tuesday in January sufficient States should ratify this amendment to the Constitution, do these Members of Congress go out of office under this peculiar language?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. I would think so. They would go out according to the meaning of the language, and this brings up any number of complications about the election of Senators, about the terms of Senators, and the terms of Congressmen. Why, this very provision is ambiguous as to the terms of Senators. Let me call attention to the fact that while it provides that the terms of Members of Congress in existence at the time of the ratification of the amendment shall go out of office on the second Tuesday of January, it does not provide that Senators whose terms are expiring shall go out, but that they shall continue until their successors are elected and qualified. So we have the anomalous condition of the President coming in at one date, the Representatives in Congress at another date, and the Senators at another date, the latter continuing until their successors are elected and qualified.

There is another proposition to which I wish to call attention. The distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] says there is one provision in this resolution that ought to justify every Member of Congress in voting for it, and he calls attention to the hiatus that might occur in the event that the President and Vice President, after the casting up of the electoral votes, should die before the 4th of March following. But does the gentleman propose any direct remedy in this proposed amendment for such a defect in the Federal Constitution, if such a defect there be? I think not. I think the provision of the gentleman from Texas in trying to cure that defect in the Constitution, if there be such defect, is not a safe remedy in such contingency.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, may I interrupt the gentleman?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. DIES. Does not the gentleman think, in spite of all the weighty reasons he has given, that if this light and flippant change in the Constitution be made by this Congress it would give justification in precedent for great statesmen in some future Congress to make a more learned and more fundamental change in the law of the land? In other words, does not the gentleman think that our toying with the Constitution now in this indiscriminate manner might open the floodgates so that wise men coming after us could make material changes?

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I am not here to criticize the proponents of this measure. I am not here to criticize any Member who may desire to support it. I am here as a patriotic citizen, as a Representative of the people of the United States, to urge upon all men of all parties not to change the Constitution unless they change it for the better. Do not pass an amendment that is probably worse than the original instrument. I desire to call attention to this last provision, which I think does that:

> The Congress may by law provide for the case where there is no person entitled to hold the office of President or Vice President, declaring what officer shall then act as President, and such officer shall act accordingly until the disability shall be removed or a President shall be elected.

Let us suppose that at some time in the future some ambitious and unscrupulous man should succeed to the Presidency of the United States. Suppose that the new Congress elected should represent the views of the incumbent President and be of his party. Suppose that the new President elect should be of an opposite political party. Four months intervene after the new Congress, loyal to the old President, has assembled in Washington before the new President can be qualified—four long months for intrigue, four long months for plot, with an ambitious President in the White House, with a Congress loyal to him—and under this provision if something should happen to the President elect and the Vice President elect the Congress loyal to the party of the President who had been recently defeated would be the one to elect a new President, or to say what officer should hold the Presidency until his successor should be elected and qualified, and yet in this amendment of the gentleman from Texas there is no provision for a new election until the next presidential election—four years hence. In a contingency such as above described you put it in the power of Congress, without the consent and against the will of the people, to reelect or continue in office for four more years a President already repudiated at the polls.

Why did not the gentleman from Texas provide that when Congress should elect a new President in such contingency that the tenure of office of the person so elected should be only temporary, only until there could be a presidential election called and the people of the United States, through the properly constituted electorate, should elect a new President to succeed the old one? Why did he not also provide for the calling of a new election in such event? I think that is the most fatal provision in the whole amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas. It is fraught with dangerous and far-reaching consequences that may involve the perpetuity of the Government itself, and yet he urges it as the strong provision that should guarantee our support of it.

Mr. Speaker, I am most serious in my opposition to this resolution, and I have presented as best I could my objections to it. I thank you. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 35 minutes left.

Mr. FLOYD of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. STERLING rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. STERLING] is recognized for an hour.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes of that time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, in amending the Constitution in any particular we ought at least to be careful that we do not involve ourselves in greater difficulties than those from which we wish to escape. This amendment to the Constitution is proposed for the purpose of changing the date of inauguration and provides that, beginning with the Sixty-third Congress, the term of office of the President, and so forth, shall be changed. Suppose the amendment be not adopted until after the end of the Sixty-third Congress. There is no limitation in the Constitution as to when amendments shall be adopted. The only provision is that when they are submitted by the Congress they shall be adopted by three-fourths of the States. There is no time limit in the Constitution, and if this constitutional amendment should be submited to a vote of the people and be adopted by three-fourths of the States 10 years from now, it takes effect.

Possibly there would be no great difficulty in that case, but suppose this amendment be submitted to a vote of the people and be not adopted by the 4th of March, 1917—that there may be one State short. The old President goes out. The new President comes in on the 4th of March, and then between that time and the last Thursday in April the amendment receives the required constitutional support from the States. Who, then, is President? I defy any man to say, and when we deliberately propose an amendment to the Constitution which leaves in doubt who is President of the United States, we invite not merely controversy but we invite civil war. That ought never to be done in cold blood.

The President who has been sworn in on the 4th of March, 1917, would claim that he was the President because the constitutional amendment had not taken effect when he was sworn in. Who will undertake to say that the former President, whose term of office is extended by the terms of the amendment, would not have the right to also claim that he was President until the last Thursday in April? It seems to me that in adopting an amendment to the Constitution it ought at least to receive care enough to provide against a contingency of that sort. The simplest man can see the difficulty and I think could remove it by a short change in the phraseology, but under the rule by which we are operating now there is no chance for real consideration and no chance for real amendment to the proposition involved. And it seems to me that the only safe way to do is to vote against the change of parade day until at least a constitutional amendment has been properly prepared. If we want to amend the Constitution in reference to the term of President, what we ought to do is to make the presidential term six years and provide that a man can only be elected to that office for that one term. [Applause.] That would be the sensible thing to do. I heard the distinguished Speaker of this House, in an address some time this winter, declare that, in his judgment, the term of President ought to be six years and no chance for a President to use his office to seek a reelection. That is a proper amendment to the Constitution. Why do you not present something of importance to the people instead of a proposition to change parade day at the expense of difficulty perhaps as to when the term commences?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. Speaker, I now yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I think that all must realize the seriousness of the propositions that are before us. With the idea of the gentleman many of us sympathize, at least in part. I think there is coming a time when we will seriously consider whether there should be some change regarding the provision of the Constitution with regard to the length of the presidential term and, perhaps also, of the date of its commencement. And I think we are also of agreement upon the proposition that it is unfortunate that the service of Congressmen should commence so long after the election. But, Mr. Speaker, I very seriously doubt the wisdom of placing in one amendment two propositions relating to two separate departments of the Government. We ought to consider them, perhaps, with relation to each other, but I do not think they ought to be submitted to the people of the country together. There might be those who would support the one and not the other, and the expediency or wisdom of supporting the one and not the other provision might be dependent upon entirely different causes; and so it seems to me that it would have been much better if these proposed amendments should have been submitted to this House for consideration separately. I can hardly believe that gentlemen of the House can support this first section of this proposed amendment in its present form. It is so drawn that no one can tell what its effects may be. Notice its language:

> Beginning with the Sixty-third Congress the terms of office of the President and Vice President, etc., shall be determined, etc.

We are here called upon to determine when the term of President shall commence by the time when the Congress shall be elected; and, as was suggested by the gentleman from Illinois, unless three-fourths of the States shall have adopted this constitutional amendment before the election which is referred to by this section, then no one knows what this amendment may mean or what its effect will be. Certainly if the idea is worthy of serious consideration, then this section ought to be redrawn. I can hardly think, Mr. Speaker, that gentlemen here present can believe that it would be wise for us to adopt it in its present form because of these serious and inherent defects. It is to become a part of our fundamental law, not a law that may be repealed by any succeeding Congress; and if gentlemen really desire the idea that they suggest should become a part of the Constitution of the United States they should so frame it that it will be defensible in the arenas of the several States when they are called upon to consider it. It seems to me that gentlemen are very unwise who desire to see these changes made in thus presenting them for consideration. I should not favor under any circumstances a change of the Constitution that would provide that the Congress should commence on the first Tuesday of January and that the President should not be inaugurated until the last of April.

That certainly would be placing the President and Congress under embarrassments which it is easy to anticipate at this time and which might work great evil. The term of the President of the United States should commence, if a change is made in the date of the commencement of congressional terms, the last of January, or else the congressional term should be changed until it can approximately, at least, commence at the same time when the term for the President commences. I am certain, Mr. Speaker, that there can be no question as to the unwisdom of attempting to submit this amendment to the States. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has consumed seven minutes.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. STERLING. I will ask the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] how much time he desires?

Mr. LENROOT. Perhaps not over 10 minutes.

Mr. STERLING. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Speaker, I am heartily in favor of the more important provisions of this resolution. I am frank to say that I believe there is much to be said concerning the point raised by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER]. But even conceding that their construction of the first paragraph be correct, I have no hesitation in saying that—admitting it is defective in that respect—it is less defective than is the present Article XII taken as a whole. The more important part of this resolution is that which provides for Congress beginning its sessions 60 days after the election of its Members instead of the present method of a Congress remaining here and legislating after it has been repudiated by the people. That, to my mind, is the most important thing in this resolution, and if we must accept some defects in some contingencies, remote as they are, I am willing to trust another House to correct the defect named by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. What would the gentleman say as to the proposition of the time for electing Senators? In my State, and in most of the other States, the legislature meets in January. In our State next year we elect a Senator to succeed the senior Senator from Illinois. If this amendment had been in the Constitution we would have had to elect a Senator two years ago. Is this on the theory of getting men fresh from the people by electing them two years earlier than otherwise provided by law?

Mr. LENROOT. There may be something in the suggestion of the gentleman. I want to get back in the short time I have to what I consider the main proposition, and if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is correct, that if this resolution, adopted in its present form, will not permit the election of Senators by legislatures, as they are now elected, but would compel their election two years previous to the time they should assume their office, then I would thoroughly agree with the gentleman from Illinois that this resolution should not be adopted in its present form. But, Mr. Speaker, one most serious defect in the resolution in its present form, to my mind, is that which extends the term of the President and makes his term begin on the last Thursday in April. If that should be adopted in that form, we have this situation: A Congress commences its business on the second Tuesday in January, fresh from the people, but the old President, through half of the life of that Congress, acts as President, but in the middle of that session a new President comes in.

Let us suppose, Mr. Speaker, that we had an entire change of policy; that the old President is of one political party, the newly elected President is of another political party; then we would have nothing but chaos in that session of Congress. I propose and shall offer an amendment providing that the term of the President shall begin on the last Thursday in January, 16 days after the term of the Congressmen begins—16 days after the Congress convenes. That, Mr. Speaker, will give the new Congress 16 days in which to canvass the vote, and if the election should be thrown into the House it gives them 16 days in which to elect the President, if that shall be their duty.

Now, it may be said that that is too short a time. But, Mr. Speaker, we have national conventions, two of them, shortly coming on, with a prospect of a deadlock in one and perhaps in both of them, and yet no one will say that two weeks would not be ample time for either of those conventions to come to an agreement as to who their nominee for President shall be. And so two weeks will be ample time for the House of Representatives to canvass the vote or, if the election shall be thrown into the House, to elect a President.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer an amendment, which I will send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. MANN. Before the gentleman offers his amendment, will he yield for a question?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Suppose it would take two weeks to organize the House of Representatives, as it has done in the past on a number of occasions?

Mr. LENROOT. I will say in reply to that that it is not necessary, in order for the House to canvass the vote and perform its duty under this resolution, that it should organize through the election of a Speaker. The old Clerk calls the House to order, and it is a legal House, and it has done business in the past before the organization is completed by the election of a Speaker. And furthermore, it is within the power of the House to elect a Speaker pro tempore, and the action of the House would be entirely legal in canvassing the vote and electing a President, if that be its duty, whether the House be fully organized or not.

Mr. MANN. Even if there were contests, which in all likelihood would not be settled by that time?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that that was done in the First Congress.

Mr. MANN. But there were no contests.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. But it was done.

Mr. MANN. Anybody can see that there might be a great many contests under that arrangement.

Mr. GARNER. I would like to ask the gentleman what he thinks of the provision providing for the election of Senators two years in advance?

Mr. LENROOT. I have not looked into that.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CLAYTON). Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Does not the gentleman think that this House should be pretty sure about these fundamental matters before voting for a proposition of this kind?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes. It has been suggested to me, and there is no doubt in my mind about it, that long before 1917 Senators of the United States will be elected in November by popular vote, just as Representatives are now elected; and if that be true, of course the contention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] will not amount to anything.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. I do.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Under the rule, can we have the gentleman's amendment reported?

Mr. LENROOT. I have asked to have it reported.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend House joint resolution 204 by striking out the word "April" wherever the same occurs in the resolution and insert in lieu thereof the word "January."

Mr. LENROOT. Now, Mr. Speaker, that amendment, if adopted, will mean just this: That the President will take his office on the last Thursday in January instead of the last Thursday in April, as provided by the present resolution. And, furthermore, Mr. Speaker, it will entirely obviate the criticism that has been made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] as to the first section of the bill, because if the date is fixed on the second Thursday in January it would be an absolute impossibility for a newly elected President to take his office on the 4th of March, and the question then could not arise as to who was the President between the 4th of March and the last Thursday of April. So that, Mr. Speaker, if this amendment is adopted, it will make the first paragraph entirely clear, and there will be no possible danger of any misconstruction that might possibly be given to the paragraph.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. LENROOT. I do.

Mr. SLOAN. Does not the gentleman think it would be better, instead of fixing it as specified in the first section, as being this date following the election of the Sixty-third Congress, that the section should be changed so that it would read, "following the ratification of the amendment by the required number of States," so that it would be operative if it were adopted?

Mr. LENROOT. I have no objection to such a change. I am speaking now only of the amendment that I proposed, if it be adopted. Under that there will be no possible danger of the contingency arising spoken of by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

Now, Mr. Speaker, we get back to what this means. It means that if this amendment be adopted and this resolution be passed and finally ratified, we will have the administration, both executive and legislative, coming into power practically at the same time, as they ought to. There will be only 16 days' difference between the time the President takes office and the time Congress enters upon its duty, and there can be no objection to that short period of time, because we all know as a practical matter that no legislation is sent to the President during the first 16 days of a session of Congress.

Now, Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. I have another amendment on another subject that I desire to offer.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman leaves that I want to call his attention to the effect of his amendment to the first section, on page 2, line 1. Supposing the date were changed, as he suggests in line 2, from April to January, then the words "shall continue until" will not fit. I have an amendment prepared that I was going to offer on the subject, until the gentleman offered his. The words ought to be "shall expire." It would shorten the term, the gentleman must remember, instead of lengthening it.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; that is true.

Mr. NORRIS. So that the particular language, if left that way, would have no meaning.

Mr. LENROOT. I think the construction would be the same, but there is no question that the phraseology suggested by the gentleman would be preferable.

Mr. NORRIS. If the time is changed from after the 4th of March until before the 4th of March, then the term would expire sooner than it otherwise would.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DIES. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Seventy-nine Members present, not a quorum.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. If the House should adjourn at this time, will the pending matter be a special continuing order when the House next meets?

Mr. MANN. That is pretty hard on unanimous-consent day, if it is a continuing order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that an adjournment now could not displace the order for unanimous-consent or suspension day.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Then will it be a special continuing order on the following day, Tuesday?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair would hesitate to go into the field of prophecy. [Applause.] The Speaker of the House might rule on that when the contingency arose.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, this is a parliamentary inquiry and a respectful one, and the present occupant of the chair has the power of the permanent occupant in reference to a question of this sort.

Mr. MANN. That matter may require argument.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Speaker of the House might not agree with the opinion of the present occupant of the chair when that question arose; but the present occupant of the chair will give the gentleman his off-hand opinion, if he desires it, rather than be considered discourteous, as the present occupant of the chair, like the Speaker, desires to be courteous at all times.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I should like the Chair's opinion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion——

Mr. DIES. A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from Texas allow the Chair? The personal opinion of the present occupant of the chair is that the pending matter would be the business properly before the House on Tuesday.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Is not the question presented by the gentleman from Texas purely a question of order?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. Speaker, I do not think that motion is in order when the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] has the floor, and his time has not expired.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order was made that no quorum was present, and the Chair counted and ascertained that there were only 79 gentlemen present.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order that a motion to adjourn is not in order. The House has full privilege to adopt a rule which shuts out a motion to adjourn, and the rule which the House adopted this afternoon provides that at the expiration of four hours a vote shall be taken upon the resolution. Now, the House having adopted an order of that kind, it is not within the province of the House to adjourn unless it reconsiders the vote by which it adopted the order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will rule on the point of order raised by the gentleman from Illinois, and the Chair holds that it is quite competent for the House to entertain and pass upon a motion to adjourn at any time.

Mr. MANN. Before the Chair overrules the point of order, will the present occupant of the Chair permit me to call his attention to the ruling made by the Speaker this afternoon, that under the rule a vote would be taken four hours, numerically, after the consideration of the resolution was begun, regardless of the amount of time consumed in debate, or the amount of time consumed in roll calls, or a point of no quorum, or a call of the House, or otherwise.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That assumed that a quorum of the House would be in session at the expiration of the four hours, in which case it might be a correct position to say that the House must then come to a vote on the pending resolution. But the Chair is still of the opinion that the House can adjourn in the existing condition at any time short of the four hours.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DIES. In view of the fact that I raised a question of personal privilege and the Speaker held that the rule having provided for four hours, at the end of which time a vote should be taken, that that must be carried out, no matter what the stomach of the House was, does the Chair hold that a motion to adjourn has preference over the question of personal privilege?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the motion to adjourn is a superior motion to the desire of the gentleman from Texas to be heard on a question of personal privilege.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARNER. How did the gentleman from Texas get the floor to make the point of order that there was no quorum present? Can the gentleman from Texas take a Member off the floor for the purpose of making a point of order that there was no quorum present?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question raised by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] is very easy of solution. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] got recognition of the Chair; the Chair thought he was going to raise a parliamentary question, which he did, and the Chair has ruled upon it. The Chair is still of the opinion that the House can not do anything in the present situation, there not being a quorum present, and that the motion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY] that the House do now adjourn is in order.

Mr. GARNER. Then, if I understand the occupant of the chair, when a gentleman is addressing the House and another gentleman arises in his place and says, "Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry," and the Speaker recognizes him and he makes a point of no quorum, he takes him off his feet.

Mr. MANN. This is mere debate. Anybody can make the point of no quorum at any time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas must bear in mind that the question of no quorum was raised, and was raised in a proper way, and there was no objection to its being raised. The Chair proceeded to count, and ascertained that there was no quorum present. The Chair is still of the opinion that there was no quorum present and of the opinion that the motion made by the gentleman from Georgia is in order.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I understand the motion to adjourn is pending.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The pending motion is the motion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY] that the House do now adjourn, and it is not debatable.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT.

Accordingly the House (at 4 o'clock and 59 minutes p. m.) adjourned until Monday, June 3, 1912, at 11 o'clock a. m.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of St. Paul, Minn., praying for the enactment of legislation to provide medical and sanitary relief for the natives of Alaska, which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. RICHARDSON presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Wilmington, Del., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to further restrict immigration, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. McLEAN presented a petition of sundry members of the Ladies of the Maccabees of the World, residents of Derby, Conn., praying for the enactment of legislation granting to the publications of fraternal associations the privileges of second-class mail matter, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan presented a memorial of the Board of Trade of Holland, Mich., and a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of Lansing, Mich., remonstrating against any reduction of the duty on sugar, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of members of the Real Estate Board, of Detroit, Mich., praying that an appropriation be made for the construction of a public highway from Washington, D. C., to Gettysburg, Pa., as a memorial to Abraham Lincoln, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 22195) to reduce the duties on wool and manufactures of wool, submitted an adverse report (No. 840) thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. SIMMONS, from the Committee on Finance, submitted the views of the minority on the bill (H. R. 22195) to reduce the duties on wool and manufactures of wool, which were ordered to be printed as part 2 of Report No. 840.

Mr. OVERMAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 6217) to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 841) thereon.

SALARIES AND MILEAGE OF MEMBERS.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I understand there is an emergency matter on the desk that has been received from the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate House joint resolution 323.

Mr. WARREN. The Committee on Appropriations have examined the joint resolution, and I move that it be formally referred to the committee, which will favorably report it and ask for its passage.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 323) authorizing Charles F. Riddell, cashier in the office of the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives, to sign all checks, requisitions, and papers in the place of U. S. Jackson, Sergeant at Arms, to obtain money appropriated for the salaries and mileage of Members of the House of Representatives during the temporary disability of the said U. S. Jackson was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WARREN subsequently said: I report back from the Committee on Appropriations favorably, and without amendment, the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 323) authorizing Charles F. Riddell, cashier in the office of the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives, to sign all checks, requisitions, and papers in the place of U. S. Jackson, Sergeant at Arms, to obtain money appropriated for the salaries and mileage of Members of the House of Representatives during the temporary disability of the said U. S. Jackson. I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if he can tell whether, if this joint resolution be passed, it would authorize the signature necessary to the payment of the salaries of subordinate officers of the House of Representatives?

Mr. WARREN. I understand the joint resolution simply empowers one of the assistants to do what the principal would do if he were well and able to do the work.

Mr. STONE. As I heard it read, it was simply to authorize the assistant to sign what the principal might have signed in the payment of the salaries and mileage of Members of the House of Representatives. Does the Senator from Wyoming know whether that signature is necessary for the payment of salaries of the subordinate officers?

Mr. WARREN. I do not. It is entirely a House matter, which came here for the relief of the House. It does not apply to any other department except the officers of the House. Therefore, I assumed that the House had investigated it and that the joint resolution was in proper shape.

Mr. STONE. I presume that is so.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. JONES submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,750,000 toward the construction of eight submarine torpedo boats, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill (H. R. 24565), which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $5,000 to enable the Commissioner of Fisheries to investigate the method of fishing known as beam or otter trawling, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill (H. R. 25069), which was referred to the Committee on Fisheries and ordered to be printed.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 19115) making appropriation for payment of certain claims in accordance with findings of the Court of Claims, reported under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and the Tucker Acts, which were ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

ANTI-THIRD TERM LEAGUE.

Mr. GALLINGER. On the 16th of May last I presented a petition from ex-Senator Henry W. Blair, president of the Anti-Third Term League, which was printed in the RECORD at my request. I have a brief paper from ex-Senator Blair somewhat explanatory of that petition, and I make the same request—that it may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

We have organized the National Anti-Third Term League because we believe the integrity of our form of government and the preservation of our free institutions are seriously threatened by the proposed candidacy of Mr. Roosevelt for a third term.

To be sure, he is the only person in the country who could possibly be such a candidate at the present time, for he is the only one who has had a second term. But our special opposition is not to him as a man or on account of the principles or want of principles which he may represent, but to the third term itself.

We protest against the indorsement of the third term, which is implied by the election of delegates pledged to vote for him as a candidate in the national convention.

We protest that his name ought not to be considered at all in that convention because he is the third term itself.

We do not believe the Republican Party in any State designs to disregard the unwritten law which prohibits either the "form or the substance" of the third term of the presidency to any man, just the same "form and substance" of a third term as that which Mr. Roosevelt renounced and denounced in the most solemn manner.

We propose to help him redeem that pledge.

This is just what we are and mean.

THE NATIONAL ANTI-THIRD TERM LEAGUE,
HENRY W. BLAIR, President.

Organized May 6, 1912.
Headquarters: Rooms 808-809 Colorado Building.

PLATFORM.

No third term, either "in form or substance," for any man as President of the United States.

INDORSERS.

On the 4th of March next I shall have served three and a half years, and these three and a half years constitute my first term.

The wise custom which limits the President to two terms regards the substance and not the form, and under no circumstances will I be a candidate for or accept another nomination.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

(After his election to the Presidency November, 1904.)

Three years afterwards he said he had not changed and should not change.

Roosevelt is not eligible and has no moral or legal right to be a candidate at all. He can not be President again, for he has had two terms. He has said so himself. There are millions of Republicans who will never vote for him as President again. It is against the unwritten law, which is the strongest of all laws. No candidate or faction or convention can, and the people never will, repeal it. Roosevelt is impossible. George Washington or Abraham Lincoln, if now running for President, would be defeated. I certainly for one would vote against both, and I am among the most conservative and hidebound of Republicans. I helped to organize the party, and have fought for it through thick and thin, both in war and in peace. A third term is revolution. It leads first to anarchy and then to monarchy and slavery—straight to the disfranchisement of both races and the practical reenslavement of the colored man.

It is the first step that costs. Revolutions never go backward.

The third term makes the United States first a Mexico and then a Russia.

But there will be no third term. Mark that.

THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES (S. DOC. NO. 755).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Before morning business is closed, I desire to ask unanimous consent for an order. I hold in my hand a document entitled "The Constitution of the United States of America." I ask that it be printed as a Senate document, and that a thousand additional copies be also ordered printed, and I further ask that the document, with the exception of the index, be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming asks that the Constitution of the United States be printed as a document, and also that it be printed in the RECORD excepting the index, and that a thousand additional copies be printed for the use of the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator why he wants to have the Constitution printed as a public document.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. For the information and for the benefit of the public. Considerable interest is being evinced, I will say, throughout the United States to-day as to the present Constitution and proposed amendments. I think it would be a matter of public interest.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The order as agreed to was reduced to writing, as follows:

Ordered, That the Constitution of the United States of America be printed as a document, also that 1,000 additional copies be printed for the use of the Senate.

The Constitution of the United States is as follows:

THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

We the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect Union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish the Constitution for the United States of America.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1. All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

SEC. 2. The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen every second year by the people of the several States, and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature.

No person shall be a Representative who shall not have attained to the age of 25 years, and been 7 years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an inhabitant of that State in which he shall be chosen.

[Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union, according to their respective numbers, which shall be determined by adding to the whole number of free persons, including those bound to service for a term of years, and excluding Indians not taxed, three-fifths of all other persons.] The actual enumeration shall be made within three years after the first meeting of the Congress of the United States, and within every subsequent term of 10 years, in such manner as they shall by law direct. The number of Representatives shall not exceed 1 for every 30,000, but each State shall have at least 1 Representative; and until such enumeration shall be made, the State of New Hampshire shall be entitled to choose 3; Massachusetts, 8; Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, 1; Connecticut, 5; New York, 6; New Jersey, 4; Pennsylvania, 8; Delaware, 1; Maryland, 6; Virginia, 10; North Carolina, 5; South Carolina, 5; and Georgia, 3.

When vacancies happen in the representation from any State, the executive authority thereof shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies.

The House of Representatives shall choose their Speaker and other officers, and shall have the sole power of impeachment.

SEC. 3. The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the legislature thereof, for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote.

Immediately after they shall be assembled in consequence of the first election, they shall be divided as equally as may be into three classes. The seats of the Senators of the first class shall be vacated at the expiration of the second year, of the second class at the expiration of the fourth year, and of the third class at the expiration of the sixth year, so that one-third may be chosen every second year; and if vacancies happen by resignation or otherwise during the recess of the legislature of any State, the executive thereof may make temporary appointments until the next meeting of the legislature, which shall then fill such vacancies.

No person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained to the age of 30 years and been 9 years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an inhabitant of that State for which he shall be chosen.

The Vice President of the United States shall be President of the Senate, but shall have no vote, unless they be equally divided.

The Senate shall choose their other officers and also a President pro tempore, in the absence of the Vice President or when he shall exercise the office of President of the United States.

The Senate shall have the sole power to try all impeachments. When sitting for that purpose they shall be on oath or affirmation. When the President of the United States is tried the Chief Justice shall preside; and no person shall be convicted without the concurrence of two-thirds of the Members present.

Judgment in cases of impeachment shall not extend further than to removal from office and disqualification to hold and enjoy any office of honor, trust, or profit under the United States; but the party convicted shall nevertheless be liable and subject to indictment, trial, judgment, and punishment according to law.

SEC. 4. The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof, but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

The Congress shall assemble at least once in every year, and such meeting shall be on the first Monday in December, unless they shall by law appoint a different day.

SEC. 5. Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members, and a majority of each shall constitute a quorum to do business, but a smaller number may adjourn from day to day and may be authorized to compel the attendance of absent Members in such manner and under such penalties as each House may provide.

Each House may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish its Members for disorderly behavior, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a Member.

Each House shall keep a journal of its proceedings, and from time to time publish the same, except such parts as may in their judgment require secrecy; and the yeas and nays of the Members of either House on any question shall, at the desire of one-fifth of those present, be entered on the journal.

Neither House, during the session of Congress, shall, without the consent of the other, adjourn for more than three days, nor to any other place than that in which the two Houses shall be sitting.

SEC. 6. The Senators and Representatives shall receive a compensation for their services, to be ascertained by law, and paid out of the Treasury of the United States. They shall in all cases, except treason, felony, and breach of the peace, be privileged from arrest during their attendance at the session of their respective Houses, and in going to and returning from the same; and for any speech or debate in either House, they shall not be questioned in any other place.

No Senator or Representative shall, during the time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil office under the authority of the United States, which shall have been created, or the emoluments whereof shall have been increased during such time; and no person holding any office under the United States shall be a Member of either House during his continuance in office.

SEC. 7. All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments as on other bills.

Every bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate shall, before it become a law, be presented to the President of the United States; if he approve he shall sign it, but if not he shall return it, with his objections to that House in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the objections at large on their Journal, and proceed to reconsider it. If after such reconsideration two-thirds of that House shall agree to pass the bill, it shall be sent, together with the objections, to the other House, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered, and if approved by two-thirds of that House, it shall become a law. But in all such cases the votes of both houses shall be determined by yeas and nays, and the names of the persons voting for and against the bill shall be entered on the Journal of each House, respectively. If any bill shall not be returned by the President within 10 days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him, the same shall be a law, in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the Congress by their adjournment prevent its return, in which case it shall not be a law.

Every order, resolution, or vote to which the concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of adjournment) shall be presented to the President of the United States; and before the same shall take effect shall be approved by him, or being disapproved by him shall be repassed by two-thirds of the Senate and House of Representatives, according to the rules and limitations prescribed in the case of a bill.

SEC. 8. The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States;

To borrow money on the credit of the United States;

To regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes;

To establish post offices and post roads;

To promote the progress of science and useful arts by securing for limited times to authors and inventors the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries;

To define and punish piracies and felonies committed on the high seas and offenses against the law of nations;

To declare war, grant letters of marque and reprisal, and make rules concerning captures on land and water;

To raise and support armies, but no appropriation of money to that use shall be for a longer term than two years;

To provide and maintain a navy;

To make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces;

To provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions;

To provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia, and for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States, reserving to the States, respectively, the appointment of the officers and the authority of training the militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress;

To exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over such District (not exceeding 10 miles square) as may, by cession of particular States and the acceptance of Congress, become the seat of the Government of the United States, and to exercise like authority over all places purchased by the consent of the legislature of the State in which the same shall be for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dockyards, and other needful buildings; and

To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof.

SEC. 9. The migration or importation of such persons as any of the States now existing shall think proper to admit shall not be prohibited by the Congres prior to the year 1808, but a tax or duty may be imposed on such importation not exceeding $10 for each person.

The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in cases of rebellion or invasion the public safety may require it.

No tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any State.

No preference shall be given by any regulation of commerce or revenue to the ports of one State over those of another; nor shall vessels bound to, or from, one State, be obliged to enter, clear, or pay duties in another.

No money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law; and a regular statement and account of the receipts and expenditures of all public money shall be published from time to time.

No title of nobility shall be granted by the United States; and no person holding any office of profit or trust under them shall, without the consent of the Congress, accept of any present, emolument, office, or title of any knd whatever from any king, prince, or foreign State.

No State shall, without the consent of the Congress, lay any imposts or duties on imports or exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection laws; and the net produce of all duties and imposts, laid by any State on imports or exports, shall be for the use of the Treasury of the United States; and all such laws shall be subject to the revision and control of the Congress.

No State shall, without the consent of Congress, lay any duty of tonnage, keep troops or ships of war in time of peace, enter into any agreement or compact with another State or with a foreign power, or engage in war, unless actually invaded or in such imminent danger as will not admit of delay.

ARTICLE II.

SECTION 1. The executive power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America. He shall hold his office during the term of four years, and, together with the Vice President chosen for the same term, be elected as follows:

Each State shall appoint, in such manner as the legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors, equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress; but no Senator or Representative, or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, shall be appointed an elector.

The Congress may determine the time of choosing the electors and the day on which they shall give their votes; which day shall be the same throughout the United States.

No person except a natural born citizen, or a citizen of the United States at the time of the adoption of this Constitution, shall be eligible to the office of President; neither shall any person be eligible to that office who shall not have attained to the age of 35 years and been 14 years a resident within the United States.

In case of the removal of the President from office, or of his death, resignation, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the said office, the same shall devolve on the Vice President, and the Congress may by law provide for the case of removal, death, resignation, or inability, both of the President and Vice President, declaring what officer shall then act as President, and such officer shall act accordingly, until the disability be removed or a President shall be elected.

The President shall, at stated times, receive for his services a compensation which shall neither be increased nor diminished during the period for which he shall have been elected, and he shall not receive within that period any other emolument from the United States, or any of them.

The President shall have power to fill up all vacancies that may happen during the recess of the Senate, by granting commissions which shall expire at the end of their next session.

SEC. 3. He shall from time to time give to the Congress information of the state of the Union, and recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient; he may, on extraordinary occasions, convene both Houses, or either of them, and in case of disagreement between them with respect to the time of adjournment he may adjourn them to such time as he shall think proper; he shall receive ambassadors and other public ministers; he shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed, and shall commission all the officers of the United States.

In all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls, and those in which a State shall be party, the Supreme Court shall have original jurisdiction. In all the other cases before mentioned the Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction, both as to law and fact, with such exceptions and under such regulations as the Congress shall make.

SEC. 3. Treason against the United States shall consist only in levying war against them or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort. No person shall be convicted of treason unless on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act or on confession in open court.

The Congress shall have power to declare the punishment of treason, but no attainder of treason shall work corruption of blood or forfeiture except during the life of the person attainted.

ARTICLE IV.

SECTION 1. Full faith and credit shall be given in each State to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of every other State. And the Congress may by general laws prescribe the manner in which such acts, records, and proceedings shall be proved and the effect thereof.

SEC. 2. The citizens of each State shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States.

A person charged in any State with treason, felony, or other crime, who shall flee from justice and be found in another State, shall, on demand of the executive authority of the State from which he fled, be delivered up, to be removed to the State having jurisdiction of the crime.

No person held to service or labor in one State under the laws thereof, escaping into another, shall, in consequence of any law or regulation therein, be discharged from such service or labor, but shall be delivered up on claim of the party to whom such service or labor may be due.

SEC. 3. New States may be admitted by the Congress into this Union; but no new State shall be formed or erected within the jurisdiction of any other State; nor any State be formed by the junction of two or more States, or parts of States, without the consent of the legislatures of the States concerned as well as of the Congress.

The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States; and nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to prejudice any claims of the United States or of any particular State.

SEC. 4. The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government, and shall protect each of them against invasion; and on application of the legislature or of the executive (when the legislature can not be convened) against domestic violence.

ARTICLE V.

The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, or, on the application of the legislatures of two-thirds of the several States, shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which, in either case, shall be valid to all intents and purposes, as part of this Constitution, when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States or by conventions in three-fourths thereof, as the one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by the Congress: Provided, That no amendment which may be made prior to the year 1808 shall in any manner affect the first and fourth clauses in the ninth section of the first article; and that no State, without its consent, shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in the Senate.

ARTICLE VI.

All debts contracted and engagements entered into before the adoption of this Constitution shall be as valid against the United States under this Constitution as under the Confederation.

This Constitution and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof and all treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States shall be the supreme law of the land; and the judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding.

The Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the members of the several State legislatures, and all executive and judicial officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by oath or affirmation to support this Constitution, but no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States.

ARTICLE VII.

The ratification of the conventions of nine States shall be sufficient for the establishment of this Constitution between the States so ratifying the same.

Done in convention by the unanimous consent of the States present the 17th day of September in the year of our Lord 1787 and of the independence of the United States of America the twelfth. In witness whereof we have hereunto subscribed our names.

GO. WASHINGTON,
Presidt and deputy from Virginia.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 23063) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. McCUMBER, Mr. BURNHAM, and Mr. SHIVELY conferees on the part of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 23557) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. McCUMBER, Mr. BURNHAM, and Mr. SHIVELY conferees on the part of the Senate.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. J. Res. 323) authorizing Charles F. Riddell, cashier in the office of the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives, to sign all checks, requisitions, and papers in the place of U. S. Jackson, Sergeant at Arms, to obtain money appropriated for the salaries and mileage of Members of the House of Representatives during the temporary disability of the said U. S. Jackson, and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WARREN. Agreeably to the notice heretofore given, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 24023) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Wyoming.

The motion was agreed to.

ANNIE R. SCHLEY.

Mr. RAYNER. I ask the Senator from Wyoming whether he will yield to me. I should like to call up the bill (S. 4568) granting an increase of pension to Annie R. Schley, the widow of the late Rear Admiral Schley. I wish to make a few remarks in reference to the career of Rear Admiral Schley.

Mr. WARREN. I assume that this particular case is rather an emergency.

Mr. RAYNER. It is an emergency.

Mr. WARREN. I will yield if there is no objection.

Mr. SMOOT. Before the Senator yields I should like to call attention to the fact that the chairman of the Committee on Pensions is not present in the Chamber, and I believe he desires to be present when that bill is considered.

Mr. RAYNER. I hope the chairman of the committee will not offer much opposition. He can be sent for. The bill has practically been here for about six months. I have been trying for about six months to make some headway with it, and I should like very much, for the reasons I will state, to have it acted on by the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. Unless there is objection from other quarters, I shall not object.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Cullom	McCumber	Simmons
Bacon	Curtis	McLean	Smith, Ariz.
Borah	Dillingham	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ga.
Bourne	Fletcher	Martine, N. J.	Smith, S. C.
Bradley	Foster	Myers	Smoot
Brandegee	Gallinger	Nelson	Sutherland
Bristow	Gardner	Oliver	Thornton
Brown	Heyburn	Overman	Tillman
Bryan	Hitchcock	Page	Townsend
Burnham	Johnson, Me.	Perkins	Warren
Catron	Johnston, Ala.	Rayner	Watson
Chamberlain	Jones	Richardson	Wetmore
Clapp	Lea	Root	Williams
Clark, Wyo.	Lodge	Shively	Works

Mr. JONES. My colleague [Mr. POINDEXTER] is unavoidably detained by public business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-six Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, the bill that I call up is the bill (S. 4568) granting an increase of pension to Annie R. Schley.

Mr. McCUMBER. Does the Senator wish to call it up simply for the purpose of an address, or for the purpose of asking unanimous consent that it be considered and passed on at this time?

Mr. RAYNER. To ask unanimous consent that it be considered and passed and for the purpose of addressing the Senate.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will not object when the Senator makes that statement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 4568) granting an increase of pension to Annie R. Schley. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 8, before the word "fifty," to strike out the words "one hundred and," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Annie R. Schley, widow of Winfield S. Schley, late rear admiral, United States Navy, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, the bill is entitled "A bill granting an increase of pension to Annie R. Schley," and it provides:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Annie R. Schley, widow of Winfield S. Schley, late rear admiral, United States Navy, and pay her a pension at the rate of $150 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The committee reported $50 a month, and my motion to amend will be to increase the pension to $150 a month, as in the bill I originally introduced.

Mr. President, in offering this amendment to the bill of the Pension Committee, asking $150 a month for the widow of Admiral Schley instead of $50 a month as allowed by the committee, I desire to say that I have no comment whatever to make upon the action of the committee. With the committee it is a matter largely of precedent and of rules and regulations. With us in the Senate I apprehend it will be a matter of patriotism and impartial justice. It is really a pittance that I am asking for the widow of Admiral Schley in her comfortless and declining years. I do not regard it exactly in the light of a pension, because it is beyond that, a recognition of the memorable services that this gallant officer performed for his country at so many stations and places that it would be almost impossible to enumerate them in the brief presentation that I am making to the Senate. One thing is sure, and that is that if this amendment is adopted it will meet from one end of the Union to the other with the commendation of our countrymen.

Admiral Schley was esteemed during his life by all who knew him personally and admired by hundreds of thousands who did not know him personally, and now in death there is not even in bated breath a whisper of enmity upon the part of those who were hostile to him during his life.

Mr. President, we pay nearly $200,000,000 a year in pensions. Is there a patriot in the land, or in any section of it, who will criticize an allotment to his surviving widow of $150 a month? As the report shows, she is in dire need of it, and if she did not need it I would not be here asking for it on her behalf at the hands of an American Congress. She is without the means to erect a suitable memorial upon his grave. Just think of it. Would any other country on this earth deny her at least this tribute to his memory? He deserves more than a shaft of marble and an epitaph to commemorate him. He deserves in this Capital of the Nation a testimonial that shall speak to all the ages of his illustrious deeds. And even such a memorial will perish and decay before his memory shall depart from the thoughts and remembrance of posterity.

I do not intend to exaggerate the achievements of his career. He was criticized when he was alive, but of all the heartless vocations in the world that of the critic is the most unenviable. A critic is generally a person who has no reputation of his own, but who expects to rise in public estimation upon the ruins of those whom he attempts to detract and humiliate. As a rule, contemporary historians are not fair judges of the events that are transpiring around them. History has hardly ever been correctly written by any man who was the living witness of its events, because, generally, political prejudice and personal enmities enter into the narrative and the recital. The career of Admiral Schley seems to be an exception to this rule, because never in my life have I known a man so universally idolized by the Nation whom he served. He had but one idea in his mind, and every other plan and purpose of his life seemed to be subordinate to that, and that idea was his country. When he entered its service he took a vow upon its altars that he would devote and dedicate his life to its cause, and I challenge the bitterest enemy that he ever had to point to a single and isolated instance where he ever wavered or faltered when duty summoned him to the front. He never possessed the element of fear, he never knew what fear was, and I am satisfied that in his own mind the greatest ambition that he could have achieved would have been at any moment to have given up his life in defense of the Union that he helped to cement and whose colors he proudly carried in every clime, from the Arctic to the Torrid Zone.

Is the widow of such a hero to pass her years in desolation and in sorrow without the ordinary necessities of life? If so, then the history of civilization presents no parallel to a case like this, and the heart of the Nation would no longer thrill with the patriotic recognition of patriotic deeds.

I will not refer to history in support of the assertion that in the earliest days even heathen nations accorded to their heroes and to their surviving families the recognition to which they were entitled. I will take a modern instance in referring to the fact that when in the war Great Britain waged in Africa Khartum was captured by a British general, the same year in which Schley destroyed the Spanish fleet at Santiago, all the honors were heaped upon her commander that a government could bestow. There was conferred upon him a great title at the hands of the Crown; he was voted the gratitude of both houses of Parliament; an enormous fund was subscribed to found a university in the capital that he captured; he was made governor general of the territory in which his services were rendered, and was granted a pension equal to $150,000 in American money.

This Republic, I know, will not be ungrateful. I will not rehearse at this moment a detailed description of his achievements in almost every quarter of the globe to which he had been sent. He has written his own biography in modest and accurate terms, and his biography has been written by others, and they will be read in the years to come by the rising generation, and will furnish an incentive to them to follow his deeds and emulate his example.

At Santiago he was surrounded by a band of heroic captains whose names will illustrate the annals of American history. Some are living, some are dead. Wainright is living, this valorous and intrepid man who performd a feat upon that day unsurpassed for daring skill by any that John Paul Jones ever performed upon the waters of the deep. Clark is living, who ran his ship, as if upon the wings of lightning, from sea to sea just in time that his soul could breathe the fire of battle amid the carnage of that day. Evans is gone. All honor to his imperishable name. He was separated from Schley in life; they are united in death. Chadwick, the commander of Sampson's ship, is living and has attested in the strongest way to the efficient maneuver that Cook, the great commander of the Brooklyn, ordered at a critical moment of the conflict. Sampson is dead, and I would have been here this day asking for a pension on behalf of his widow if she had not acquainted me with the fact that her situation was such that she did not need the aid of Congress.

All honor to the living and to the dead, and shame to the carping censors who would intrude themselves upon this scene of reunited glory.

I do not intend to enter upon a description of the conduct of Schley at Santiago, but it seems to me that this is the proper occasion, and I propose to avail myself of it, to show that the famous order for what is known as the "loop" of the Brooklyn that Schley gave upon the spur of the moment and in the heat of battle decided the conflict and saved the day for the American arms. After years of silence upon the subject by all who witnessed the event, Admiral Chadwick, the captain of Admiral Sampson's flagship, has proclaimed this fact to the world, but in deference to the memory of Schley I desire it once and forever to go down in unambiguous terms and indelible letters upon the records of an American Congress. We demonstrated it at the trial, and now comes the sustaining approval of Chadwick, which places it beyond the realm of doubt and uncertainty. I say that Schley gave the order. This is not entirely accurate. Cook, the captain of Schley's flagship, gave it, but Schley approved it, and with the generous heart that he had he was willing to assume all responsibility for it, even if it had been a mistake or an error, but it was neither, and it was a triumph of naval and nautical skill that was never understood by portfolio chiefs, but the scope of which was entirely grasped by Admiral Dewey when he declined to concur in the opinion of the remaining admirals who sat with him upon the tribunal that decided the case. I have not one word of comment to make upon their action, but, Senators, listen to the narrative for a moment. I would like anyone who ever takes the trouble to read a word of anything that I have ever said upon this floor to reflect upon the statement that I now make and to which I challenge contradiction.

Admiral Sampson before he left for Siboney gave the order to his fleet to close in upon the Spanish ships in the event that they made an effort to come out of the harbor of Santiago. Sampson with all his great skill and experience as a naval commander could not possibly have foreseen what the Spanish plan of battle would be. The Brooklyn, Schley's flagship, was steering a course diametrically opposite to that steered by the Spanish fleet, and in their attempt to escape the Spanish squadron had practically broken through and passed the battleship line, creating an emergency that no one could have foreseen and which had to be met immediately. The commander of the Maria Teresa, the leading ship of the Spanish fleet, intended to ram the Brooklyn, in accordance with the Spanish plan of battle. Not only this, but, owing to this new situation, there was danger of a collision among the American ships, and Cook immediately sent word to Schley that "We will soon be in the cross fire of our own fleet." It was then that Cook gave the order "hard aport" and the Brooklyn swung rapidly around to the west a little more than half her tactical diameter, and Sears, the flag lieutenant of the Brooklyn, was ordered by Admiral Schley to hoist the signal, "Follow the flag." Then, with Clark of the Oregon upon the Brooklyn's quarter, the most terrific fighting of the day began. In a short time smoke was seen issuing from the ports and hatches of the Maria Teresa, the leading Spanish ship. The smoke upon the Brooklyn had blinded the crew so that they could not see what was going on. "Keep the boys informed" said Schley to Cook, and every few minutes of the action word was sent by Cook to cheer them on, and the ringing cheers came back until the Maria Teresa, leaping from fire into flame, burning from fore to aft, turned into the beach 6 miles west of the Santiago Harbor. Then the Brooklyn, receiving more shells than and inflicting as much injury as the whole of the American fleet combined, went westward on her course in pursuit of the remaining Spanish ships until fire was seen issuing from the Oquendo, the second vessel of the Spanish fleet, and with the Oregon and Brooklyn in pursuit she was beached within a half mile of where the Maria Teresa gave up the fight.

Then came the Viscaya, and in her flight and in her despair, and in the last straits that she was in, she made a desperate turn toward the Brooklyn and the Oregon that were pursuing her, but as she did this she was struck by a shell from one of the vessels and, hauling her colors down, she was beached at Acerraderos, 16 miles distant from where the battle began. Then it was that Ellis, struck by a shell, fell upon the Brooklyn at the side of Schley, and then it was that as his headless body was about to be cast overboard Schley gave the order, "Bring the body back and we will give it Christian burial." The Colon, the last of the ships, was then making toward the Torquino River. Schley signaled the Oregon, under the command of Clark, to try his 13-inch guns upon her, and with the combined fire of the Brooklyn and the Oregon upon the ship, and with no possible chance of escape, and with her human cargo doomed to certain death if the fighting continued, her commander ran his ship ashore at the mouth of the Torquino River, fired his leeward gun, lowered his flag, and the colors of Spain went down before the colors of the Union upon the Western Continent.

"This entire plan of battle was all a mistake," said Schley's enemies, "and he ought to have conducted a different line of battle." Now, let me read you Dewey's verdict. These are his words:

> Commodore Schley was the senior officer of the squadron off Santiago when the Spanish squadron attempted to escape on the morning of July 3, 1898. He was in absolute command and is entitled to the credit due to such commanding officer for the glorious victory which resulted in the total destruction of the Spanish ships.

I will venture the prediction that you could go to-day to any section or quarter of this Union, from its eastern to its western coast, and assemble promiscuously any convention of patriots that you could collect and this verdict of Admiral Dewey's would be affirmed and ratified and applauded by the reechoing acclamation of his countrymen.

There is another charge that Schley had to meet that I desire briefly to refer to, and that was that in the conduct of the fleet along the Cuban coast he had disobeyed orders of the Navy Department. This was not the first time that Schley in his military career had found it necessary to disobey the orders of his superior officers. During the Civil War, at the siege of Port Hudson, when he was in charge of the Monongahela, the signal was raised upon Farragut's vessel to retreat. The quartermaster reported to Schley that it was impossible for him to see the signals. The order had been previously given to storm the battery. This was the signal that Schley saw, and instead of retreating he leveled his guns against the fortifications. He was reprimanded by Farragut, but afterwards the admiral called him into his private cabin and said to him: "I have reprimanded you in the presence of the crew because you did not follow the signal to retreat, but I now congratulate you upon the work that you have done. May you repeat this accomplishment in after years." It will be recalled as an historic incident that years before Horatio Nelson at Trafalgar raised his signal "England expects every man to do his duty" and fell mortally wounded upon his flagship, at the battle of the Baltic he placed his glass to his blind eye and reported to his commander, Sir Hyde Parker, that it was impossible for him to see the signal to retreat, which was accurately true, and, instead of retreating, he made his famous charge upon the Danish line.

The time has passed when Secretaries of War or Secretaries of the Navy who have never perhaps observed any military tactics except a dress parade and who could hardly tell the difference between a revenue cutter and a battleship can fight battles with lead pencils and rulers and india rubber thousands of miles away from home. You tell a naval commander, for instance, that he must coal at sea when, owing to the condition of the tide and winds, coaling from a collier is absolutely impossible, he is bound to disobey orders or go to the bottom of the deep; you order an admiral to sail eastward on the southern coast of Cuba when he is encountering the Gulf Stream, and to make as good time as a vessel on the northern waters, where there are no impediments to encounter, and you are bound to have an unexecuted order. You instruct him to watch for signals on the Cuban coast and then you instruct another officer to meet him who knew the significance of the signals, but who failed to impart their meaning to him, so that he could not tell whether the signal lights were made by the Spanish forces or by the Cuban insurgents, and then you authorize a distinguished metaphysician and psychologist who was presiding over the Navy Department to court-martial him for not obeying orders. I ask what sort of discipline and justice and intelligence you can expect in the service of your country? I make the assertion that Schley never disobeyed a single order in all his military service except when it was absolutely necessary or utterly unintelligent, incomprehensible, and impossible of execution.

And now, Mr. President, all of these transactions have closed and Schley is gone. He has fought his last battle, he has raised his last signal, and his guns have roared their last farewell. He is now upon the beach where the tide no longer ebbs and flows. He has crossed the bridge that spans this life to the eternal shores and his ship has passed the horizon and is anchored in the harbor from which no voyager ever returns. I always felt that he never recovered from the blow his country dealt him. He delivered her as great a victory as she ever gained upon the sea and she accepted it with ingratitude and with ungracious hands. The greatest struggle he ever passed through was not amid the shot and shell at Santiago; it was when the shafts of malice and hatred were leveled at his breast; but he stood with head erect just as his boatswain described him standing on the Brooklyn's bridge with head erect when every other head was bowed but his. During all these trials his devoted wife stood by his side with all the fervor of her girlhood days, and in the hours of gloom and anxiety with heroic fortitude she cheered him on with all the consecration that only a woman can bestow and with all the sacred, self-sacrificing love that only a woman can feel. During one of the sleepless hours of the night, as the trial was proceeding, when he realized that all the mighty resources and influence of those in authority were arrayed against him, he said to me:

> I have battled with the elements in the Arctic Zone, I have battled with the foe in the service of my country, but this is the severest ordeal through which I have ever passed. I wish I had died at Santiago. I am weary; I am weary.

Yes, Mr. President, he was weary; but the weary sun hath made a golden set and by the bright track of its fiery car it gives token of a goodly day to-morrow.

Mr. President, I move that the amount named in the original bill—$150 a month—be substituted for the amount—$50 a month—named in the bill reported by the committee, and on that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I am going to vote for the pension to the widow of Admiral Schley, but I am not for a moment going to do it as an indorsement of any claim on his behalf as against Admiral Sampson; and, so far as I am concerned, it is not to be taken as an expression in favor of Admiral Schley in the contest as between Admiral Schley and Admiral Sampson.

Mr. RAYNER. This bill raises no such issue as that, Mr. President.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator's remarks raise such an issue.

Mr. RAYNER. There is not one word in the remarks of the Senator from Maryland that could be so construed; on the contrary, if the Senator had listened to them instead of writing something at his desk, he would have noticed that I said that I would be equally ready to propose a pension on behalf of the widow of Admiral Sampson, had she not acquainted me with the fact that she did not need any pension; otherwise, I would have been here claiming for the widow of Admiral Sampson just exactly what I am claiming for the widow of Admiral Schley. They are united now in death, and there is no use of creating hostilities.

Mr. HEYBURN. I was not referring to anything in regard to a pension for Mrs. Sampson. I listened carefully to the Senator's remarks; but we differ in our conclusion as to who was the winner of that victory. I am not willing to concede, either directly or indirectly, at any time that Admiral Sampson was not the winner and entitled to the credit for the winning of that victory. I knew Admiral Schley well during his lifetime, and we were personal friends; nevertheless, I am not going to be suspected in this hour of changing my opinion in regard to the merits of that controversy.

Mr. RAYNER. The Senator is frequently a friend in life but an enemy in death.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, no; that is uncalled for. I am not voting here on sentiment; I am voting on the question of whether the widow of this gallant officer is entitled to a pension.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the last Battle of Santiago seems to have lasted about as long, and no longer, than the first battle. The contest between Admiral Sampson and Admiral Schley was undoubtedly very much more earnest and probably more bloody and determined than the Battle of Santiago. I do not think it is a proper thing here for us to try over again that battle nor the controversy between the commodores connected with it. We had a thorough investigation of the subject. For my part I thought the investigation was uncalled for. I still believe it was, but Congress felt that an investigation ought to be had. It was had, and after a very full consideration the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States came to the conclusion that the men who were really entitled to the great credit of the Battle of Santiago were the captains of the several ships, and he did not accord to them any wonderful credit for having destroyed an enemy so much inferior to themselves. But, Mr. President, they were all gallant officers; nobody denies that; and now the question arises, when we are asked to grant a private pension, whether we shall take one man and glorify him above all others in the service, whether we shall take the widow of one officer and grant her an annuity three times as much as we grant to the widows of other officers of equal rank and who have performed their duty to the Government as earnestly, as zealously, and as successfully, in my opinion, as the officer who has been discussed so eloquently to-day by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER].

The last large pension bill that was granted by the Congress of the United States was granted in 1887 to the widow of Gen. John A. Logan. The majority of the Committee on Pensions reported against granting any special pension whatever. The Senate, however, voted in favor of a bill granting a pension of $2,000. There was such a strong opposition to it and so much feeling because of the injustice that was done all the other officers and the widows of all the other officers in the great Civil War that Congress has not since that time dared to vote such an enormous pension to anyone.

The report that was made at that time, in 1887, gave the names and the number of widows who had been granted pensions, and they take all the generals, the brigadier generals, and the major generals; they take the admirals, the rear admirals, and so forth, and out of about 75 at least that had been given pensions only 3 were granted above $50 per month. We have followed that rule right along since that time, and the Committee on Pensions has never reported, to my knowledge, for the widow of any officer of the Civil War or of any other war a greater amount than $50 per month. We have been granting that for years.

Now, to single out the widow of one officer and grant her $150 a month or $100 a month or any other large sum is a rank injustice to the widow of every other officer who has served under the flag of the United States.

Mr. RAYNER. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. McCUMBER. You can not place it in any other light before the American people and especially before the widows of the hundreds of officers who have received a less amount. I think I am as patriotic in my impulses as any Senator here, but I think that my patriotism is measured by a justice and by a desire to treat everyone who serves his country exactly in the same way.

I confess, Mr. President, that, following my own convictions, I commend most highly the law of 1890, which granted pensions for the widows and soldiers of the Civil War where the death or injury was not the result of the service in the war. In that law it is declared emphatically that ranks shall not be considered. That is the most just law that was ever passed by the United States, because the soldier in the rank who listens and hears the command of his officer to charge over the trenches and into the mouths of blazing cannon has done as much for his country as the man who stands back in safety and orders him to make that charge. And when the Government is to pay a debt of gratitude to the man who escaped maimed or to the widow of that man where life is the penalty, the Government should pay as much to the widow of that man as to the widow of an officer. That is my own conviction, and I believe that is the conviction of the hearts of the mass of the American people upon this subject of pensions.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I will yield to the Senator in one moment. We have made the distinction. When we have attempted to destroy the distinction Congress has voted the committee down. So the committee has taken the sentiment of the Senate and the House as its guide and has made a distinction between the widow of the officer or the man in the ranks and the widows of the higher officers. I do not think we ought to have done so, but we have done it; and having done so, and in my opinion having by that act done an injustice against the soldier of the rank and against the widow of the soldier of the rank, I do not want to supplement that by a greater injustice by treating officers and the widows of officers of like rank in a different manner. For that reason I say that when he have reached the ultimate amount of $50 a month and have for years declared that to be the highest amount we would grant, then we ought not to select the widow of one officer and make that one a favorite and place her upon a pedestal above the widows of all other officers of equal rank who have shown equal ability and have been as patriotic in their duty.

I now yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. RAYNER. The Senate has over and over again, I think, passed pensions bills as large as this. I recollect the pension to the widow of Gen. Hawley.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mrs. Hawley never received a pension at all.

Mr. RAYNER. The Senator talks about this being exceptional. The record is against it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mrs. Hawley did not receive one dollar of pension, and she has not got it to-day.

Mr. RAYNER. Because the House did not pass the bill. She received it in the Senate.

Mr. McCUMBER. She was voted only $50 a month, and that not on the recommendation of the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. Did she receive $50?

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senate, I think, passed it at $50.

Mr. GALLINGER. I introduced the bill to grant a pension to Mrs. Hawley, but I have an impression that the Committee on Pensions refused to report the bill at all. That is my recollection.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Committee on Pensions did refuse to report the bill. My remembrance is, however, that the bill did pass the Senate and it was defeated in the House.

Now, we have two other cases. The case of the widow of Admiral Evans was before us a short time ago. She is receiving $30 a month now, and the committee decided that under the evidence before them they could not allow a greater amount than that. I will say, frankly, that was because the evidence was not forthcoming to bring her case within the rule. That rule is that in order to receive a private pension bill there should be a showing of destitution, and where there has been no showing of destitution the committee refuses to report any bill.

We have a rule here which we have tried to follow. That rule is that in measuring destitution the same rule shall be applied to the widow of an officer as to the widow of a private soldier; that the word "destitution" shall not be changed to fit particular cases, but that it shall be given the same meaning in every case. It is the opinion of the committee that a person who receives $50 a month, without any effort, has received enough at least to take him or her without the definition of being destitute.

Having applied that rule to all the others, I certainly feel, Mr. President, that it should be applied in this case.

Here is a thought that I want to submit not only to the Senator from Maryland but also to others. It has come to this pass in the matter of private pension bills: The general law gives to the widow of a captain and those above that rank $30 per month in every case where the death of the soldier was due to an ailment or disease or wounds received in the service. If it should be more, then, to treat every one alike, we should raise that amount to $45 or $50 or $60 or $100—whatever we think is just and proper. But for the last five years there has not been a single death of an officer, in my opinion, but that you will find that immediately thereafter there is an application for a private pension bill. In other words, we are treating the widows of all the officers under the private-pension-bill system, and we are treating most of the soldiers under the general law. If we are not giving enough we ought to give more by a general law and treat them all alike, so that we shall not be accused of dealing unfairly or unjustly to anyone. If it is $50 for one widow it ought to $50 for every one of them, unless they are able to make a showing of destitution.

But, Mr. President, I want to keep the record straight. I want to treat the widows of all these officers alike and do exact justice, and because I believed that you did an injustice to 500 of them when you granted those widows $50 a month, so I believe it would be an injustice to add one of them and make it $150 a month. Therefore, I oppose the increase in this case to $150.

Mr. RAYNER. My amendment is to give a pension of $150 a month in lieu of $50 a month as reported in the bill. I move to substitute $150, which was the original bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senator from Maryland that the bill now contains a provision for $150, and the amendment proposed by the committee would strike out $150 and insert $50. It meets the same end as that sought by the Senator from Maryland to vote on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. RAYNER. Then I ask——

Mr. McCUMBER. I suggest that the proper vote for the Senator from Maryland and those who agree with him would be in this case to disagree with the amendment of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate agree to the amendment of the committee?

Mr. NELSON. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Pensions what the resources of Mrs. Schley are. What are her means, as the evidence before the committee shows?

Mr. McCUMBER. I think it shows very little, at least.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, it seems to me if we make this large increase in this particular case it is impossible to draw the line. There have been widows of many admirals, gallant officers, distinguished in the service, and who were left in very straitened circumstances, to whom the committee never has given more than $50 a month, and some not so much. I have particularly in mind the widow of a distinguished admiral, who was left almost penniless, with a very small amount of money, and the committee would not even raise her pension from $30, the pension provided by law, to $50 a month. It seems to me it would be a very unfair and a very dangerous precedent to establish to select one widow in this way and give this very large pension.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator from Minnesota requested me to give a statement of the income of the widow of the late Admiral Schley. The report shows as follows:

> In a sworn statement filed with your committee it is stated that Mrs. Schley has an income of $425 per year, from the investment of her distinguished husband's life insurance, in addition to the $12 per month she is receiving as pension. In addition to this she received last year $500 from the sale of the writings of Admiral Schley, but this source of income will of course terminate within a very short time.

There is $425 a year that seems to be permanent, as well as the $12 per month; so, with the $50 per month which we propose to give her, she then would be receiving $1,025 a year.

Mr. SHIVELY and Mr. STONE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To whom does the Senator from Minnesota yield.

Mr. NELSON. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. SHIVELY. I was going to suggest to the Senator that this would simply be an increase from $12 a month to $50 a month, and it would not make the increase he has suggested.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; I said with the $425 the $50 a month which we propose to allow her would be $600, making $1,025.

Mr. RAYNER. The income of $500 from the sale of the book does not amount to anything. That may go in a year or two. With the $12 a month and the $425 it would take three or four years to pay the funeral expenses and erect a proper tombstone.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, as an ex-corporal of the Union Army, I feel impelled to say a few words in this case.

All nations have their heroes and we all delight to honor them. I feel that it is not fair in a case of the kind of Admiral Schley to put him on a level with the ordinary and common officers of the Navy. He was one of the great heroes of the Spanish-American War, and it is a shame to this great country to leave his widow with only $400 a year to live on after services such as he rendered the country. He was practically in command of our fleet at Santiago. It fought under his direction. If he had been an admiral in the English Navy and rendered such services, he would have been given an estate, he would have been ennobled, and his family would have been pensioned in the most liberal manner.

In this great country of ours, when we have the case of a man of this kind, who rendered such great service, he should not be put on the level of an ordinary routine admiral in the Navy. I think the ordinary soldiers and the ordinary sailors and the ordinary officers of our Army and Navy would all of them be well satisfied to have one of our great naval heroes honored in this way. We gave the widow of Admiral Farragut $2,000 a year, a very small sum, indeed, and while I concede that Admiral Schley's record is not as great as that of Admiral Farragut, it seems to me it would be a shame to leave to the widow of such an officer the paltry pension of $50 a month.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee, which is to strike out "$150" and insert "$50." Of course, if the amendment is adopted, the pension originally proposed of $150 is stricken out and $50 is put in the bill, and if the amendment is not adopted the provision of $150 must stand. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. McCUMBER. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

So the amendment of the committee was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 24023) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it may first be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming? The Chair hears none, and it will be so ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Legislative," subhead "Senate," on page 1, line 10, to increase the appropriation for compensation of Senators from $690,000 to $720,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 1, line 11, to increase the appropriation for the mileage of Senators from $47,000 to $51,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 14, after the words "journal clerk," to insert "principal clerk, reading clerk"; in line 15, after the word "each," to strike out "principal clerk, reading clerk"; in line 17, after the word "bookkeeper," to insert "one clerk, printing clerk"; in line 18, after the word "revenue," to strike out "and general appropriation"; in line 21, before the word "indexer," to insert "compiler of Navy Yearbook and Senate report on river and harbor bill, Woodbury Pulsifer, $2,220"; in line 22, before the word "assistant," to strike out "printing clerk"; in the same line, before the word "clerks," to strike out "three," and insert "two"; on page 3, line 1, after the word "stationery," to strike out "$1,900," and insert "$2,000"; in line 4, after the word "each," to insert "laborer in stationery room, $720"; and in the same line, after the words "in all," to strike out "$88,960," and insert "$93,060," so as to make the clause read:

Office of Secretary: Secretary of the Senate, including compensation as disbursing officer of salaries of Senators and of the contingent fund of the Senate, $6,500; hire of horse and wagon for the Secretary's office, $420; assistant secretary, Henry M. Rose, $5,000; chief clerk, $3,250; financial clerk, $3,000 and $1,250 additional while the office is held by the present incumbent; minute and journal clerk, principal clerk, reading clerk, and enrolling clerk, at $3,000 each; executive clerk, and assistant financial clerk, at $2,750 each; librarian, file clerk, chief bookkeeper, one clerk, printing clerk, and clerk compiling a history of revenue bills, at $2,500 each; keeper of stationery, $2,400; compiler of Navy Yearbook and Senate report on river and harbor bill, Woodbury Pulsifer, $2,220; indexer for Senate public documents, assistant librarian, and two clerks, at $2,220 each; four clerks, at $2,100 each; assistant librarian, $1,800; assistant librarian, $1,600; skilled laborer, $1,200; clerk, $1,800; clerk, $1,600; assistant keeper of stationery, $2,000; assistant in stationery room, $1,200; messenger, $1,440; assistant messenger, $1,200; three laborers, at $840 each; three laborers, at $720 each; laborer in stationery room, $720; in all, $93,060.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 8, before the word "assistant," to strike out "first assistant, $2,000; assistant, $2,000," and insert "two assistants, at $2,250 each"; and in line 9, after the words "in all," to strike out "$12,520," and insert "$13,020," so as to make the clause read:

Document room: Superintendent, George H. Boyd, $3,000; two assistants, at $2,250 each; assistant, $1,440; two clerks, at $1,440 each; skilled laborer, $1,200; in all, $13,020.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, before we proceed any further, I want to ask the Senator in charge of the bill a question for information. I desire to ask him why, in line 10, on the first page, the appropriation for the compensation for Senators is changed from $690,000 to $720,000?

Mr. WARREN. Because there has been an increase of four new Senators since the estimate was made, and the increased amount is simply the difference.

Mr. REED. It just makes that difference?

Mr. WARREN. I think it does; and I think the Senator will so find.

Mr. REED. I have not figured it. I only asked for information.

Mr. WARREN. The same is true as to the proposed appropriation for mileage.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 3, line 14, after the word "clerk," to strike out "$1,440" and insert "$1,800"; in line 16, after the word "each," to strike out "assistant clerk, $1,440," and insert "two assistant clerks at $1,440 each"; in line 17, before the word "clerk," to insert "laborer, $720"; and in line 19, after the words "messenger, $1,440," to insert "messenger, $1,200," so as to read:

Clerks and messengers to committees: Clerk to the Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress, $2,220, messenger, $1,440; clerk to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, $2,500, assistant clerk, $1,800, messenger, $1,440; clerk to the Committee on Appropriations, $4,000, two assistant clerks, at $2,500 each, two assistant clerks, at $1,440 each, messenger, $1,440; laborer, $720; clerk to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, $2,500, messenger, $1,440, messenger, $1,200.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, does that last amendment mean that there is to be another employee at $1,200 a year?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, perhaps I ought to say at this point that on the page now being considered there are numerous amendments. In each case they simply provide for putting on the annual roll what the Senate itself had ordered done in providing employees and paying them from the contingent fund of the Senate. As the Senator will remember, there was a very decided reform movement when the present Congress assembled in the way of having every employee noted as to where he was employed, in order to destroy what was termed "the bad practice of details." Before that time certain employees had been detailed to this or that Senator's committee in the line of economy, as it was thought. Some of us who were rather familiar with appropriations were of the opinion that the proposed changes would make no saving, but we had to submit. It is now thought desirable to show exactly where every man is employed, and we have carried out that plan. We took from the roll of employees who had been so detailed thirty-odd men. Meanwhile the Committee on Contingent Expenses from time to time allowed this committee, that committee, and the other committee clerks or messengers to take the place of those formerly detailed. In that way we have added some 8 or 10 more employees than we disposed of previously, and, of course, at an additional cost, perhaps, of from $15,000 to $20,000. The duty of the Committee on Appropriations is to fulfill the law; the Senate has already provided for these employees, and they are now being paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, which is hardly proper; in fact, the law regarding the contingent fund makes it impossible to indefinitely continue that practice without infringing upon the law.

Mr. REED. This amounts to a recognition of these places?

Mr. WARREN. For the next fiscal year.

Mr. REED. For the continuance of these places for the next year?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. REED. We are not merely appropriating money for services that have been rendered, but it is expected to carry this over into next year?

Mr. WARREN. We are not doing anything in regard to these employees except putting them on a regular roll, paying them a stated amount, and placing everything in plain sight, rather than having them paid from the cashier's desk and charged to the contingent fund. That is all.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, while the Senator is on his feet I wish to ask another question. Of course, if this bill was one that simply proposed to pay the debts that we have created, I would not rise to say anything, but it is intended now to provide for next year. Now, I want to know why a messenger gets $1,440 in some instances and $1,200 in others? What reason is there for that discrimination?

Mr. WARREN. There are differences that have been recognized heretofore in the importance of committees, according to the character and volume of their work, and there also have been differences regarding the amount of work occasioned by seniority places on the higher committees of some of the Senators. It is pretty hard to say that every committee shall have employees at the same salary and of the same number, because the work is not evenly distributed.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I can recognize the fact that one committee has work requiring technical knowledge or peculiar skill and another committee may have work of a simpler character, but the work of a messenger——

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to say to the Senator that I think he will find that the committee has not increased any salary or added anybody to the pay roll, but we have followed the law as it exists under resolutions which have been passed by the Senate. The question as to why this distinction should be made I am not able to answer, but the Senate has done it.

Mr. REED. Exactly.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will allow me, I wish to add to what the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] has said that we have but followed what has been determined upon and reported by other committees and what the Senate itself has passed upon. We are simply obeying the command of the Senate in these matters as to the salaries that are paid here. The responsibility is not with the Committee on Appropriations. If the Senator has the idea that he has to reckon with the Committee on Appropriations in this matter, he is mistaken, because the Committee on Appropriations did not fix those salaries, but, as I have said, it simply followed what the Senate itself has heretofore established in regard to them.

Mr. REED. I understand that; and nothing I have said here is intended in the slightest degree as a criticism of the committee or of its work.

Mr. WARREN. I understood that, Mr. President, but it was as a matter of information that I responded to the Senator.

Mr. OVERMAN. Many amendments have been reported by the Committee on Appropriations to the House bill. The House bill only provides for the places established under the current law which was passed last year, and the Senator will understand that what the committee have added in italics is to cover places that have been added by the Senate since that time. Heretofore there have been stuck around all over this building, in positions that nobody knew anything about, certain men—a great number of them—who were paid from the contingent fund of the Senate. A man was slipped in here and a man was slipped in there. We determined to provide for these places in the regular appropriation bill, so that the entire Senate and everyone else might know who is provided for and where he is employed, instead of having everything in the dark.

Mr. REED. I think that is very commendable, and I believe I understand the situation. The point I am trying to make, or to give expression to, in my very imperfect way, is this: It seems to me now is the time to equalize these salaries. I was saying that, of course, there might be committees having employees required to possess particular and special skill, where a salary commensurate with their ability ought to be paid, and other committees, requiring service of a simpler sort, where a smaller salary would be proper. But now, when you come to the question of a messenger, unless it is a misnomer, and unless somebody is working under the name of messenger who is not in fact a messenger, they all ought to be of about the same class and receive the same amount of pay. Simply because a resolution was passed here in the hurry of some day's work giving a messenger to a certain committee at $1,440, and the next day because a resolution was framed for another at $1,200, now when we have the matter before us there is no reason why we should perpetuate that inequality. I think that a messenger is a messenger, and whatever is just and proper to pay one should be paid to all the others. For that reason I have made these inquiries.

I think, Mr. President, they all ought to be paid $1,200 or $1,300 or $1,440, and that discrimination of this kind ought to cease. If any of these men are in fact not performing the duties of messengers, but are performing labor of a different character, they ought to be properly named in this bill, and their salaries ought to be fixed at whatever sum is right. I know the disposition of the Senate on bills of this kind is to regard such a matter as too burdensome for the Senate to pass upon in session, and consequently any effort to amend such a bill is generally regarded with little favor. That is particularly true when some Members are anxious to get away.

But as I glance over these pages, simply catching what I may as my eye runs over them, I find that the clerk's salary is very frequently $1,440, the messenger's salary very frequently $1,440; and, again, you will find plenty of clerks working at $1,200, if I am not mistaken, and you will also find plenty of messengers working at $1,200. So there is no system about it, and there is on the face of the papers no equity about it. If there be back of the mere names some reasons, I would like to know what they are.

In this connection, not to take up the time of the Senate unduly, I want to register my protest for whatever it is worth against the inequalities which exist generally. We pay a man who runs an elevator a certain salary. I think he gets a hundred dollars a month, or twelve hundred dollars a year. It is a position which can be filled with very little experience, without any education, without any special qualifications whatever. There is not one man in a thousand who can not learn to run an elevator. I am not saying that twelve hundred dollars a year is a penny too much to pay, but I think it is pretty liberal for that class of work. These men work on hours and work on shifts, so that they do not have long and tiresome hours of labor.

I never was in favor of being niggardly about the question of wages, and I am not so now, but if you come to the question of the clerks for Senators you will find messengers who are receiving as much pay as a Senator's clerk; you will find plenty of messengers receiving more pay than a Senator's stenographer; and you will find elevator men receiving the same pay as a Senator's stenographer.

The fact of the matter is, that no man is fit to be the clerk of a Senator who is not a man of education and of superior intelligence. He is constantly required to visit the departments and look after business in which the public are interested or in which various citizens of the Republic are interested, and he is required to possess a knowledge and a skill in many instances which would do credit to the ordinary lawyer. Just in proportion as he is educated, qualified, and learned is he able to serve the public and serve the constituency of his State. To keep a man of that kind at $1,440 a year, upon a par and level with a mere messenger, is inequitable, it is unjust, and it is against the interest of the public service. Any man can carry a package from one end of the town to the other and perform the duties of a mere messenger, while it requires learning, skill, and intelligence to perform these other duties in which the public are interested.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will allow me, perhaps I ought to say that a large number of these persons designated "messengers" are really clerks and stenographers; but the old name carries forward the appropriation as messengers. I think quite a proportion of them are really clerks and stenographers.

Mr. REED. That brings me to the statement I made early in my remarks, that if they are not in fact messengers, then the term is a misnomer and we ought to name them after the positions they actually occupy.

Now, I go a step further. Take stenographers to Senators. We call them, I think, messengers. They should not be so denominated. But no man is fit to hold that position who is not qualified, or at least very nearly qualified, to be a reporter in a court. The amount of work that must be performed by these men, particularly if they come from large and populous States, is onerous and burdensome in the extreme. They are frequently kept in their offices long after the usual working hours and they are required to possess a high degree of skill and efficiency.

I find that the clerk, or messenger of a Senator, as he is called—the stenographer—gets $1,200 a year; but if he happens to be a messenger for a committee he gets $1,440 a year, in some instances, and $1,200 a year in other instances. The same kind of men doing the same kind of work receive different compensations. I protest against that. I do not believe that the clerk of a Senator receives as much money as a competent stenographer ought to receive. I do believe that there are many positions around this Capitol that come under the direct jurisdiction of Congress where men are paid out of all proportion to the services they render, if we are to take as a standard the amount which is received by clerks and stenographers holding important positions.

I want to ask the Senate to give some thought and consideration to this subject. I want to ask the chairman of the committee if he does not think that these salaries could be equalized and the committee in a short time could ascertain the respective duties of the men covered by the bill and report a bill that would equalize the salaries.

Mr. WARREN. What was the Senator's inquiry? I hope the Senator will excuse me, but I was looking at the bill.

Mr. REED. I understand that the Senator was examining the bill. I made the inquiry whether it was not possible for the committee to report a bill here that would equalize the salaries and give us the proper name or title for the men engaged in the various employments which are covered by the bill. In other words, whether we could not have it stated on the face of the bill who are stenographers, and the compensation of "stenographers"; who are actually messengers, and the compensation of "messengers"; and whether they could not put all these men now in the various classes at the same salary and report a bill of that kind. Why is it necessary, if we have in the past made these inequalities by passing separate bills, to perpetuate these inequalities in this bill?

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator assume that all clerks to committees and assistant clerks should be at the same salary, exactly?

Mr. REED. I see no reason why they should not be if they put in all their time.

Mr. WARREN. That in theory, perhaps, sounds well, but it requires an experience and ability for some work, in some committees, that are not required in others. Consequently men of great experience and more talent must be employed in order to do the work. So it would hardly be possible to put them all on a level as committee clerks. Some committees never have a meeting; other committees hardly have a day's rest during the session.

Mr. REED. If the Senator will pardon me, a committee that never has a meeting has no business to have a clerk at any salary.

Mr. WARREN. Unfortunately, perhaps, but nevertheless it is true, we make no provision for a Senator to have a clerk if he is chairman of a committee. I want to say to the Senator, if he will permit me——

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. I was unfortunate enough to be placed on the subcommittee on this bill when I first went on the Committee on Appropriations, and it is the bête noir of all bills. For instance, the gentleman who preceded me as chairman of the Appropriations Committee would never serve on the subcommittee on this bill because of the immense number of salaries it carries that affect not only Senators but Members of Congress and people at large, and it is impossible, with the differences of opinion that exist, to compose those differences so as to arrive at terms of satisfaction to everybody.

We have had various committees at work upon this. For instance, the Appropriations Committee will pass a bill with certain salaries. Perhaps a week or ten days afterwards a Senator will rise in his place and introduce a resolution to provide for an extra clerk at a certain salary. That goes to a certain committee, comes back, and the Senate approves of it. It is then out of the hands of the Committee on Appropriations and the place is established by law. All that the Committee on Appropriations can do is to follow and appropriate the money. This equalization has been tried a great many times. There have been committees on equalization, and whatever has been the result, there has always been more or less dissatisfaction, because one Senator looks at his own work, perhaps, a little differently from that of his neighbor. It seems to me that the present arrangement is as equitable as any arrangement heretofore made. In fact, I believe it to be more equitable. And if changes ought to be made here, the duty belongs just as relevantly to other committees of this body as to the Committee on Appropriations, and rather, I should say, to the Committee on Contingent Expenses of the Senate, because that is the committee which is called upon from time to time to raise the salaries or increase the number of clerks.

For instance, a Senator rises and asks to have a clerk whose salary is $1,440 raised to $1,800, and the resolution goes to the Committee on Contingent Expenses, and it raises the salary of that clerk. The Committee on Appropriations thereafter accepts it as the will of the Senate.

A complete reorganization, I presume, is what the Senator is thinking of. I should never object to a reorganization if conditions could be bettered; but I must say that taking the past as a criterion, I think we have not made the progress in undertaking to reclassify that the sanguine people had hoped for.

Mr. REED. I take it, Mr. President, that the Senator does not mean to say either one of two things—that the Senate has reached a condition of perfection, and therefore no changes should be made, and to assert that it has reached a condition so hopeless that defects can not be remedied. I confess I do not criticize the Senator for not thinking that anything in the shape of a real reform can be passed in the present Senate. I am inclined to join him in the sentiment that it is a somewhat hopeless case.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, perhaps the Senator has given more color to that statement than I intended. I do not regard the present arrangement of the clerks of committees in the Senate as in complete disorder and in a position where immediate reform is necessary. I believe that generally speaking they are all right. As to a perfect arrangement I have never claimed that it was or that it ever will be. As I said, the interests of different Senators are bound to be reflected more or less in their own households, in their own clerkships, and so forth.

Mr. REED. I did not mean to put the Senator in that light, because he has been very courteous in answering these inquiries. I simply meant, by stating the matter in a somewhat extreme way, to point out what I thought was the defect in his logic.

What the Senator has said, however, warns me in insisting upon all that I have undertaken to maintain. It amounts to this: Some Senator concludes that he wants an additional clerk for a committee, which may and may not meet. He makes up his mind what he wants that clerk paid and introduces a resolution. If he happens to be a liberal and generous man, either with his own money or the public's, he introduces the proposition at a high salary. If he is of an economical turn of mind, he introduces it at a lower amount.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BORAH in the chair). Will the Senator from Missouri suspend?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is House bill 20182. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 20182) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909.

Mr. SIMMONS. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Wyoming whether he thinks we will be able to finish the consideration of the appropriation bill to-day?

Mr. WARREN. I am in hopes that we may. Of course, it is entirely within the will and pleasure of the Senate. But I think the Senator will agree with me that it is rather important to get the bill through. It is a bill of about 170 pages, with innumerable changes, and I think the Senator will agree that it is important that we should get it through as soon as we can and get it into conference, which will naturally take some time.

Mr. SIMMONS. I recognize the importance of that, Mr. President, and of course I do not desire to interfere with the Senator in going on with the appropriation bill, but I merely inquired whether he thought it was probable that he could finish the bill to-day.

Mr. WARREN. Yes; I indulge the hope that we may.

Mr. SIMMONS. In view of the importance of getting the appropriation bill into conference, I will ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, so that the Senator from Wyoming may proceed with the pending bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina asks that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Missouri will proceed.

Mr. REED. I was saying, Mr. President, that it is perfectly manifest from the statement of the Senator in charge of this bill that we have allowed the system to grow up of Senators coming before the Senate with a resolution for the employment of a clerk or a messenger and naming the compensation to be paid in the resolution and the Senate passing it without considering it in connection with the salaries paid to others filling like positions. The result is——

Mr. WARREN. No, Mr. President; I hardly think the Senator desires to carry that reflection. Of course, the chairman of this committee has been chairman for only a few months, and the reports from the committee from time to time have been such that there was no reason why he, as chairman of the committee, should contend against them, because they did not exceed the amounts that had been paid to others along the same line.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not want to take the time of the Senate in haggling about the technicalities of a statement. The fact is this bill on its face shows, as I have already stated, that here are messengers receiving $1,440 a year, here are other messengers receiving $1,200 a year, here are clerks receiving $2,500 a year, and then many clerks are receiving only $1,200 a year.

I understand perfectly well that there may be a difference in the class of men required to perform certain clerical duties, and it may be necessary to pay some of them twice as much as you pay others, because you are requiring a higher degree of skill and efficiency. But I also understand that the fundamental fact remains that time after time resolutions have been introduced here creating a basis, fixing a salary in the resolution, and without any serious consideration the resolution has been passed. The result has been that the salary has depended in most instances upon the degree of generosity or the degree of economy which is exercised by the particular individual who introduced the resolution.

Now, it does seem to me that it is utterly wrong to pay an elevator man the same salary that you pay a high-class stenographer, capable of taking his position in a court and reporting evidence; and it is absolutely wrong to pay a messenger, who carries messages, the same salary that you pay the clerk of a Senator, who is required every day of his life to serve a constituency, numbering in many instances two or three millions of people, before the various departments of the Government. The fact that these resolutions have been introduced in this haphazard way, and thus the salaries have been once fixed on an inequitable basis, is no reason why, when we come to pass a general appropriation bill, we should perpetuate the mistakes which have been made.

I am not content to see a bill passed in this way. I would be content to see it passed if the Senate would appoint a committee and instruct that committee to equalize the salaries and report its findings here to the Senate, so that when these salaries come to be paid at the next session we could fix them upon a proper basis; but in its present form it seems to me that it is very unjust.

Just let me call attention to a few of these items as I run over them. Here are, for the Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress, a clerk at $2,220 and a messenger at $1,440. I want somebody to tell me why a clerk for the Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress is a more valuable man than the clerk of a Senator. I should like to inquire whether the Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress have had one meeting at this session. I do not think there is anybody on this floor, except the members, who can tell who is on that committee without looking at the Directory.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will ask if the Senator can tell us?

Mr. REED. I do not know. I am saying that to emphasize the fact that so far as I have any light there is no reason why that salary should be $2,220, and other men should be employed requiring high skill, and constantly employed, at $1,440.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, there does not seem to be a very full attendance in the Senate; the chairman of that committee is not in his place at the present moment, but I will say that the chairman of the committee represents one of the greatest States in the Union, and the clerk is not only the clerk of the committee, but he is his personal clerk as well. He is one of those Senators who has been here a long time, so that in the distribution of the so-called steering committee on the Democratic side they have assigned to him that particular committee chairmanship. Those have been the standard rates and salaries for a number of years. It is a minority committee, and it is entirely within the hands of the minority as to who shall be the chairman. The Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] is the present chairman of that committee. I can not state how often it may have meetings or what business it does.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am not complaining about who was put in as chairman of the committee; I am not complaining that the chairman of the committee has not performed his duties; but I am complaining that a salary should be paid here of several hundred dollars more than is paid to the clerk of an ordinary committee, or more than is paid to the clerk of a Senator. That is the point.

If that was a committee constantly in session, such a committee, for instance, as the great Finance Committee, I could see how a clerk of the committee would have very onerous duties to perform and great labor, and he would of necessity possess considerable skill if he filled his place properly. But here is a committee that, so far as I know, has but slight duties to perform.

It is said he is also the clerk of a Senator. Well and good. He can not put in any more time than a clerk has to put in of a Senator coming from one of the large and populous States. He has all the work he can do as the clerk of the Senator, and if he had any considerable duties to perform as clerk of a committee he would not be able to perform both.

I take it that all this amounts to, in the long run, is that here is a man who has the title of clerk of a committee, and because he has that title, without any considerable duties to perform, he receives several hundred dollars a year more than his brother clerks, who do just as much work. Now, if that is true, it is not fair. It is not right.

Mr. WARREN. On general principles I do not believe that is true. A Senator who has no chairmanship of a committee has no responsibilities of that committee. The Senator is exclusively engaged in his business or the public business of a Senator. In the case of a chairmanship of a committee, the Senator has no clerk. He simply has the clerks of this committee, and the fact that one gets $2,200 and another $2,000 is because it is assumed that the Senator representing a great State, who has been here a number of years, has, because of his seniority, high places upon other committees, from which he has to make reports, upon which he has to expend labor, and he must have a better class of help than one who comes in new and who has not as yet those responsible duties to perform. For instance, a minority man may have a perfectly unimportant committee as chairman, but he may serve on the Appropriations or the Finance Committee or he may serve on the Naval Affairs Committee or he may serve on the Judiciary Committee, and on other important committees, and he must have his work done. If he prepares speeches, he must have his clerk hunt for his citations and papers, and he must do his departmental work. It has been thought that the difference between $2,000 for a newcomer who has no committee and $2,220 for the older Senator who has increasing duties is not a distinction between the two that is reprehensible in any way. That has been not only the belief of one side of the Chamber but of both sides of the Chamber.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, that is a strange philosophy. It amounts to this, that as a man gets wise and needs help less, because of his accumulated wisdom, he shall have wise men to surround him and advise him and assist him. But in the days of his darkness and ignorance, when he first breaks into the effulgence of this great body, he is not only to have his mind clouded by ignorance, but he is to be hobbled by inferior help. The truth is, if it was desired to put those of us who are newcomers, who suffer by reason of our inability to comply with the law of seniority, upon a basis of usefulness we ought to have high-priced men assigned to us so that we would not make so many mistakes.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. I agree with the Senator's position as to newcomers. I have been a newcomer, and I desire to say to the Senator that I had no clerk. No other newcomer had in those days, except during the session itself, when he had a per diem clerk. I felt very much like making a row about it, as far as I could, and I succeeded, after long and strenuous effort, in obtaining an annual clerk at $1,200; and that is all a new Senator had here for years. I was one of those who strove to have it higher in the first place, and I have striven since then. The salary went from that sum to $1,500, and then to $1,800, and finally to $2,000, with a second clerk, or messenger, at $1,200. All that time the clerk of the Committee on Accommodations of the Library, which the Senator has seen fit to allude to specifically, had $2,220, just as he has now, and those $2,220 clerks are the same as they were then, when we newcomers could not get even one $1,200 clerk. So I think that, speaking in the line of reform, if the Senator is right in the reform that he proposes, he will at least admit that we have proceeded quite a way along the route he asks us to travel.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, that is very encouraging. A moment ago the Senator discouraged me; he led me to believe that it was impossible to effect any change in this body; that we had either reached a condition of perfection or a condition of fossilization, I do not know which, but anyway that we could not move.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator's remarks are very amusing; but I did not make any such statement as that, as the RECORD will show.

Mr. REED. That was my construction. Of course we all construe things differently. I confess there are some things here so abstruse anybody is likely to make mistakes; at least I am.

Now, I did not single out that committee to criticize it. I expressly said I did not criticize the committee. I did not criticize the Senator. I made no complaint on that ground, but as my eye happened to strike that one committee I inquired why the clerk of the committee received more than the clerk of a Senator, in view of the fact that the Senator had stated he was, in fact, merely the clerk of the chairman, having whatever small duties there were connected with the committee. I did not single it out for criticism, and I do not do it now. It was just one item that happened to strike my eye.

Mr. President, the Senator's remarks between the words and between the sentences reveal this: He states that when he first came here as a Senator he had no clerk, he had no stenographer, he had no help, but that these positions with these high salaries then existed.

Mr. WARREN. Excuse me. I said I had no help except a per diem man during the session.

Mr. REED. Yes, I accept the correction. But the Senator said the positions at higher salaries then existed. If I understand the Senator's argument right, it amounts to this: The theory is that when you come here you do not amount to much anyway; that there are various plums or persimmons high up on the tree, and when you have been here long enough you will get some of the plums.

Mr. President, that is the very thing I am protesting against. I am protesting not on account of the Senators, because whatever honors a Senator can get by long service, that comes to him personally and because of his experience, well and good, let him have them. I am not discussing that, but I do insist that the man who happens to be clerk for a Senator who has been here 10 years is not in equity or good conscience entitled to any more pay than a clerk who performs the same duties for a man who has been here only 10 months.

I go further than that. The Senator stated that he got along when he first came here with a per diem man. Well, if I represented a State with only 150,000 voters in it, or less, I could get along with a per diem man now. I do not say that to criticize the Senator nor to criticize his State, but there is a sufficient inequality now arising out of the fact that some Senators have to keep up a correspondence with the people of a State that has a population of 200,000 or 250,000 people; and others have to look after States, as I believe in the case of New York, of five and a half million people, and the work is not equal.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. Perhaps the Senator has forgotten that a State like New York has 37 or 40 or 42 Members of Congress, while the smallest States have but one Member, and so the correspondence comes to Senators from small States that would naturally go to Members of the House from large States. It is hardly fair to say that the representation is the same with the small State that has but one Representative in Congress.

Mr. REED. But they have the same representation here. Then I want in all fairness to say to the Senator from Wyoming that there is a great difference between the burdens falling upon any man in the Senate to-day and the burdens that fell upon a Senator 10 or 12 years ago. Of course, I can not speak of that from experience; I was not here; but I can speak of it from equally certain knowledge. We have added in the last 10 or 15 years to the departments of this Government; we have added to the Cabinet; we have added all sorts of bureaus; we have multiplied the work of the Federal Government enormously; and year after year that is growing and increasing, so that to-day a man who sits here representing a State with any considerable population can keep a clerk and a very competent stenographer busy at their machines 8 and 10 hours a day and yet fall behind in the work that comes crowding upon him.

I have taken, because of these interruptions, about ten times as much of the Senate's time as I expected. I say that in my humble judgment a committee ought to be appointed to equalize the salaries of these various employees and to report back to the Senate; and at the proper time I intend to offer that kind of a resolution. I do not intend to undertake to obstruct the passage of this bill; that is furthest from my thought; but I should like to see it so arranged that men performing similar work would get the same pay; and it does seem to me that is not an impossible task.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, we evidently look upon this question from a different standpoint. The necessity of a Senator depends upon the work which he has to perform as a Senator regardless of his committee. The work assigned to a Senator who chances to be chairman of a committee that has little before it may be greater than that of a committee that has much business before it and none before any other. All this morning, before the meeting of the Senate, my clerks were engaged upon work assigned to me as a subcommittee by a committee of which I am not chairman. I have five assignments of that kind. It keeps the clerks busy.

My Committee on Manufactures affords a good deal of work, but committees of which I am not chairman involve upon me many times as much work, and receive, or must receive, at the hands of my secretary, much more work than the committee of which I am chairman. It will not do at all to judge a Senator's work by the amount of work before the committee of which he happens to be chairman. For instance, the Committee on the Philippines refer to me a bill which involves the making of a tariff law for that committee, or any other matter of that importance; they refer it to me as a member of the Committee on the Philippines, not as chairman of the Committee on Manufactures. I can not go to the Committee on the Philippines and say: "Please detail me some clerical force here to assist with this work"; I am not at liberty to do that. The nominal clerks of the Committee on Manufactures must do that work. The Committee on Public Lands refer measures that require a vast amount of work, research, and preparation for report in great detail. I can not go to the Committee on Public Lands and say, "I should like to have the assistance of some of the clerks to the Committee on Public Lands to do this work." I must do it with the clerks of the Committee on Manufactures. Thus it goes. I think it will be obvious that you can not measure the necessity for assistance by the chairman of a committee by the business that is referred to the committee of which he is chairman.

We have suffered under that condition here throughout many years, and it is pretty annoying to be required to do work and to have men coming to you, as they are coming to me continually, and saying, "How soon can you get that report ready?" "How soon can you report this measure from the committee?" of which I am not chairman at all, and urging me to do the work. I work all kinds of hours and under all kinds of extraordinary circumstances, yet a committee of this body, invested with the recommending power in regard to clerical help that a committee shall have, declines to give me another assistant. The result is that I am compelled to suffer under the burden of insufficient help. Is that fair?

I have no idle committees; I have no nominal assignments to any committee. I am on eight committees, and there are none of them committees without business.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. REED. I do not know whether the Senator from Idaho was really addressing his remarks to me, but whether he was or not I am enlightened by what he says. I understand him to say that, being burdened with work imposed upon him as a member of various committees, he has to call in to help him the clerks assigned to the committee of which he is chairman.

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not have to call them in. I have them there.

Mr. REED. You have them there and use them.

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. REED. That is all right for a Senator who is the chairman of a committee, but what becomes of a Senator who is a member of a number of important committees and who has work assigned to him but who, unfortunately, is chairman of no committee and has no extra clerks?

Mr. HEYBURN. He should have sufficient clerical force to enable him readily and easily to perform any duties that may be assigned to him. In raising this question the Senator referred to the Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress.

Mr. REED. Would the Senator pardon me a moment, while we are on that matter?

Mr. HEYBURN. Just a moment. The chairman of that committee is on the Committee on Census, on the Committee on Finance, on the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands, and on the Committee on Rules. Any one of those committees, and some others that I did not mention, would require as much clerical help as he has, and perhaps more. He is not a Senator for some particular committee or from some particular State, but he is a Senator of the United States. He is as much a Senator for the State of Missouri as he is for the State of Texas.

Mr. REED. I am not trying to get into an argument with the Senator, understand me. I agree with his last statement that the Senator who is chairman of this committee and a number of the other committees which have just been named by the Senator is a Senator from his State and is also a Senator of the United States, but that is true of every Member of the body——

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. REED. According to his capacity. Of course there are some men of greater experience, of greater natural ability than others, and they may be more potential; but the Senator from Idaho has expressed an idea that I should like to get his view upon. He stated that if a Senator did not have the chairmanship of a committee, he ought to have all the help that is necessary, or some similar expression.

Mr. HEYBURN. For the work that he has to perform.

Mr. REED. Yes. I agree with the Senator on that point. The very thing that I complain about is that this additional help comes not to a Senator because of the labors which may be actually imposed upon him, but it comes because he happens to be the chairman of a committee. If he does not get the chairmanship of a committee, he does not get the additional help. For instance—not to make it personal at all—the Senator from Idaho is chairman of the Committee on Manufactures. I happen to be an humble member of that committee. I grant fully that the chairman, because he is chairman, perhaps, and perhaps for many other reasons, has a greater burden upon that committee than have I, but the Senator is also a member of several other important committees, and he has a large amount of work assigned to him. He is able to perform that work in part, at least, because as chairman of the Committee on Manufactures he has the command or the direction, at least, of the clerks of that committee, and he uses them as best he is able to use them to assist him in the work which calls to him from other committees. Of that I make no complaint or criticism; but that is a privilege that comes to the chairman of a committee; it does not come to anybody else.

I want to ask the Senator if he does not believe that a committee ought to be appointed to equalize all of these matters, including salaries? We started in discussing merely, as the Senator will remember, the question of differences in salaries; and, as usual, we have gotten a little aside from the question; but the Senator from Idaho has certain clerks in the Manufactures Committee. He may have an expert or two there, but there certainly is an inequality, a difference in the salaries that are paid to men performing exactly the same kind of labor.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I will simply say that in the work that has been done and presented to this body from the Committee on Manufactures there has never been any expert called in.

Mr. REED. What are the salaries paid in that committee; does the Senator recall?

Mr. HEYBURN. To whom?

Mr. REED. To the clerks to the Manufactures Committee.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have it right here.

Mr. REED. I would not bother the Senator to look it up.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have it right here, if the Senator will pardon me:

Clerk to the Committee on Manufactures, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,440; messenger, $1,440.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Committee on Manufactures has one $2,500 clerk, one $1,440 clerk, and a messenger.

Mr. REED. Let me ask the Senator, without making this personal—I am simply trying to get light—does the Senator have in addition to those clerks two other clerks of his own?

Mr. HEYBURN. Do I have what?

Mr. REED. Does the Senator have any additional clerks of his own?

Mr. HEYBURN. No; I have not. When I require additional service, I pay for it myself.

Mr. REED. The three clerks of the Manufactures Committee do your personal work unless you pay for it yourself?

Mr. HEYBURN. My personal work?

Mr. REED. I mean your work in committee.

Mr. HEYBURN. I quit personal work when I came to the Senate. I do my public work here.

Mr. REED. The Senator is——

Mr. HEYBURN. I say that in entire good temper.

Mr. REED. Oh, certainly. When I said "personal work" I meant the work which the Senator performs as a Senator aside from his work in the committee. The clerk of the Senator's committee receives $2,500. If the Senator were not the chairman of a committee that clerk would receive but $1,800 a year, if I understand correctly.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I must correct the Senator from Missouri. The sum of $2,000 a year is the minimum for any Senator's clerk.

Mr. REED. Two thousand dollars. Very well.

Mr. HEYBURN. May I help the Senator out a little?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. The clerk the Senator refers to as receiving $2,500 is Mr. Addison T. Smith. Mr. Smith is not only useful to the committee of which he is clerk, but he is called upon by Senators in connection with legislation affecting their committees, and as a member of the bar of this District. He has been more than 20 years in the service of the committee. He was before that in the other House. He is a man capable of performing the duties of a member of either of these bodies; he is useful not only to the committee or to me, but, I repeat, he is useful to many other Senators who come to him for information and suggestions.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me just once more, that brings the matter right to the point from which I started, or almost to that point, that if there are men possessed of a certain knowledge and special skill they ought to be so classified. All men possessing that expert knowledge and skill ought to be compensated for it; but, outside of those special instances, it still remains true that one messenger gets $1,200, another gets $1,440, and one clerk gets $1,440, while another gets but $1,200, and that these inequalities run throughout this bill. I do not believe that the Senator—I know he will state it fairly—will say that these inequalities do not exist to a large extent, that they ought to be remedied, and that equalization ought to result.

Mr. HEYBURN. Does the Senator think that in the case of Mr. Smith there should be a reduction in his salary? Mr. Smith voluntarily, during the ordinary recess of the Senate, when employees are enjoying themselves, as a rule, took charge of the affairs of the investigation of Mr. STEPHENSON at Milwaukee and spent his time there, days and nights, up to midnight very often, in gathering the witnesses, arranging them, and providing for them, so that the work ran like a piece of machinery. There are very few men who can do that kind of work. He did it, as I say, in addition to his duties in connection with the Committee on Manufactures. Would the Senator think that his pay should be reduced at all?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have been very clear in my statement that I am not here haggling to reduce the salaries of men below where they ought to be. I said very clearly, perhaps before the Senator came in, that it was not a question with me of trying to cut down the salaries of these employees, but it was a question of giving the same pay for the same kind of work to all men engaged in that same kind of work with the same degree of capacity.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I ask the Senator would he give to all other men holding similar positions the same pay, whether they performed the work or not?

Mr. REED. No, Mr. President; I would classify these clerks, and if there was a man possessed of special skill, learning, and ability I would put him in class A, to illustrate.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then what would you do with him after you put him there?

Mr. REED. I would give him a salary commensurate with his duties.

Mr. HEYBURN. What would be his duty after you have placed him in class A? Would he be transferred to some other committee?

Mr. REED. Oh, not necessarily. The Committee on Manufactures, a great committee, might be entitled to a clerk of that kind. That is not difficult to get at; but the Senator is a little aside—he is too logical not to see the point—from the point I am discussing. You can not break down the force of the fact that there are inequalities between men performing the same kind of service by showing that there is some man who does not perform the same kind of service and who is entitled to greater pay. If we have men of special skill, let us so classify them and so pay them. What I complain of is that throughout this bill there is not one illustration, but there are scores of illustrations, of the fact that men who do perform substantially the same service as others do not receive the same pay.

If the inequality exists, whether we can wipe it out absolutely and reach a condition of perfection is not the question; but the question is, Can we improve it? I ask the Senator candidly and fairly if he does not believe that a committee assigned to this work could improve present conditions?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, conditions shift from day to day. The Senator knows from experience that a period of six months might intervene during which there would be no assigned duty to a committee or to the chairman of a committee, and then again for six weeks there might be some important matter assigned to him as chairman or member of a subcommittee every week; so that I would be curious to know upon what basis the Senator would attempt to equalize conditions.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. HEYBURN. Now, just a moment, and I will close; and then the Senator will have free opportunity. I only intervened to make the suggestions I have submitted, because I have sometimes rather chafed under the situation that existed here, where a committee—and I do not intend to be personal in my criticism of it—endowed with the power of reporting favorably or otherwise upon the applications for assistant help by a committee should receive a resolution introduced in this body and bury it. I would rather have them report adversely on it.

In the last session of Congress and in this session I introduced a resolution asking for an additional assistant clerk, but it has not been reported upon; it has been treated with a contempt of inattention that is not becoming in this body. I have frequently intended to call up the resolution and ask that the committee be discharged from its consideration, but I have enough rows on hand and so I have not moved in the matter. They have, however, no right to remain silent, and I do not intend they shall remain silent many days.

The idea that because the chairman of some committee only has a certain amount of business, every other Senator should be cut down to his size is an erroneous view of this thing. All any Senator wants is enough help. No Senator wants to have sitting around him in state and idleness people who have nothing to do—if he does, he is not fit to be in any body of this kind—but he does want enough help to perform the duties that he has to perform, and his judgment ought to count for something in the matter rather than the judgment of a lot of men who do not know anything about it, who do not seek to know, and do not even inquire, but who measure it up by some rule of political graft. I am getting tired of it. I do not consider what they call the patronage of this body as graft, and, so far as I am concerned, I will measure it by the necessities of the occasion. If a committee needs help, so far as I am concerned, that committee should have all the help it wants—and when I use the term "committee," I mean the chairman of the committee, because the chairman of the committee is the committee, so far as the responsibilities of the committee are concerned.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I thought the Senator had concluded.

Mr. HEYBURN. No; the Senator will know when I am through. I will be through when I sit down.

Mr. President, I want to see the rule established here that whenever the chairman of a committee applies for more help he will get it. A Senator, being chairman of a committee, who would apply for help when he did not need it ought to be turned out of this body, but he ought to be present when he was tried; it ought not to be a question to be disposed of in silence behind the door of some committee room, and for that reason I object to the rule suggested by the Senator from Missouri. How can a Senator perform his duties unless he has help enough to do them? I have known men who did not know how to work but were always attempting to criticize the work that other men performed. I have known men who were so lazy by nature that they did nothing themselves, and their greatest discomfort arose out of the fact that other people did work. Now I will sit down.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I had not intended to intrude into this very interesting debate. I agree with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] that there ought to be a committee appointed by the Senate for the purpose of considering and, if possible, decreasing the expenses of the Senate and equalizing the pay of employees to some extent—of course, with due regard to the character of the work to be performed by the employee. I have been drawn into the discussion, however, by rather a vicious attack made by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] upon the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, in which he virtually charges that, for some reason or other, they have not accorded due meed of recognition to the claim which the country has upon him and which he has upon the services of assistants.

The Senator seems to forget that he has made his main argument upon the ground that employees ought not to be paid in proportion to the importance of the committees which they serve as clerks or assistant clerks, but because a man who happens to be chairman of an unimportant committee might have a great deal of other work to do. Mr. President, it is also true that a man who happens to be chairman of no committee at all frequently has a great deal of work to do. His correspondence and his department work are perhaps equal to the similar work of the chairman of a committee; and then when he comes to the work which he must do on a subcommittee of committees of which he is a member, that work is equal, at any rate in proportion to the number of committees to that assigned to other members of the committee who are chairmen.

The Senator has made this rather uncalled-for attack upon the committee, and it may be due to other Members of the Senate to let the Senate know what assistance the Senator from Idaho already has. The Senator from Idaho, as chairman of the Committee on Manufactures—a committee, I take it, which in itself does not entail much labor—and the Senator himself has rather confessed that what labor was entailed upon him by his senatorial service was entailed upon him as a member of some other committee or simply as a Senator—he has, as chairman of this unimportant committee, first, a clerk at $2,500—and I believe the clerk of no other committee has any greater salary, except the clerks to the Committees on Appropriations, Finance, and perhaps one or two others of first magnitude, which do a great deal of work and who do committee work, not merely the chairman's work—he has a clerk at $2,500, then an assistant clerk at $1,440, and a messenger at $1,440. One of these last is nearly always a stenographer.

Now, take as a mere illustration, the case of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] or that of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN]. Each of them has to help him in doing his work only one clerk, who gets $2,000, and one stenographer, who gets $1,200; so that there has been no unfair treatment of the Senator from Idaho. He is enjoying—I have not time to calculate it now—the assistance of $2,880 plus $2,500 amounting to $5,380 worth of hired assistance.

Neither one of the two other Senators I have mentioned, and many others, such as the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. WATSON], and I myself, although some of us are on important committees, which entail a great deal of work, and we have the same work in connection with subcommittees that the Senator from Idaho has, none of us has more than $2,000 plus $1,200, which amounts to $3,200 worth of assistance.

Of course a man may make for himself any amount of work in the world he wants to. I knew a man once, a lawyer in my town, who, with five cases on the docket, could keep himself busy 16 hours a day. He hardly ever had over five cases at a term of court, yet he never seemed up with his work. It depends upon how the man works and upon his ability to focus himself upon his work.

But I did not rise to discuss the general subject. The chairman of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRIGGS], is absent. Another member of the committee, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], is also absent; the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] is absent—all seem to be out of the Chamber except me. I rose only to say that I think the attack made upon the committee on the ground that it had been actuated by some desire of doing injustice to the Senator from Idaho or to any other Senator is totally ill placed. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW], another member of the committee, I see is present, and I believe he, with the Senators I have named, and I constitute the full committee.

I am sure that there is no man upon the committee who ever had the slightest idea of considering a proposition of this sort when put to them in any way except upon its merits. The committee came to the conclusion that the Senator from Idaho had already more help than the majority of the Members of the Senate, and therefore was not entitled to any more. We turned down several requests from several other Senators in just the same way and for just the same reason. As usual in the world, it is those who already have too much who cry for more.

The Senator from Idaho says that when any chairman of a committee asks for clerical help he ought to have whatever he asks for. That will not do. The Senator says, in reenforcing his statement, that no Senator who is chairman of a committee would ask for any help that he did not need. Ah, what a man needs is one thing and what a man thinks he needs or fancies he needs is another thing. I take it that no chairman of a committee would ask for anything that he did not think he needed, but that is a different thing from what he really needs, and a man ought to get along, if possible, with what he needs. I dare say if we adopted the rule of giving to every chairman of a committee of this body all the clerical and messenger service that he requested we would soon double the clerical and messenger expenditures of the Senate of the United States. I had the honor not long ago to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that it costs the American people for the Senate and House of Representatives to be waited upon ten times as much at its costs the English people for the House of Lords and the House of Commons. This disparity is not decreasing, but is increasing.

Now, as to myself, I have simply a clerk and a stenographer. I have no messenger; I have no assistant clerk or any help of that sort. I find that by doing a good deal of the work myself, as we all must do in the long run, for most of it can not be left to clerks and one must do it one's self, my force is not very much overworked, although at times it has to work long hours, but only when I work with them, and that I myself am not very much overworked. I could work more without danger to my health or without any risk of depriving of its necessary attention any other business that called upon me for attention.

Much of our time, of course, is taken up by sitting in the Senate. Lately this has been abused to some extent, because every time a Senator makes a speech it has become a habit for some one to call for a quorum to listen to him. We might be at work in our offices a good deal of the time, and we would be doing much more good than sitting here listening to one another, unless the discussion be upon some subject in which one is especially interested and where he wants to find out something from others to fix his conclusion. Very frequently the question under discussion is one with which one is familiar and about which one has formed his opinion and upon which he knows beforehand how he is going to vote; but still we are compelled to sit here and listen to Senators two, three, and four hours at a time.

I do not think the Senator from Idaho, upon second thought, will assert that he has been just in his criticism of the committee. The committee could not possibly be actuated by any desire to do him an injustice or by any desire to be partial to anybody else over him. It was actuated by the same motive in his case that has actuated it in every other case, when it has received requests of the same character with like result. The recital of the membership of the committee and of the present clerical and messenger assistance enjoyed by the Senator as compared with that enjoyed by other Senators of at least equal ability and capacity for service demonstrate that fact.

Mr. BRISTOW. Supplementary to what has been said by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], I desire to say that the Committee on Manufactures, of which the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] is chairman, has the same number of clerks that the Committee on Commerce has—three—the only difference being that the assistant clerk in the case of the Committee on Commerce gets $1,800, while what might be termed the assistant clerk of the Committee on Manufactures gets $1,440. The Committee on Manufactures has the same number of clerks as has the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. REED. I want to use that to illustrate the point I was making, that one of the clerks of the Committee on Manufactures gets $1,440, while in the case of the Committee on Commerce the assistant clerk gets $1,800. Do I correctly understand the Senator?

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes.

Mr. REED. There are two important committees, one the Committee on Commerce and the other the Committee on Manufactures, and I happen to be a member of both those committees. Does the Senator know of any reason for that difference in the salary, based upon merit? Let me say to the Senator—he has come in since I began to make my remarks—that I do not rise here to criticize the committee making this report, and I have not criticized them. I am simply urging the equalization of compensation where the service is the same, and upon that point this debate started.

Mr. BRISTOW. I do not think it is practicable to determine with mathematical accuracy what the specific compensation of this clerk or that clerk should be. It seems to me that $1,800 is not an excessive compensation for the second clerk or the assistant clerk to the Committee on Commerce. I consider that one of the very important committees of the Senate. Take the Committee on Foreign Relations. It has the same number of clerks as has the Committee on Manufactures, of which the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] is the chairman. The assistant clerk of the Committee on Foreign Relations get more pay than does the assistant clerk to the Committee on Manufactures. It would seem to me that that is perfectly proper, because it requires a man of wider experience, at least presumably it does. These committees have been adjusted through the years and years of experience, and I do not think you can pass a general act fixing specific and definite compensation for the clerks of all committees alike. I do not think it could be made to apply with exact justice and equity.

The Committee on Contingent Expenses in passing upon the requests coming before it does the best it can to treat every Senator fairly and generously, as it thinks it is justified, considering the expenditures of the Senate and the amount of work that is to be done. Of course it is very difficult to determine with exact accuracy what ought to be done. We can only do the best we can with the information we have.

I am sorry the chairman of the committee is not here, but in justice to the committee that has passed on a number of such requests during this session of Congress, I want to say that we have considered the request of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] and have not passed favorably upon his request for a fourth clerk, because we did not think it was justified, considering the clerks that were assigned to other committees.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I would say it would result in this: That if we have not clerical force enough to do the work, we will not take the work; in other words, one is not compelled to accept an assignment to duty as a subcommittee; and when things pile up beyond the possibility of reporting on them, it will result in Senators refusing to act on subcommittees; that is all. I am only about five assignments behind now; I hope to catch up this week if no more will come to me, but I certainly am not going to take work that I can not perform for want of clerical assistance.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I am not entirely certain that it is a wise rule to allow one Senator the assistance of three people and allow other Senators the assistance of only two. The only explanation, perhaps I ought to say the only defense, of that is that, as the Senators grow in length of service, they have come into this additional assistance, and I believe that nearly any Senator who remains here longer than one term will find that the demands on his time increase with the length of his service. The matter equalizes itself at last, because the Senator who remains finally has the assistance which these increased demands upon his time and his attention make necessary. But I am not sure that that is a sufficient reason, and I would be willing to give to each Senator as much clerical assistance as may be allowed to any other Senator. But while I am in some doubt about that I am in no doubt whatever that there is an entirely sufficient reason for what appear to be the discrepancies in the salaries, and I do not predicate that explanation upon the fact that one clerk may be more important than another. We understand that the committee chairmanships come to Senators according to the length of their service; and it is fair to say that the clerk of a Senator serves somewhat in proportion to the length of the Senator's service; and if the United States does not increase the pay of a long-time and faithful employee over and above the pay of a beginner, it is the only institution in the land that fails to observe that just and proper rule. You go into a storehouse and you find several clerks at the same counter. One, having been there a long time and thus better qualified to do his employer's work, will be receiving a higher salary than a clerk of equal character and equal intelligence, but less experienced.

I happen to know that the clerk to the Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Library has been here for nearly 20 years, first in the other House and then in the Senate, and I think I pay him no compliment above what he deserves when I say that he possesses a capacity equal to some Senators and some Representatives, and if a 20 years' service does not earn for him the moderate addition of $250 as against a clerk or secretary in the first year or two of his service, then we fail to observe the rule that obtains in all other places.

Mr. WILLIAMS. As an illustration as to what the Senator said of the difference in value of clerkships of the various committees, the Senator will remember an illustration in the House of Representatives which proves that sometimes a man becomes indispensable as a clerk to a certain committee. The Senator will recall that the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives has served there since before the Senator and I entered the other House, has served under both parties, neither one thinking that they could get along without him. Of course, a man of that kind deserves and ought to have very much higher pay than a man who serves as clerk of a committee whose duties almost anybody might be capable of performing.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator is entirely right about that, and I fully agree with him. But in what I am saying I am leaving out of account the important work of a committee, and I am considering the matter as it relates to the individual work of a Senator. The first clerk provided for here is a clerk of a committee that never meets, but that clerk does his work, and he does it with unusual fidelity and intelligence. I think the increase in his salary since he has been an employee of the Senate has not been greater proportionately than the increase which has come to the Senators themselves in their salaries. I believe that it works itself out justly and fairly in the end, unless it be, indeed, that a Senator employs a clerk or a secretary, and finds him unsatisfactory and dismisses him, or unless it might happen to be that some Senator uses his clerkship or secretary's place as political patronage, and passes it around among his deserving supporters. In those cases, of course, the clerks or secretaries do not get the benefit of the increase which is predicated upon supposed length of service. I believe that the man who has been here for 20 years is entitled to a little more than the man who has been here 10 years, because he is undoubtedly better able to do the work; he can render better service to the Senator himself; and I think a secretary who has been here 10 years is entitled to something more than a secretary who has been here only two years, because he can undoubtedly render better service.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will permit me, in reenforcement of what I have said, the clerk to whom the Senator has referred, has been here 20 years in the public service and has fitted himself for his place by long time, and yet he gets only $2,220, whereas the clerk of the Committee on Manufactures gets $2,500. The Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Library has no assistant clerk at all, whereas the Committee on Manufactures has an assistant clerk at $1,440. They each have a messenger at $1,440.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I want to be entirely frank with the Senate. I have three persons assisting me, and I have never inquired exactly how the provision was made, and I hope the chairman of the committee has not omitted the provision to pay them, because they all earn it. I know that the clerk of the Committee on Manufactures receives $250 more than the clerk of the Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Library, but I can not believe that any clerk who is merely the clerk of a Senator in the Chamber earns more than the clerk to the Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Library.

But I did not arise to institute a comparison of that kind. I only rose to suggest that I believe there is a basis for a difference in the salaries of the clerks, because it will be found upon examination that it is graduated according to a presumed length of service; and I believe the better rule is to let these clerks come into an increase by a length of service here as we do in almost every other relation of our lives.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, just a word. The Senator from Texas discusses this matter in a very fair way, and there is no quarrel between his ideas and mine, in the main. I have not urged that there should not be a difference in salaries of employees of the Senate. I have urged that there should be no difference in salary where there is the same character of service rendered and the same amount of service rendered. I agree with the Senator from Texas that if a clerk remains at his post of duty for many years and acquires special skill, in fixing his salary his increased usefulness and his fidelity should be considered. I said that early in my remarks. I have not varied from it.

I have said from the first that if there are men employed by committees in positions that require special skill, and those men have that skill, they should be paid for it. The Senator from Texas dropped a remark, however, which I think is explanatory of this situation, and that was that these clerks were presumed to have greater experience, as I understood it, because they are the clerks of the chairmen of committees, which chairmen would be men of greater experience or they would not have the positions.

Mr. BAILEY. Not greater experience, but a longer time of service. These committee chairmanships go by seniority. I have never had very much patience with that rule, but it is observed. For instance, if the Senator will permit me——

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. As the Senators holding the minority chairmanships pass out for one reason or another, the Senators next in order of service step up, and the chairmanships are not presumed to mean larger experience except where a larger experience must be presumed from a longer service.

Mr. REED. Yes; I understand that, and there is no difference between us.

The question, then, resolves itself into this: The chairman of a committee gets to be chairman because of length of service. Now, his clerk is presumed—because he is the clerk of a man of longer experience—to be a clerk of longer experience.

That is a presumption. But I am afraid that it is a presumption that is not always based on fact. The difference in salary ought not to be determined upon the presumption following merely from the fact that one man works under another, but it ought to be a fact itself.

I take it there can be no difference among Senators in regard to this view: First, if a man is required to possess special skill and knowledge, he ought to receive more pay than a man who is not required to possess it; and, second, it would be entirely proper to recognize length of service in fixing salaries, because that would have a tendency to encourage men to hold these positions.

That brings me back to the point I was discussing an hour ago: That these positions ought to be classified; and if there is a committee that requires a skilled man for its clerk, that fact ought to be ascertained, and it can be ascertained, and a salary ought to be paid which would compensate the individual holding the place for his special skill. When you get outside of those positions requiring special skill, then the salaries ought to be fixed according to the value of the work. There ought to be no question about that among Senators. I insist that these inequalities stand out on the face of this bill.

The Senator from Texas spoke of the long length of service of the clerk of his committee. Well and good; he ought to be paid for that. I agree to that. But look at the bill as we go along. Here is a messenger to the Committee on Coast and Insular Surveys. That messenger gets $1,440 a year. Is that based upon length of service or special skill? There is certainly nothing to show it. The messenger to the Committee on Coast Defenses gets $1,200 a year. Why should there be that difference? The assistant clerk to the Committee on Conservation of National Resources gets only $1,200 a year. The messenger for that committee, ranking below the assistant clerk, gets $1,440 a year. The clerk to the Committee to Examine the Several Branches of the Civil Service gets $2,220, and the messenger to that committee gets $1,440.

Now, Mr. President, I am not going to weary the Senate by going through this bill, but it is just as plain as anything can be that, taking the bill by and large, these salaries have not been fixed with reference to length of service. They have not been fixed with reference to special ability or special fitness. We have crystallized in this bill the haphazard legislation that has gone through the Senate from time to time, and we are perpetuating here the inequalities which arise from the fact that one man in introducing a resolution asked for a certain salary to be fixed to a certain position then to be created and another man introducing a resolution to create a similar position fixed a different salary.

I take it that the Senate is in no humor to undertake to thrash this matter out at this time. What I have said has been with a view of challenging, if I could, attention to these inequalities and with a view to introducing a resolution to create a committee and direct that committee to report a bill that will, as far as possible, equalize the present inequalities.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued on page 3, line 20.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 9, on page 11.

Mr. REED. I move to strike out the figures "1,200" in the ninth line, on page 11, and to insert the figures "1,800."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 11, line 9, after the dollar mark, strike out "1,200" and in lieu insert "1,800," so as to read:

Stenographers to Senators: For 22 stenographers to Senators who are not chairmen of committees, and 3 stenographers to the chairmen of the three junior minority committees, at $1,800 each.

Mr. WARREN. It was the unanimous-consent agreement of the Senate that we should first consider the committee amendments before other amendments were to be offered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair inadvertently forgot that. The amendment will be reserved until after the committee amendments have been acted on.

Mr. REED. Did I understand that there has been a unanimous-consent agreement of that kind?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There was when the bill was taken up. The unanimous-consent request was that the bill should be read for amendment, that the committee amendments should first be acted on, and then other amendments would be in order. That was the request submitted to the Senate.

Mr. REED. I beg pardon of the Senate. I did not know that that was the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator the usual course is to go through with the bill as we are doing, and certain amendments will then, perhaps, be offered by the committee, and following those the bill will be open to amendments offered on the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that where there is a Senate amendment an amendment could be offered at the time.

Mr. WARREN. Oh, yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. An amendment to the amendment.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Do I understand that it is in order for me to offer an amendment now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; the Chair is constrained to answer in the negative because it is not an amendment we are now upon. If there were a committee amendment pending, an amendment by the Senator would be in order to that amendment, but not an independent amendment, and there is now before the Senate no amendment.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 11, line 12, after the word "including," to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$6,000"; and in line 13, after the word "Senate," to strike out "$16,625" and insert "$18,125," so as to make the clause read:

Contingent expenses, namely: For stationery and newspapers for Senators and the President of the Senate, including $6,000 for stationery for committees and officers of the Senate, $18,125.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to ask the Senator in charge of the bill about that item "for stationery and newspapers for Senators and the President of the Senate." Are there really any newspapers that are bought by the Senate for Senators?

Mr. WARREN. That is the old language; and if a Senator chooses to have newspapers charged to his regular allowance of $120, it may be done.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But it never is done in any case now.

Mr. WARREN. Hardly ever; but the Senator knows that every six months settlement is made with each Senator as to his stationery account.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. If he has taken any newspapers, they can be charged to him. Otherwise, the money is handed him if he has not drawn the stationery.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would suggest that the chairman of the committee offer an amendment striking out the words "and newspapers," because it leads to a good deal of confusion in the public mind. A great many people in the United States think that payment is made out of the contingent fund for the newspapers Senators read. It is little things like these—little mistakes for the most part—that prejudice the public mind, when handled with a view and purpose of creating prejudice. People see that sort of thing repeated in the newspapers and they do not know any better.

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator that that is in the main part of the bill. I shall not object if the Senator offers the amendment when we get to the matter of receiving amendments. I shall not oppose it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I was going to suggest that the chairman of the committee offer it. I will do it, though, later if you say so.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 11, line 22, after the word "thousand," to strike out "$2,000" and insert "$8,000," so as to make the clause read:

For folding speeches and pamphlets, at a rate not exceeding $1 per thousand, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 22, to insert:

For fuel, oil, cotton waste, and advertising, for the heating apparatus, exclusive of labor, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 25, after the word "furniture," to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$8,500," so as to make the clause read:

For purchase of furniture, $8,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 2, after the word "laborer," to strike out "$2,000" and insert "$3,000," so as to make the clause read:

For materials for furniture and repairs of same, exclusive of labor, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 6, to insert:

For rent of warehouse for storage of public documents for the Senate, $3,600, to be immediately available, and authority is hereby given to use any part or all of said sum for moving documents contained in said warehouse to buildings owned by the Government.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I am opposed to that amendment upon the ground that it has a tendency to delay and postpone the building of a public archives building, which shall be fireproof and where Government documents and archives of every sort shall be stored. I think this has the effect of inclining people to delay still further about the building, which we ought to have.

In addition to that I want to say a few words generally about renting buildings in Washington. There is more or less of something suspicious about it. I remember when we built the Agriculture Department Building. We were going to get rid of an immense amount of annual rental paid by the Government in the city of Washington when we did it. The Forestry Service, I believe, and several other bureaus of the Agriculture Department are still renting premises down town.

Earlier than that we built the new Post Office Building, and the old Post Office Building was given up to the Interior Department, right opposite the old Patent Office Building, and in spite of that the Interior Department is still renting buildings everywhere. The Judiciary Department is renting them.

I think there ought to be a commission of Senators and Representatives appointed at some time—I will not offer it now on this bill, of course—for the purpose of inquiring into the various contracts of rental by the Government in the city of Washington, to find out not only what departments and what bureaus have rented the premises, but what particular flesh-and-blood man, representing the Government, made the actual contract, and how the rentals that are paid by the Government compare with similar rentals of equal accommodations rented by other people.

I do not know that there is anything wrong, but I do know that rumors are afloat all the time about it, and that it is common talk that the Government pays very much more for what it rents in the city of Washington than other people have paid for the same premises who had them previously.

But in connection with this particular question I see an item just following concerning which I wish to ask the Senator from Wyoming. What does this mean?

For miscellaneous items on account of the Maltby Building.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator allow me to allude to his remarks as to the rental first?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. I agree perfectly with the Senator that we ought to build our own buildings instead of renting them. The Maltby Building was one of the purchases that the Government made to avoid renting. I do not believe it was a very fortunate purchase; but we have had it to care for, and as circumstances have changed from year to year as to the uses that we have put it to we have each year provided for it in a lump sum, as we are doing this year. The House, according to information I get, left it out because they were under the impression that we had moved everything out and into the new Office Building, but that is not the fact. The building is being used, and quite a large portion of it, at the present time. This provides for the elevator men and the various expenses of conducting the business.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Who is using it, and how is it used?

Mr. WARREN. I have not the memorandum at hand, but there are several uses made of it. For instance, a portion of the Census Bureau is there. There was a very large portion of it used for a long time by the Immigration Commission. There is a portion of it being used by the statistician who is in the employ really of the Finance Committee. There are various employments for it. I will say to the Senator that the subcommittee was very careful to inquire of the Sergeant at Arms, the Secretary of the Senate, and the Superintendent of the Capitol about the matter, as to how much room we could possibly get if we moved these documents into it. But if we did that we would have to strengthen it, and we found that there were those in the building using so much of it that we could not obtain more than the two lower floors at the present time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is it used to any extent by the Senate or by Senators now?

Mr. WARREN. It is used to some extent. The chairman of the Committee on Pensions can inform me, but I think there is a room or two used by the Committee on Pensions. Am I right about that?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. We paid, if my memory serves me correctly, something like two and a half millions of dollars for offices for 92 men. That was the number of Senators we had at the time we built the Office Building. It is an enormous building, covering a whole square, capacious, roomy, and the rooms are numerous; and now to have to confess that in spite of that expenditure the Senate is compelled to find partially for its agencies rooms elsewhere seems to me to be rather humiliating.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. And that is especially the case when one takes into account the manner in which a part of the Senate Office Building is now occupied.

Mr. WARREN. Let me say to the Senator that it was the original intention to move the documents into a large portion or all of the first floor of the Office Building. The construction was provided for accordingly, with steel beams underneath. The desire of Senators to have two rooms and then three rooms and sometimes four rooms has been so all-present and pressing that it seems the subcommittee of the Committee on Rules has consented to the arrangement, and we are left with only a small portion of room there for the folding rooms, and we have not space in which to put the documents that are now in storage in the large stable building. Furthermore, on looking the matter up with the Superintendent of the Capitol and the Sergeant at Arms, I find there has been very serious objection on the part of Senators who occupy that building to having the documents stored therein; that it would be insanitary and unhealthful, and for that reason we still have to provide for the storage of these documents.

The Senator will notice that the amendment which he read contains a provision for moving the documents. A year ago the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations was very insistent that something should be done, and therefore that language was put in. The annual rental is $3,600. It was put in there so that the removal could be made, but the protests of Senators have been such that it has not been done.

This year we speculated on it and asked the architect of the Capitol there to see whether we could strengthen the Maltby Building, which is notoriously weak and unsafe, and we could then accommodate these documents. We were informed by the Sergeant at Arms and by the Superintendent of the Capitol that while we could strengthen that building and store some of those documents, even with all the vacant room in the Office Building and with all we can spare in the Maltby Building we still could not take care of more than one-half of the documents that are now in storage down here in the building, something like 70 by 250 feet in size and extending from 8 to 16 feet high. The documents are there at the disposal of Senators and of the officers of the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if I understand the mapping of the situation now, it is this: We built a magnificent marble palace, which is a grace to the Capital and would be an ornament to any city in the world—a beautiful thing. It adds to the life of the Nation as all things of beauty do. We spent two and a half million dollars for it. We did it because the Maltby Building was "unsafe," and upon the ground that it was so heavily stored with documents and books that it was in danger of tumbling down. The documents and books are still in the Maltby Building.

Mr. WARREN. No; the books and documents are in a very large building, formerly a car stable, and not in the Maltby Building.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I thought the Senator said a great many of them were there yet.

Mr. WARREN. No; I said we were figuring upon the proposition to store a large quantity of them there, but the building was too weak without strengthening, and finally we discovered it could only take care of a small portion of the documents and we would still have to rent.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand now.

Now, the second position in the topography of the situation is that, notwithstanding the fact that we have the most magnificent office building in the world—Venice in all her wealth and Rome in all her glory never had anything approaching it—very large and with every convenience—we are still compelled to use the Maltby Building for something. We have never been able to sell it and put the money in the Treasury and get rid of it in some way or other.

Mr. WARREN. May I ask the Senator from Rhode Island if the Maltby Building is included in the real estate that it is expected to buy and use for the purpose of improving the ground between the Peace Monument and the Union Station?

Mr. WETMORE. It is included in one of the two squares that have recently been condemned by the United States Government under a law that provides for taking in a certain number of squares from the Union Station to the southern boundary of B Street, and which contemplates finally the acquiring of all those squares between the Union Station and the Capitol Grounds.

Mr. WILLIAMS. How many squares were included by that law? I have forgotten.

Mr. WETMORE. I do not recall the exact number, but I think there were 12 or 13.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Twelve, I think.

That brings me to another matter that looks to me as if the real estate interests of Washington had something to do with it. When that bill was passed, authorizing somebody to condemn those 12 or 13 squares, it was my own fault that I did not understand the proposition fully, as I was in the other House at the time. I heard others also say they did not understand it fully; we ought to have kept up with the public business; but I understood—I thought—the proposition was to condemn a little land right around the front of the Union Station for a Union Station park. But it turned out afterwards to be a proposition to condemn 12 squares, all, with the exception of 3 of them, compactly built, with expensive houses, running all the way down from the Union Depot to the Peace Monument, taking in the Maltby Building—Government property which has got to be thrown away, for it can never be sold now—all for the purpose of creating a greenery between the Capitol Grounds and the Union Station grounds, in the city of America which has the most bountiful supply of parks of any other city that I know of, here or abroad, right in the neighborhood of a great park, and a beautiful one at that—the Capitol. It not only turns out that we never can sell the Maltby Building, and thereby get any money to put in the Treasury, but we have deliberately authorized ourselves to condemn it for park purposes.

Then, more wondrous still, it turns out that nothing can be stored in the Senate Office Building, because "Senators complain that documents and books are insanitary and unhealthy." Why, Mr. President, if books had been unhealthful and insanitary this country would have ceased to enjoy the benefit of my constructive statesmanship many and many a year ago. [Laughter.] My whole house is full of them; nearly every student's house is full of them; nearly every college professor's house in the country is full of them, and that class live longer than any other class of people. That is one reason why we can not make more useful this two-and-a-half-million-dollar investment for offices for 96 men.

There is another reason which a Senator informs me of, and that is that Senators, "not being satisfied with two rooms, wanted three; some of them wanted four, and some of them wanted five." Simply because they "wanted them," I suppose they had to have them. But there is another reason yet. About half of one floor of the Office Building is filled with utterly useless bath arrangements. There is not a Senator here who wants the public to believe that he does the washing of his person at the public expense. It seems to me absurd and foolish. There is not a Senator who saves $10 a year out of all of that. Big graft is wicked; little graft is stupid. It merely gives the demagogues—it merely gives the muckrakers——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. An excuse to rake.

Mr. WILLIAMS. An excuse to rake, as my friend from Georgia says. It gives the populistic demagogue a chance to get up everywhere and point to a lot of little bits of things that amount to nothing. We do not get any benefit from it. I never went into those magnificent and varied bath arrangements there but once in my life, and then I went in principally to see how it was carried on. Every Senator has his bath at his own home. There is no use having the United States Government bathe us, or worse yet, pay men whose raison d'être on the roll is to bathe us and who do not do it. If you will get rid of that, you will have a place to store these books, and you will not have to spend $3,600 for this warehouse rental, and you will not have to spend $17,280 to strengthen the Maltby Building. It strikes me as being worse than merely very wrong, because it is so foolish. A blunder in politics is sometimes worse than a crime. A very great man said that; and he was right. Another very great man said that more empires had been toppled over by the freshness and bad manners of flunkeys than by bad laws. There are little bits of things that nag. Tourists come here and go around, and the guides say, "Here is where Senators bathe at the public expense." A calculation has been made, and they will say it costs "so many dollars to bathe a Senator."

A Populist down in my State once had a calculation by which he proved that when the baths were here in the old Capitol it cost $12 to bathe a Senator and $18 to shave a Senator. The graft is not worth while, outside of every other consideration; it is as foolish as a man's going down into a pasture with a red flag and flaunting it at a bull. There is no sense in it. What is the use? You can go through the pasture just as well without the red flag. You have no need for the red flag. It does not keep the rain off you; it does not keep the sun off you; it does not do any good; and it makes a bad impression on the bull. [Laughter.] There is no sense in this. Rome built magnificent baths; the Baths of Caracalla, the greatest fool among the emperors, was the greatest of them; but they, at least, built them for the people.

I suggest that the Committee on Appropriations could find a place in the Senate Office Building for all the offices and officers over in the Maltby Building, especially those that are attached to senatorial work, public commissions, and things of that kind, if this bath foolishness were removed. Then we could sell the Maltby Building. By the way, one of the very first things we ought to do is to repeal the act whereby we agreed to buy 12 squares from the Peace Monument up to the new Union Depot, and including the new hotel, which I believe they call the "Continental," and running from there two or three squares on the other side—I have forgotten exactly, but to First, Second, or Third Streets—I do not know which—in the northeast. Not only must we pay for the ground, but for solidly built houses, some of them very expensively constructed.

Whom is it going to help? Merely the real-estate men who are renting property in Washington at exorbitant prices. You are merely tearing down that many well-built houses which have been there a long time and are very convenient to the Capitol. You are doing no good from the standpoint of a park, because if you want a park in northeast or southeast Washington, that is not where you want it. You have one for this part of Washington right here. Keep three squares there right in front of the Union Depot, or four squares if you choose, for a depot greenery and vista and then repeal the law as to the other eight squares.

Mr. President, it is no wonder—and I am going to repeat it almost as often as old Cato repeated his everlasting phrase that "Carthage must be destroyed"—that it costs the American people ten times as much to have the Senate and the House of Representatives waited on as it costs the people of Great Britain to have the House of Lords and the House of Commons waited on, including office accommodations as a part of the waiting.

Understand, I am not quarreling about that magnificent Senate Office Building, which is a thing of beauty, and which justifies itself in that sense. Buildings ought to be constructed frequently for no other reason than that they are beautiful, because the education of the taste of a people is just as important as the education of its intellect. When you educate a people's taste you educate its morals, you elevate its character, and give refinement and culture to men and women. I do say, however, that after you have spent the money and obtained the building, you ought to use it for the purposes for which you constructed it, to wit, for offices for the Senate and rooms for everything concerning the Senate's business, including, amongst other things, documents that are thought necessary to be kept on hand for Senators.

I move to strike out the words from line 7 to line 11, inclusive, on page 12.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would suggest to the Senator that those words are not yet in the bill. They are simply proposed by the committee as an amendment. The only thing that would be necessary for those who are opposed to it would be to vote against it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is true. I hope that the committee amendment will be voted down.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Senator will not accomplish his purpose in the manner he proposes. The documents are in that building, and they can not be removed without money to remove them. What disposition does the Senator propose to make of those documents?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Leave them there.

Mr. WARREN. But you can not leave them there on property that belongs to private individuals without paying rent.

Mr. WILLIAMS. When did it belong to private individuals? I thought we had bought the Maltby Building?

Mr. WARREN. But these documents are not in the Maltby Building.

Mr. OVERMAN. This is exactly the amount we are paying for rent of the building.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. For rental and to take care of the documents.

Mr. WARREN. It is for rental of the building and to take care of them.

Mr. OVERMAN. The estimate is that it will take $3,000 to remove them, and we are paying $3,600 rent. If it will take $3.000 to move them, what are you going to do for rent and where will you move the documents?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Move them to the Senate Office Building.

Mr. OVERMAN. How would you move them? Who is going to move them?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would take the $3,600 and move them to the Senate Office Building. That building is owned by the Government.

Mr. OVERMAN. I agree with the Senator that there ought to be some provision for them, either in the Maltby Building or in the Senate Office Building; but we have got to pay a rental for the building in which they are stored, amounting to $3,600, so long as we occupy the building and until we can move the documents. Wherever the Committee on Rules may determine they shall go, it will take a large amount of money to move them. I think the estimate was nearly $3,600. If the Senator will read the provision, he will find that the appropriation of $3,600 is not only for rent, but may be used also for moving the documents.

Mr. WILLIAMS. This is the language, and it is rather involved:

> For rent of warehouse for storage of public documents for the Senate, $3,600, to be immediately available, and authority is hereby given to use any part or all of said sum for moving documents contained in said warehouse to buildings owned by the Government.

So that from this you might both continue the rent and then pay for moving the documents.

Mr. OVERMAN. No. If we come to the conclusion that we want to move them, then we have the money appropriated for the purpose of moving them; but without the money to move them, we can not move them.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming has the floor. To whom does the Senator yield?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I only wish to occupy the floor for a moment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Before the Senator replies, I should like to ask him one question for information. How was this matter formerly carried?

Mr. WARREN. It has been formerly carried as an item of $3,600 for rent. A year ago I raised the same question the Senator now raises, and I agree with him perfectly. We ought to do away with this expenditure, but in trying to do away with it we were confronted, first, with the proposition that there was no money for the removal of the documents. Last year we incorporated exactly the same provision as is now proposed, and when we found this year that the documents had not been moved an inquiry was instituted and I elicited the information which I have given the Senator. The documents are there, and we shall have to provide some way for their care. So we put in this provision again with the admonition, so far as the Committee on Appropriations is concerned, to the Sergeant at Arms and to the Superintendent of the Capitol that something must be done with those documents. It is not the province of the Committee on Appropriations to state where the documents shall go or to state how many rooms Senators shall have. That is a matter with the Committee on Rules, which has charge of the Office Building, and we have framed this provision so that the Committee on Rules or the officers of the Senate can take it up if necessary and go on with the work of providing some other place for these documents. To strike this provision out would leave us with no money to move the documents and would leave us liable for the rent of the building until they are taken out.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Are they useless documents that have piled up?

Mr. WARREN. No; they are documents that have accumulated there from day to day.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] had asked me to yield to him.

Mr. REED. I yield to the Senator from Georgia to ask a question.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Suppose we strike out the words "for rent of warehouse for storage of public documents" and put in simply a provision for the removal of public documents for the Senate, $3,600. That would furnish the money necessary for the removal, stop the rental, and necessitate the removal, would it not?

Mr. WARREN. Yes; but you can not stop the rental until you complete the removal. We must leave some leeway to those having it in charge, because the rental will go on until you complete the removal.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then provide rent for 30 days and provide the money for the removal. Would not that cover it?

Mr. WARREN. Well, I am not competent, and I do not believe any Senator is competent, unless he should visit the building and look over the ground, to say whether or not it could be done in 30 days or 10 days or 60 days.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia where he would move them?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I would move them to the Senate Office Building.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to say that the original idea was to put them in the Senate Office Building, but Senators began to demand a third room. The rooms on the first floor were intended for documents, but Senators finally went into those rooms, and are occupying them to-day. Will we run Senators out of those rooms and put the documents in them? A great many of those rooms have been furnished and are being occupied. Now, if the Senator's proposed amendment should be adopted, we would have to remove the documents forthwith and deprive Senators of those rooms.

I agree with the Senator from Mississippi that there is room in the basement, but we had the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and the Sergeant at Arms before us, and consulted them about this very matter. The Committee on Appropriations, however, could not order the work done; the Committee of Rules may do so hereafter; but to amend this appropriation bill now and require the removal to be made forthwith, without any place being provided for the documents, will put us in a bad position. We do not know now how the matter can be arranged. We have the money now to rent the building until we can move the documents, and with this appropriation we will have enough money to move them when it can be determinded where they shall be moved. All we can then do is to call the matter to the attention of the Committee of Rules and let them provide a place. It is not for us to provide a place. We can vote the money to pay the rent and to provide for removing the documents.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator will permit me to ask him a question, I understood the Senator from Wyoming to say that last year exactly the same provision was put in the bill as is proposed now, but nothing was done toward removing the documents.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes; but the Superintendent of the Capitol started to put the documents in the Senate Office Building. Senators objected, however, and said they did not want these documents there; they wanted the rooms for their own use.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That was the reason I was suggesting that we ought not to leave in the same language as last year, but we should have action here that will require them to be removed.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to see some such action taken.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Well, let us act in the matter.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senate wants to say that some Senators shall move out of their rooms in order to put these documents in those rooms, where they were intended to be put, the committee would like to see that done.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If arrangements can not be made for the storage of the documents in the basement, then it would seem to me that Senators will have to give up some of their rooms.

Mr. OVERMAN. We wanted to store the documents in the basement, but some Senators said, "We do not want the documents put there to bring cockroaches and rats, as is the case in the House Office Building." Then we wanted to put the documents in the Maltby Building, but we were advised that the Maltby Building would not hold them, and that we would have to spend some money to restore that building.

Mr. WILLIAMS. How many vacant rooms are there in the Senate Office Building?

Mr. OVERMAN. There are comparatively few.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] has just informed me that there are two big rooms in the Office Building which might be used for this purpose; so that all you have to do is to move the documents.

Mr. OVERMAN. If anyone chooses to take that action, all right; but let it be by a resolution authorizing the Committee on Rules to take such action.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why could we not do it on this bill?

Mr. OVERMAN. On an appropriation bill?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes. Why can you not take the amount that is needed and give direction that these documents shall be moved to the Senate Office Building, using for that purpose the rooms and space now occupied by the baths? Of course, you will have to increase the appropriation somewhat, because you will have to take out the bathing apparatus, and all that sort of thing.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to state to the Senator that there is not room in the Office Building for the documents that are now in the warehouse, and it would be impossible to put them in there. If the printing bill becomes a law, as I hope it will, then I believe that within a year, at least after that time, the rooms in the Senate Office Building will be sufficient to hold the documents that will have to be carried under that law.

Mr. WILLIAMS. How will the printing bill affect that?

Mr. SMOOT. In the printing bill we have a valuation plan, and documents will not be ordered under the new bill and printed until there is a call for them. Under the present law, whenever there is an order made, the Public Printer prints them immediately.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I remember now, and I see the change that will be effected.

Mr. SMOOT. I hope that this provision in the bill will be allowed to go through.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, feeling confident that members of the Appropriations Committee are in sympathy with the purpose I have in view and that they are going to proceed to try to accomplish it as best they can and that they will use their influence with the Committee on Rules for that purpose, I am disposed to withdraw my opposition.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to say, in answer to the suggestion of the Senator from Arizona, that there are two very large rooms in the Office Building which might be used for this purpose; that we had an estimate made of the space in those rooms to ascertain whether or not they would hold these documents, and we were informed they would not hold one-third of them. So you see that we have made some investigation of the matter.

Mr. WARREN. I want to say to the Senator from Missouri, the Senator from Georgia, and other Senators that the Committee on Appropriations is exceedingly anxious to bring about what is now proposed. It has been so for the last year. If Senators had been present when the report of the subcommittee on this matter was made and when it was explained, they would have been satisfied that the Committee on Appropriations was not neglecting its duties in this regard; but, in view of the new printing bill, which it is hoped may become a law, and in view of the fact that if the bathrooms were given up there would only be room for a very small portion of these documents, we concluded to let it go over for this one year, hoping that our efforts with the other committees may bear fruit, and that Senators who are now expressing themselves about these documents may aid the Committee on Appropriations and aid the Committee on Rules to make room enough in the Office Building for the documents.

If a majority of the Senate agree that it is insanitary to have them there, and they do not desire to have them there, then we shall have a provision in the bill that will enable the Committee on Appropriations in the most economical manner to take care of these documents. The matter has received a great deal of attention. I do not see that the language can be changed. I want to express my gratitude to the Senator from Mississippi, first, for bringing this subject up, and, second, for doing what I think is wise, to leave the provision the way it is, so that the matter may be taken up with the proper committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to ask the Senator a question about the next clause, although I think it has not yet been read.

Mr. REED. Before the Senator does that—I understand he is going to leave this subject——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am going to the next clause, which is part of the same amendment.

Mr. REED. Very well.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Following the amendment which has been under discussion occurs this committee amendment:

For miscellaneous items on account of the Maltby Building, $17,280.

I ask the Senator why could we not strike that out of this bill and give orders through the Sergeant at Arms to all the commissions and to others occupying that building to go over to the Senate Office Building? There is plenty of room for them.

Mr. WARREN. They would probably have to take some of the employees along with them, and I do not know that it would reduce expenditures at all. I think that matter will take care of itself, like the other, during the next year.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If they would leave that building I think we might sell it.

Mr. WARREN. I say I think this will take care of itself during the year. I think this is the last year it will be necessary to put such a provision in the bill, and I hope the Senator will not move to strike it out.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What are these miscellaneous expenses?

Mr. WILLIAMS. These miscellaneous expenses, I understand, are for elevator men, messengers, custodians, janitors, and charwomen, are they not?

Mr. WARREN. They are for all kinds of expenditures, such as are necessary around every building, and as the Senator says, they include elevator men, janitors, light, heat, and all those matters.

Mr. OVERMAN. Not only that, Mr. President, but there are some employees who are here at these doors belonging to the patronage of the majority side that are assigned to the Maltby Building.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why not have them in the Senate Office Building?

Mr. OVERMAN. Because they belong here. They could not be put in the appropriation for the Senate Office Building. They are men who sit at the doors here, who are on the Senate roll, and they are charged up to this fund. That has never been changed.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It ought to be changed.

Mr. OVERMAN. It never has been changed.

Mr. WARREN. It seems to me that it ought to read so much a year as long as we use the Maltby Building as it is now being used.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator perhaps did not understand what the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] said, that some of these items that are charged as miscellaneous items cover the salaries of janitors and men at the doors.

Mr. WARREN. That naturally follows; but when we complete the removal from the Maltby Building, which, it is hoped, will be within the next year, then that can be wiped out and new terms used in providing for these employees.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would change that in the appropriation bill now.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from Wyoming that the only difficulty about the arrangement he suggests is that it leaves us just where we were a year ago and just where we were when we started on this discussion. We have had an illuminating discussion, and it seems to be the consensus of opinion that something ought to be done at some time; but we are not doing it, and this matter will go over until next year and, likely enough, be forgotten.

It seems to me we ought at this time to order these documents removed to the Senate Office Building as soon as practicable. We ought to give the committee the authority they desire, and this clause in the bill ought to be so drawn as to pay rent for the time the building is occupied; and the rest of the appropriation ought to be used in removing these documents.

I do not like the idea that has been expressed here that the committee got ready to remove these documents and Senators objected. What Senators? I do not understand that individual Senators have the right to control the action of committees of the Senate or the disposition of public documents on the ground that cockroaches are offensive to them or that the smell of printed literature offends their nostrils. Therefore I suggest that we amend this clause so that it will read:

For removing public documents from the present place of storage to the Senate Office Building, $3,600, to be immediately available.

That will get action. If there is a little rent involved, I take it, the proprietor of the building may have to wait for the small amount that may accrue until the next session of Congress makes an appropriation. I move to amend——

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just a word before the Senator makes that motion. If the Senate should make such an order in this bill, it would be an utter impossibility to take all the documents that are in this warehouse and put them in the Senate Office Building. As I have already stated, there is no room there; I doubt very much whether there is room for one-third of them, and it would be a physical impossibility to carry out that order. I merely wish to call that to the Senator's attention. I do not know it to be a fact, but I think the Senator has never been to this warehouse to see the immense quantity of public documents stored there; and I know that if he would look at them and see the number he himself would immediately say that it is an utter impossibility to provide for them in the Senate Office Building.

Mr. REED. How large is this building and what is its storage capacity?

Mr. SMOOT. It is a very large storehouse.

Mr. REED. Can the Senator give us an idea of its size?

Mr. OVERMAN. It used to be an old railroad car barn. It is a very large building.

Mr. SMOOT. I think it is 200 feet long and that it is all of 70 feet wide.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I would like to ask the Senator if it is not probably true that a large part of the material stored there is really waste paper and that it ought to be burned?

Mr. SMOOT. We never burn anything. We have a committee to sell that paper at 80 cents a hundred pounds, or to the highest bidder.

Mr. OVERMAN. I believe we have a Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers. If so, it does not seem that they have done their duty.

So far as removing these documents is concerned, a Senator has just suggested to me that he has two rooms in the basement where these documents could be stored, which he would give up if some of the Senators who have three rooms would give up their third room and let him have a room upstairs. You can see, therefore, the trouble we have had. If the Committee on Rules would take away from Senators who have three rooms one of the rooms they are now occupying, and the Senators who are downstairs could be moved upstairs, the documents might be stored where it was intended they should go; but we would have all sorts of trouble.

The only feasible plan seems to be that suggested by the Senator from Missouri. If it is left to a committee, I agree with him that the committee could probably make some arrangement by which most of these documents could be moved; but I do not think that more than one-half of them could be moved into the Senate Office Building. There are a great many documents which ought to be disposed of, and if the Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers would get to work, probably hundreds of them could be disposed of, so that the documents we need could be placed in this building. I hope that such an arrangement may be made; but it is not for the committee to decide that. If the Senate desires to make any provision upon the subject in connection with this appropriation bill, I can not prevent it; but I was suggesting to the Senate the trouble we would have if we ordered the documents moved over there now. Where would you put them?

Mr. REED. If there is no room in the Senate Office Building to store these documents now, we do not escape that difficulty for a moment by referring to the committee the impossible task of putting something into a space that is not big enough to hold it. If the committee can hereafter solve this problem, they can do it under a resolution offered here, and if it is impossible of solution now, then the committee can solve it hereafter. Either there is space enough in the Senate Office Building to hold these documents or there is not space enough. If there is space enough, and we direct their removal there, the committee will be able to remove them. If there is not space enough, then the committee can not make that space.

It is said that we can dispose of a part of these documents; that we can sell them; that we can make way with them. If that is true, then that will be a fact whether we pass the resolution I was about to suggest, or it will not be a fact. It seems to me we ought to go at least this far on this day: We ought to amend this bill giving the committee specific authority to remove these documents, if it be practicable to do so, and to cut down the number as far as practicable. If we put it in that form, the committee has got specific authority to act.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the Senator yield for a statement?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. FOSTER. It was distinctly stated before the committee that at present there is not sufficient room in the Senate Office Building to which these documents could be removed. If the Senator's proposed amendment prevails and this statement is true, then the Senate is ordering these documents to be removed to a place where there is not sufficient room to hold them. Do you want a resolution of that kind passed?

Mr. REED. If that is the fact, we might as well face it to-day and not be talking about passing some resolution authorizing the committee to do it hereafter. If there is no room there, let us face it and get a building to hold these documents. The point I am objecting to, if the Senator please, is this: We are confronted, first, by a statement that there is not room, and if we pass a resolution directing their removal to that building it would be an impossible task. Then, coming along with that, is the suggestion that if we just wait a little while the committee can accomplish it. If the committee can accomplish it at all, they can do it now, saving, of course, the exception which has been stated by the Senator from Utah, that there will be some cutting down.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. There is a fact the Senator has entirely overlooked. This appropriation is for the year 1913, which extends from July 1, 1912, to July 1, 1913. On the 4th of March in that year there will probably be a great many changes, and that would be a much better time to rearrange matters in connection with the office building, it seems to me, than it is now, when Senators are located there. The chairman of the Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], is not in the Chamber, but if he should get the gist of this debate and should feel like looking into the matter to ascertain what documents could be destroyed that would help a good deal. The Senator from Utah has referred to the new printing bill. That will also help.

Of course, the Committee on Appropriations does not have charge of this matter; the Committee on Rules has charge of the Office Building. The chairman of that committee does not happen to be here, but I am sure the Committee on Rules will be glad to conform substantially to the wishes of the Senate as a body, and they have tried, I think, heretofore to conform as nearly as they could to the wishes of Senators individually, as well as to the wishes of the Senate as a body. I think during the next year we will see the obliteration of this vexatious question. That is my opinion, and I do not believe we ought to undertake to do other than what this amendment provides for at this time.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it strikes me that the Senator and myself are in complete accord on one proposition, and that is that there will probably be a great many changes on the 4th of next March, and it might be that if we postpone action to-day it will, I trust, save inconveniencing a large number of our Republican brothers. It may be that the lapse of time will be sufficient to remove the difficulty so far as they are concerned.

Mr. WARREN. I am asking no quarter for the Republican Senators or for the Committee on Appropriations. It is no object to us to defeat any provision the Senate may wish to make in regard to the disposition of these documents. I would be as glad, perhaps, as the Senator is to burn them. I do not care.

Mr. REED. I understand that the principle governing in the Republican camp to-day is that quarter is neither to be asked nor given, and I trust for the good of the country that that spirit will be maintained.

But, speaking more seriously of this matter, I want to ask the Senator from Wyoming if he will object to an amendment being offered to the bill later—that is, whether he will make a point of order against it—directing the committee to investigate, and, if feasible, to remove these documents?

Mr. WARREN. May I ask what committee? The Senator does not mean the Committee on Appropriations, of course?

Mr. REED. The Committee on Rules. But I want to have go into this bill the provision authorizing them to do so.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have no objection to that, but although I am not chairman of the committee—and I am sorry the chairman is not here—I want to call the attention of the Senate to the trouble the Committee on Rules has had. The Senator himself, as he knows, desired a third room, and he asked me, as representing the minority side, to do what I could to get it for him. I might say the same thing as to a number of other Senators. I have looked out for them the best I could, and tried to get rooms for them. Here is another Senator, the Senator from Missouri, who asked for a third room, and he has gotten it. We have tried to accomplish what we could in the way of contributing to the comfort and convenience of all Senators, in order that they may carry on their work properly.

We have been met with the question as to where these documents should be stored. We wanted to dispose of them in some way, but did not know exactly how to do so. After hearing this debate, however, which has taken a wide scope, and which has elicited a good deal of information, I think the committee will try to bring about a solution that will take care of these matters.

The Senator must consider the fact that the report of the Committee on Printing shows that a great many of these documents will be done away with, and also that this debate will probably bring out the fact that the Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers has something to do, and if they will perform their duty and get rid of them, then the Committee on Rules can act.

Mr. REED. And the clerk of the committee can earn his salary.

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes, the clerk can earn his salary; but what can the Committee on Rules do under present conditions, with every Senator wanting a third room?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Refuse to give it to them. Members of the House of Representatives of equal legislative dignity have only one room apiece. I do not think there is an extra room over there.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not think the Senator would refuse to give me a third room if I needed it and he had one to spare.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I certainly would refuse to do so if the public needed that third room for something else.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the best thing to do is to provide that no Senator shall have more than two rooms. When that is done we can take care of every document. That is the question up to the Senate now. Will the Senate provide that no Senator shall have more than two rooms? Let us meet it face to face, and say that no Senator shall have more than two rooms, and the Committee on Rules will remove those documents forthwith.

Mr. REED. If that is all there is in the way, this question ought to be easily settled. The Senator speaks about the embarrassment his committee is under, and I know that it is. There is constant clamor for more room, and so long as the rooms are there, empty and unused, there is no reason why Senators should not enjoy them.

My idea in introducing the resolution providing that these documents should be taken there was to relieve the committee of the very embarrassment from which it is suffering. If they fill these rooms with documents, there will be no additional rooms left for Senators, perhaps, and the committee can answer that the Senate has ordered it; but so long as we put the burden on the committee to refuse a request for a room when the room stands there vacant, the committee, being composed of fair, good-humored, accommodating, and reasonable gentlemen, will give the room, because it is only fair that they should. So I think the resolution should be adopted, with the understanding that it will not be objected to on the ground that it is out of order, being new legislation. I will prepare such a resolution and introduce it before the bill is passed, and all I ask is a vote upon it.

I want to say to the Senator, further, as he speaks about the additional rooms for Senators, we have over there in the Senate Office Building a restaurant that is patronized by but very few people and is, I think, of very little use. It certainly is not of much use to any man who has any high regard for his stomach and his digestive apparatus. There is a kitchen in connection with that. I think if you would clean those things out, including your Turkish bath, you would find that there would be a good deal of additional room in that building. But I am in favor of drawing the resolve in such a form as to leave a large discretion with the committee, but nevertheless to give it authority to act.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think there is a Democratic caucus room there that could be used for documents.

Mr. REED. I was going to say there is a Democratic caucus room over there that is big enough to hold a meeting of a thousand people. While we expect some additional Members, we will not have enough to fill it. It is a room nobody can be heard in. There is a Republican caucus room that is a palace almost in itself, and that I do not think is occupied by our Republican brethren because it is so large. They may meet there; I do not know.

Mr. OVERMAN. Would the Senator oppose the documents being placed in those rooms?

Mr. REED. I would be glad to see the rooms put to some useful purpose.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not think the Senate would agree to having the documents put in those rooms.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment pending on page 12——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not understand that the second amendment, as to $17,280, is agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment, down to line 11, on page 12, is agreed to. The next amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 12, after line 11, insert, "For miscellaneous items on account of the Maltby Building, $17,280."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I object to that appropriation. It does not indicate what we are doing it for. No Senator who votes for it, unless he has some outside information, could give any explanation of it. "Miscellaneous expenses on account of the Maltby Building." What for? What are we spending that money for?

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not see the chairman here, but I will say when that was brought up by myself in the committee, I asked for an itemized list from the Sergeant at Arms, and he produced an item of every expense in the Maltby Building. I do not see how we can get rid of it at this time. To my surprise I found a good many officers included in that who are actually employed in the Capitol and who have really nothing to do with the Maltby Building proper, and yet they are on this $17,000 roll. It seems they have been used by the majority side. I do not say they are not needed. They are probably needed in the Capitol. Still, they appear on this Maltby Building roll, and we do not make an appropriation elsewhere for them. If we need these men, we would have to increase the appropriation somewhere else in order to take care of them. Among them are messenger boys and elevator men, and there are those who take care of the building. I think there are less in proportion there than in connection with any other building I know of.

So, with the itemized bill in my hand, after an examination and a cross-examination of every item, if we are going to let these employees stay, I can not see what it would amount to to take them from one roll and put them on another roll.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Would it not be better to take them from a roll where they do not belong and put them on a roll where they properly belong? If they are serving here in the Capitol they ought to be on that roll.

Mr. OVERMAN. I agree to that.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator will find, if he makes an examination into the question, that the men who are on this roll were originally at the Maltby Building at the time Senators were located in the Maltby Building, and every year the appropriation has been for that building to take care of those employees. They have been transferred from there to places in this building.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. When you gave up that building why were not they transferred to the Senate Office Building to do the service there?

Mr. WARREN. I think I ought to say that there has been a good deal of time when duties were done at both places. I think it better to leave it this way at present, because it will probably fall out at the end of the year, anyway.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I would like to ask what is being done with the Maltby Building now? It is not used as a Senate office building any longer.

Mr. SMOOT. A part of the Census Office is there. A great deal of the work is done there under the Census Office, and of course that work being done there, it compels us to have janitors, elevator boys, and so on.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Would not that belong to the census pay roll and not to the Senate pay roll?

Mr. SMOOT. No; it comes in the legislative appropriation bill. I will say to the Senator that there is a great deal of folding done in that building to-day, the folding of Senator's speeches and of Congressmen's speeches. The folding that they are compelled to do is done over in that building to-day.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I am opposed to carrying that kind of an appropriation. It is a small matter, but if we do not start at the top when the Senate legislates and be careful about expenses and items, it is likely to run down through all the various departments and set an example of carelessness in the way in which money is to be spent. I think the men who work here ought to be charged up to work around the Senate building, and I do not think a sufficient explanation is made to justify this appropriation.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Census did not have the use of this building they would have to pay a large rent for some other building.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then let it be charged up to the Census.

Mr. OVERMAN. What difference does it make when the people have to pay the money, anyway? I do not think the Senator would object if he would look at the items we had before us. I think the Maltby Building ought to be disposed of, but we can not do that at once. I think the documents really ought to be put in the Maltby Building. We have an estimate from the engineer that he can put those documents in there, and that was our idea, instead of putting them in the Senate Building. They can occupy two rooms and still let the Census have the rooms they have there now. We can economize in the way of space. We discussed all these questions. You can not do it all at once. This Maltby appropriation has been carried, as the Senator has said. The elevator men and others we had there have been kept. If you move to strike out this appropriation now, you will have to provide for these employees somewhere else.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Unless you drop them. I will ask if the same appropriation was made for the Maltby Building when the Senators had their offices there?

Mr. OVERMAN. Oh, no; this is nothing like it.

Mr. SMOOT. This item is not near as large as it was when the Senators were there. It is nowhere near the amount. This is simply to take care of the absolute expenses necessary to keep the Maltby Building in shape for the work that is being done there at the present time.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does not the Senator think that is a very large sum to take care of that small building to let somebody else work there?

Mr. SMOOT. It is not to let somebody else work there. The work has to be done somewhere, and if, as the Senator from North Carolina said, we did not have this building there would have to be another building rented in some other part of the city to accomplish the work that is being accomplished there.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What work?

Mr. SMOOT. The census work that is being done there.

Mr. OVERMAN. For this amount of money I do not suppose you could rent another building anywhere in the city.

Mr. SMOOT. I am quite sure you could not for this amount rent a building with space enough to accommodate the people who are working there.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But you are furnishing that building to the Census Bureau, and they are working there.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then why should we appropriate money in addition? Why should not the Census, if it uses the building, run it and pay its men who are there? If there are men really on this roll called "for miscellaneous items on account of the Maltby Building" who are not doing work there, but are in the galleries here or around the Senate, ought they not to be taken off that miscellaneous roll and be charged up frankly and openly where they do the work?

Mr. SMOOT. That would be absolutely the case, Mr. President, if they were not used in other places than the Maltby Building; but their time is divided; a part of their time they are at the Maltby Building and a part of it at other places. This roll has been for the Maltby Building in the past, and it has been cut down until now it is $17,280.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, there seems to be objection to this item becauses of the language "miscellaneous items on account of the Maltby Building." The Senator from North Carolina states that the committee had an itemized statement showing just what was covered by this appropriation. I suggest that such a statement ought to be furnished to the Senate in some way or printed in the RECORD, so we can ascertain what it does mean. There seems to be some difference among Senators in regard to the matter.

Mr. WARREN. I would like to have the Senators have all the information that the committee has, and I am sorry they are such unbelievers.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator allow me? It is not that we are unbelievers. We are voting for a miscellaneous appropriation without anything to indicate what it is for.

For miscellaneous items on account of the Maltby Building, $17,280.

That carries no idea except the suggestion that it is necessary to keep up that building. It is not simply Senators that we must consider. It is the people of the country. It is the other Government officials. It is the men engaged in other departments. If we make a record that looks as if we are careless, they will naturally become careless, and it reaches all out through the Government service, multiplying in quantity of wasted money as it goes further and further from us.

Mr. WARREN. I did not intend to open up the remarks of the Senator from Florida to others, and I intended to say only a few words myself. This bill comes from the other side, with some thousands of pages of hearings, and the subcommittee has gone all through that.

We had representatives of every one of the departments before us, and we have the testimony in print. Here is one of the volumes. It is all here. It is impossible in a bill to carry all the items. Miscellaneous expenses or contingent expenses have to be granted to every one of these departments, and this one is entirely for the Senate, and consequently is closer than any other one. There is no dark scheme in this $17,000. If the Senators want to strike it out, they can do that. But, of course, you will have to close your Maltby House in such a case, because you can not use the building without the elevators and without the building being taken care of, kept clean, and so on. The Senator from Georgia says we do not explain who were in there, and so forth.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. The subcommittee worked for 9 or 10 days, day and night, on this bill, and the hearings are printed. If there is any special item that any Senator objects to, he can turn to the index that has been made and find the subject in a moment. There is not only one book, but there is another book of testimony taken by the committee. If a Senator objects to every miscellaneous item in this bill, he will be objecting to a great many. If the Senator will read the testimony, perhaps he will not object to it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, what I was suggesting was to meet the difficulty in the mind of some Senators apparently as to what this item covers. I have no question but that the committee has gone through it and found that it is a proper item, and I can see how there would be needed an appropriation of this sort. But it seems to be admitted that while it is now under the name of the Maltby Building it covers some items that really do not precisely refer to that building at all.

Mr. OVERMAN. Some of the men who do work over there are also employed here.

Mr. FLETCHER. All that I am suggesting is that the Senator put a statement in the RECORD covering this amount of $17,000. I do not suppose it will be a long statement. I have no objection to the item. I do not criticize it, but some want the information.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not think there will be any objection to that. In fact, I will be glad to do that.

Mr. FLETCHER. If the Senator will simply put in the RECORD the items which this appropriation of $17,280 covers that, I think, will satisfy the minds of Senators, and then if there are objections to the items they can specify them.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have here exactly what the items are. I find this item here is for wages entirely and these are the parties that it is paid to: W. H. K. Depue, F. J. Merkling, John B. Swift.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator give the salary of each?

Mr. SMOOT. I will. W. H. K. Depue, $1,800. We all know Mr. Depue works at one of these doors. F. J. Merkling, $1,440.

Mr. REED. Where does he work?

Mr. SMOOT. I think he is at one of the doors.

John B. Swift, $1,440.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator kindly tell us where these different gentlemen work, as near as he can, as he goes along?

Mr. SMOOT. I can not answer that offhand because some of them work at doors here. Their duties are divided; they go wherever they are called. I will say that the next one is C. F. Jelliff, messenger, Maltby Building.

Mr. REED. And salary?

Mr. SMOOT. One thousand four hundred and forty dollars.

W. H. Stilley, engineer, Maltby Building, $1,440.

Mr. REED. The Senator is forgetting to give us the salaries as he goes along.

Mr. SMOOT. W. H. Stilley, engineer at Maltby Building, $1,440; Michael J. Mack, fireman at Maltby Building, $1,000; A. T. Hodge, fireman at Maltby Building, $1,000; A. W. Warfield, fireman at Maltby Building, $1,000; M. Thomas, elevator conductor, Maltby Building, $800; C. C. Burr, elevator conductor, Maltby Building, $800; Charlie West, skilled laborer, Maltby Building, $800; B. W. Kenney, laborer, Maltby Building, $720; Joseph Montgomery, laborer, Maltby Building, $720; Florence R. McKeever, laborer, Maltby Building, $720; Jesse Stotts, laborer, Maltby Building, $720; S. H. Sheppard, laborer, Maltby Building, $720; J. H. Smithers, laborer, Maltby Building, $720.

That, Mr. President, amounts to $18,480, and there is one place, that of custodian, $1,200, that has been taken from it, leaving a balance of $17,280.

Mr. WILLIAMS. How many of those are Census Bureau employees?

Mr. SMOOT. None of these are from the Census Office. They have been appointed to take charge of the building. The Census employees are located in the office and do the work of the Census Bureau, and they are paid from that department.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Their salaries are carried on the Census appropriation?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think their salaries are carried in the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Excepting the elevator boys and firemen. Of course they get the benefit of it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course; they take care of the building.

Mr. SMOOT. So every item, Senators will see, is appropriated directly for. As I said before, the men are used in different places. Many of them are at the doors here and other places where it becomes absolutely necessary to have them.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, in order to show the good faith, if Senators want to know who are the sponsors behind every one of these men, we have that information.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think you had better read that.

Mr. WARREN. Senators can have that information if they desire it.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let it be read. Let us have it all.

Mr. WARREN. As to Mr. W. H. K. Depue, he was put there on the recommendation of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRIGGS]. He is on the door of the Senators' gallery.

Mr. F. J. Merkling——

Mr. OVERMAN. I want the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] to hear this.

Mr. WARREN. F. J. Merkling is charged to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]. He is his backer, I suppose.

J. B. Swift, messenger in men's southwest gallery, is charged to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP].

Mr. Jelliff, messenger, $1,440, on the diplomatic gallery door, to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LORIMER].

Mr. Stilley, engineer, $1,440, engineer at the Maltby Building, to the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT].

Mr. M. J. Mack, fireman, Maltby Building, $1,000. He is not credited or charged to the patronage of any Senator.

Mr. Hodge, fireman, $1,000, on the ladies' gallery door, to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. CRANE].

Mr. Warfield, fireman, $1,000, Maltby Building, is charged to no one.

Mr. Thomas, on the elevator, $800, is on the janitor's force. He is charged to no one.

Mr. Burr, on the elevator, $800, warehouse of the folding room—it is of course at the Maltby Building—to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE].

Charlie West, skilled laborer, $800, is on the janitor's force, as well as Kenney, laborer, at $720, and Montgomery, laborer, at $720, the regular force of the Sergeant at Arms, charged to no Senator.

There is Florence R. McKeever, laborer, at $720, from Kansas, in the folding room. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] is her backer.

Mr. Jesse Stotts, laborer, $720, is on the janitor's force, charged to no one.

Mr. Sheppard, $720, is in the post office, charged to the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER].

Mr. Smithers, laborer, $720, is simply on the regular Senate roll.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I should like to have some of those who are not charged to anybody. [Laughter.] I have not anything charged to me.

Mr. WARREN. I, the committee chairman, have none charged to me. I would like to have some.

Mr. OVERMAN. I have not been able to get any myself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment, without objection, will be agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I still object to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question, then, is on the adoption of the amendment, which will be again read.

The SECRETARY. On page 12, after line 11, insert:

For miscellaneous items, on account of the Maltby Building, $17,280.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 18, after the words "printed page," to strike out "$25,000" and insert "$50,000," so as to make the clause read:

For expenses of inquiries and investigations ordered by the Senate, including compensation to stenographers to committees, at such rate as may be fixed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, but not exceeding $1.25 per printed page, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 20, to insert:

To enable the postmaster of the Senate to keep a constant supply of postage stamps for sale to Senators, $200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 22, to insert:

The library collected by the National Monetary Commission is hereby made a part of the Library of Congress and under the administration of the Librarian of Congress, but, until otherwise ordered, it shall be kept and maintained in the Senate Office Building in immediate charge of a custodian, who is hereby authorized at a salary of $2,500 per annum, and the sum of $2,500 is hereby appropriated for the salary of such custodian during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to ask for some information from the Senator in charge of the bill. Prefatory to that I will say that I do not think the position taken by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] is quite sound. I refer to his opinion to the effect that we ought to read all these hearings.

Mr. OVERMAN. Oh, no; I do not say that; the Senator misunderstood me. I said, if the Senator had any particular objection to any particular item he would find that in the index.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Turn to the index and find the item and then inform himself. A much quicker route for the information is to apply for the information to competent men who have studied the question and had the reading. It is much quicker and much more satisfactory. It seems to me, if the Senator from Wyoming will pardon me, a part of this is unnecessary. It reads:

The library collected by the National Monetary Commission is hereby made a part of the Library of Congress and under the administration of the Librarian of Congress, but, until otherwise ordered, it shall be kept and maintained in the Senate Office Building in immediate charge of a custodian who is hereby authorized at a salary of $2,500 per annum, and the sum of $2,500 is hereby appropriated for the salary of such custodian during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913.

The question which I desire to ask of the Senator from Wyoming is why it is necessary to keep and maintain this library in the Senate Office Building with a specially employed custodian at $2,500 a year when the great Congressional Library, another most magnificent marble palace in the city of Washington, has space to burn for the storing of books.

Mr. WARREN. Oh, no, Mr. President, not space to burn. We are called on from year to year to build extra stacks to take care of the accumulations over there.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; stacks would have to be built here and there, but the room is there, an abundance of it.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think this item was inserted at the special request of the Finance Committee. I so understood it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, if it was the special request of the Finance Committee, as one of the nonconsidered members of the Finance Committee who have nothing to do with providing salaries of $2,500 for somebody as custodian, I had no knowledge of it. I received no sort of information, and I do not see any sense or use in it. It seems to me if it read this way:

The library collected by the National Monetary Commission is hereby made a part of the Library of Congress and is put under the administration of the Library of Congress, and the sum of $2,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for the purpose of removing the books to the Congressional Library.

We would save at least $2,500 a year for a very indefinite period.

Mr. WARREN. I think the Senator is in error about that. The library is a very expensive one, and it has been accumulating, I understand, and from my observation I think it is true, with a great deal of care by the Monetary Commission during the last several years. It is a library that has been fitted up in rooms with steel cases and a steel spiral staircase to get to the top, where they seemed to want to economize room as much as possible. It is adjacent to the Finance Committee room, and it has been the desire of the House side as well as the Senate side, on the part of those who served on the Monetary Commission, that until some later date it might be preserved intact near by where it would be as useful as possible.

As to the $2,500, that is the salary the present custodian is getting, and possibly more than will be provided when we get through with the bill in conference; but as long as we had that salary, and because he is an expert in that line, and because of the particular usefulness of this library, it was thought best to insert that salary. The Library of Congress belongs to both House and Senate, and this will eventually properly be lodged there; but it will have to have a custodian there just the same.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, what was the authority of the commission for constructing a library room in the Senate building?

Mr. WARREN. Their authority was in the law which provided for that commission and which gave them everything between the sky and the earth.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is it exactly. I wanted to get that statement.

Mr. WARREN. And I must say that their expenses, while possibly extravagant, were less so than usual commissions would have incurred under the expansive limit they had, and one of their very best investments was this library.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, it is not at all wonderful that a commission with authority to do everything between the earth and the sky came within its limits. I should imagine that almost any limit would not exceed the authority.

Mr. WARREN. I desire to say that the Senator from Mississippi was a Member of the House, if I mistake not, which cooperated in passing the law, and I never heard of his objecting to it over there.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not think he was; but that is immaterial. If he was, he is not in the slightest responsible for what this commission has done or for its touring around and its enormous expenditure and its accumulation of this expensive library. The Senator from Wyoming is perfectly correct in saying that it is very expensive, and I was startled by the figures when I saw them.

Mr. WARREN. But both the Senator and I voted for cutting off further expense.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; and I predicted at the time that we had better watch it, because apt as not, it might leave an employee or two behind it; and that is what I am trying to inquire into now. I find that they went to work and they have not only bought an expensive library, but without any specific authority of Congress for that specific purpose, under the general authority which hovered around between the earth and the sky, they have constructed a library room in the Senate Office Building with various arrangements for convenience. Now, it is proposed finally to send it over to the Congressional Library, and the books ought to be sent to the Congressional Library, because they ought to be at the behest and for the benefit and edification of the Members of the House as well as the Members of the Senate, and they ought to be open for the perusal and study of students and scholars everywhere, and such other people as choose to edify themselves by the perusal of those books.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator will allow me, I will state that I understood that inasmuch as the monetary question will come up in the near future, temporarily, if not longer, that library matter ought to be kept there where the Finance Committee could get at it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, no; I draw——

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to say also that one reason why we voted to put it in was because the Senate had acted on this particular question about three weeks ago. A bill passed the Senate and went to the House providing that this should be done.

Mr. SMOOT. That is right.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senate had acted upon it and it had passed through the Senate requiring this to be done, we thought it was our duty as a committee of the Senate to put it in. But for the action of the Senate I would not have agreed to it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, one word, and then I will yield to the Senator from Utah. From the premises laid down by the Senator from North Carolina I arrive at a directly antagonistic conclusion.

The fact that monetary legislation is to be had is a reason, to my mind, for not consigning this information, if it be useful, to a place where it will be confined only to Senators, but would be a reason for consigning it right now to a place where it would be convenient to the entire American public that choose to study the question, including, certainly, the Members of the House of Representatives as much as ourselves, and certainly, in my opinion, other people as well.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. WILLIAMS. And there will be found there already custodians to take charge of it without any extra appropriation for a special custodian.

Mr. OVERMAN. It has got a right to be there, and with a custodian it will be as open to the public there as it would be in the Library of Congress.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Unfortunately it would be more open to the public. The old Congressional Library is called the Congressional Library——

Mr. WARREN. May I ask the Senator a question right there?

Mr. WILLIAMS. One moment, because this is a right pretty thought. It is called the Congressional Library; and I remember that in Amos Cummings's lifetime he wanted to change the name to National Library. I said, "Why, Amos, you remind me of a man who wanted to strike out what seemed to be the unnecessary letters in words that carry by their existence in the word the history of the word itself. They tell you whether they came from the Norman French or from the Latin or whether by accident they came from the Spanish; like the men who want to strike the letter 'u' out of the word 'honour.'" I have never any patience with them. I am perfectly willing to see the letter "u" struck out of the word "labour," because it came directly from the Latin. So I said, "Amos, do not do that; let the history of the Library remain for all time. You are right about it having become a national library, but do not let us call it one; let us carry the name so that it will help those who want to study its history and find out what it was." It was originally a congressional library, but now it has become a national library. Of course, anybody who wants to study any book in that great library can go there and study it. It is free to the entire public to go to. It is true that Members of Congress still have some exclusive privileges in connection with it, which they ought to have. It can not, however, be said that it is open to anybody to any great extent over here where it now is.

Now I yield very gladly to the Senator from Wyoming first, because he interrupted me.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator has got very far away from the subject matter that I wanted to talk about. I wanted to ask him how often he visits the Senators' reading rooms in the Library and how many Senators within the range of my voice go there twice a year on an average?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not visit them at all, but I have books sent to me every week.

Mr. WARREN. But books could be sent as readily from over here.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But people who can not do that go to the public library over there. Students from all over this country are going there and people who are collecting facts to serve as a basis for history and all sorts of investigations are going to the Congressional Library all the time. It is a great institution of great public utility. I should like to see a man like McLaughlin, of Chicago, and I should like to see all these men—Henry Adams and men who have been studying this question—have equal access to these books, and have it right away. I am going to propose, therefore, in a moment to amend the amendment in the manner in which I have indicated and which I will again repeat. Now, I again yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator knows, of course, that the monetary library has not been open like a library of fiction or like the ordinary library of reference, but that it is one more largely for Congress itself; and whether it should be in the Senate Office Building or the House Office Building the courtesies between the two Houses make that equal. So far as the accommodation of books of the library for the Senate is concerned, as the Senator admits, if he wants a book he sends for it; but the nap has not yet been worn off the carpet of the Senator's reading room, and I do not believe the average is one Senator a week the year around in that room.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, one word. I have two reasons for wanting to modify this provision. I want to be frank about them. The first is the reason I have given, to wit: If you are going to do it at all, you ought to do it at once. If you are going to make this information accessible to everybody, you ought to do it as soon as possible, for—

> If it were done when 'tis done, then 'twere well
> It were done quickly.

My second objection is that under this "nigger in the woodpile" is the custodian at $2,500, in whose employment for the purpose of taking care of these books I see no necessity, when the books can be carried over to the Congressional Library and be catalogued and taken care of by the regular Library force much better than any one custodian in the world could possibly take care of them. I mean by that every utility in connection with them could be served.

Mr. WARREN. I think there is no class of books anywhere nearly of the importance of this collection that does not have a special custodian in the library. You will have to have your man just the same. I do not know who this man is. He might go there or he might not, but when you take this collection to the library you will require a custodian for it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know who he is, but I know that the regular library force can catalogue these books and take care of them. I do not know, but I should not at all be surprised to find that the custodian was very close to somebody on the Monetary Commission.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. How many volumes are there in that library?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have forgotten. It cost a big pile of money, but I have forgotten just how many books there are. I was astonished when I read a statement regarding it.

Mr. SMOOT. There are several thousand volumes; I should judge between eight and ten thousand volumes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They cost some $50,000, did they not?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEA in the chair). Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. I simply wanted to state that no matter what anyone may say as to the good accomplished by the Monetary Commission, they must admit that they have collected the best monetary library in all the world. I have heard men who knew, make that statement time and again. That library now is intact, and the man who is its custodian is peculiarly adapted for its care. He knows every volume thoroughly. Any Senator can ask him to bring him a refefence upon any subject in the library, and he will be furnished with the book almost immediately. If the library is to be of any use whatever to Congress or to the people outside, there must be a custodian who knows the contents of the library. The present custodian, as I have before stated, is peculiarly fitted for this work. He is a graduate of one of the best universities in the United States; he has made a study of this particular question; and he knows, as I have said, almost everything that is in every book in that library. We are going to have monetary legislation. Most of the meetings to consider the subject will be held, as the Senator perhaps knows, in the Finance Committee room, where these questions will be discussed. I do think that it would be for the best interests of every Senator who is going at least to pass upon these great questions to have the library immediately at hand and have the custodian there, so that any question which may be asked while in meeting could be answered immediately and the information handed to the committee in five minutes after the request was made.

It is for that reason that I think it would be much better to leave the library where it is until the Monetary Commission shall have at least acted upon and presented monetary legislation to the Senate and the other House.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I am singularly lucky this afternoon in that everything said against the proposition which I am propounding reenforces me in my devotion to it. The Senator from Utah now tells us that this is the largest and best monetary library in the world. I presume that, with the Treasury of this great Government behind them, feeling that they were at liberty to spend all they wished to spend, the commission secured about the best selected monetary library in the world, and I do not doubt it is. I have looked over it; in fact I find some very curious things amongst it, and that is the very reason why I do not want to leave this precious jewel within the exclusive possession of the Senate of the United States. That is one reason why I want the Representatives of the people—and the Senator will pardon my devotion to the Representatives of the people; I was so long a part of them—I want the Representatives of the people to get a fair chance at them.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand there is a good deal of jealousy between the Representatives of the people and the Senate because the Senate has passed a bill requiring this thing to be done, but the Representatives of the people say "No; they shall be placed in the House Office Building."

Mr. WILLIAMS. In the House Office Building?

Mr. OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I am trebly reenforced, because if the Representatives of the people want these books so badly that they are demanding that they be put in the House Office Building, then my proposition to compromise the issue and put the books where both Houses can have equal access to them is all the more recommended to my judgment. I hope there will not be a single vote against it. I now offer to amend——

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator allow me a moment? It is quite certain that we shall not be able to finish this subject to-night; and, if the Senator is willing, I will be glad to lay the bill aside, so that one of the colleagues of the Senator on the other side of the Chamber may bring up a small matter which he wishes to have disposed of.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will agree to that immediately after stating the amendment and giving notice of its pendency. I move to amend the Senate amendment so that it will read, beginning at line 23, on page 12:

The library collected by the National Monetary Commission is hereby made a part of the Library of Congress and is placed under the administration of the Librarian of Congress; and the sum of $250, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for the purpose of removing the books constituting it to the Congressional Library.

Mr. WARREN. So that the Senator may perfect his amendment, I will say that the present library occupies steel shelving and trimmings fitted to the particular rooms now occupied, and that shelving might not be applicable to the other library.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, I will modify the amendment, right after the word "books," by inserting "and the present stacks and shelving to the Congressional Library."

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator wish to include any appropriation for new furnishings?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the Senator think that $250 will be sufficient to do the work?

Mr. WARREN. Not to remove the books and supply the new furniture necessary to take care of them, because the present shelving is fitted to the room where the books now are, and will hardly fit the rooms to which they would be moved.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well, then, I will modify the amendment a little and make the appropriation $500, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. WARREN. Let me call the attention of the Senator to another matter. This being a Senate committee amendment, if we strike it out, of course, something will have to be inserted in its place. As this bill will have to be settled in conference between the House and the Senate, I wish the Senator to consider, and let me know to-morrow, whether he would not like to include a sufficient sum so that it will leave some play room between the House and the Senate. The House may want to keep it on the the Senate side when we meet. I suggest that to the Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Just at this moment I do not see that that will be necessary. It seems to me that in case of a difference existing as to the subject matter, the conferees could modify it in any way they chose.

Mr. WARREN. I have been pulled up rather sharply lately on the matter of changing items in conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before the bill is laid aside, the Chair will suggest that the amendment be stated, so that it may be considered as pending in its perfected form. The amendment as proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment of the committee so that it will read:

The library collected by the National Monetary Commission is hereby made a part of the Library of Congress and is placed under the administration of the Librarian of Congress; and the sum of $500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for the purpose of removing the books and the present stacks and shelving to the Library of Congress.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to say that I have agreed to lay aside the bill so that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] may ask for the consideration of a small matter, but before asking that the bill be laid aside, I desire to say that I hope we may proceed with the further consideration of this bill to-morrow morning immediately after the routine morning business. I have been in communication with two Senators who have special notices recorded in the calendar, one of whom desires me to proceed and the other will confer with me in the morning; so to those Senators who wish to be here when the bill is proceeded with I may say that the prospects are that we will go on with the bill to-morrow morning. I now ask that the bill be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be temporarily laid aside.

EIGHT-HOUR BILL.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the 8-hour bill (H. R. 9061), as it passed the Senate may be printed, so as to show the Senate amendments numbered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

KINGSTON LAKE BRIDGE, CONWAY, S. C.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I have a bill that will cause no debate at all. It is simply to grant to the citizens of Conway, S. C., the privilege of building a bridge across a navigable stream. They had to go through this routine form. The matter was referred to the War Department for information, which they have furnished, and the Committee on Commerce has recommended that the bill be passed. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 6777.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 6777) to authorize the board of county commissioners of Horry County, S. C., to construct a bridge across Kingston Lake at Conway, S. C.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, in line 8, after the word "commissioners," to insert "and approved by the Secretary of War," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the board of county commissioners of Horry County, S. C., be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a steel or wood bridge across Kingston Lake at Conway, S. C., at such a point as may be determined by the said board of county commissioners, and approved by the Secretary of War, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, June 4, 1912, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, June 3, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who are supremely wise, just, pure, and holy; whose mercy is from everlasting to everlasting, create within us as a ruling passion the desire to mold our characters into the likeness of our Maker, that we may be wise, just, pure, holy in all that pertains to life, and at least hear the words, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." And thine be the praise forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, June 1, 1912, was read and approved.

PENSIONS.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 23063) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of the Civil War, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to Senate amendments, and to ask for a conference.

Also, to call up the bill (H. R. 23557) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of the Civil War, with Senate amendment thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and to ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to call up the bills H. R. 23063 and H. R. 23557, with Senate amendments thereto, to disagree to the Senate amendments, and to ask for a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Chair announced the following conferees: Mr. SHERWOOD, Mr. RUSSELL, and Mr. LANGHAM.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bill:

MEMORIAL DAY.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print as a part of my remarks the able and patriotic address delivered by my colleague, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY], on Decoration Day at Glenwood Cemetery, in this city.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to print as a part of his remarks in the RECORD a speech delivered by Representative LANGLEY, of Kentucky, on Memorial Day. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, it is understood that this will appear in the RECORD at the end of the proceedings?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

CALENDAR FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT.

The SPEAKER. This is unanimous-consent day, and the Clerk will report the first bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES.

The first business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 4948) to amend an act approved May 27, 1908, entitled "An act for the removal of restrictions from part of the lands of allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes."

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have that bill passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to pass the bill without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request in respect to the bill H. R. 22083, relating to inherited estates in the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to pass without prejudice the bill H. R. 22083. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

MEXICAN WAR SURVIVORS.

The next bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill H. R. 14054, to increase the pensions of Mexican War survivors in certain cases.

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand that all of the provisions of this bill are covered in the general pension act.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I am informed that through the kindness of my friend from Illinois, Mr. MANN, a few days ago, while I was absent, the Mexican bill was called up on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent. The Mexican bill was placed on that calendar for the purpose of making provision for these veterans in the event that the Sherwood bill did not pass.

The SPEAKER. Then there is no need to pass this bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. No; it should be stricken from the calendar.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

EXCHANGE OF SCHOOL SECTIONS WITHIN AN INDIAN OR OTHER RESERVATION, ETC.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 19344) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to exchange lands for school sections within an Indian, military, national forest, or other reservation, and for other purposes.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I think after they get through with any discussion I shall object.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman object to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I think so.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, under the circumstances it is a long distance from here to California, and I have parties who have a good deal of information in regard to this matter. I hope by next Unanimous Consent Calendar day to have all the information desired in shape, and I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed without prejudice until next Unanimous Consent Calendar day.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I do not know I shall object to unanimous consent, but I do not understand why we should have to wait over for any information from California in reference to this bill. As a matter of fact, this is a bill in which every one of the public-land States is equally interested. We are all equally interested in having legislation, and it does not apply to California any more than it does to Wyoming, Montana, or any of these other States. It is simply an act declaratory of the present law, something made necessary by reason of the fact that there has been some difference of opinion in regard to the proper interpretation of the present law.

Mr. GARNER. May I interrupt the gentleman? Mr. Speaker, the last Unanimous Consent Calendar day we did not get through with the business on the calendar, and where a gentleman announces his intention to object to the bill anyway, it does not seem to me it is looking to the progress of business in the House to continue discussion on a bill where a gentleman is certain he is going to object in the end. If any gentleman in the House wants to have unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on any bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar he can get that privilege, but to use up 20 minutes or more in a discussion of a bill that is certainly going to be objected to, seems to me folly, and that the time of the House ought to be utilized on those bills that may be considered for the purpose of passing them.

Mr. RAKER. If the gentleman will allow me, we have not consumed two minutes upon this proposition. By the time the next unanimous-consent day comes around I will be in a position to give all the information that may be needed to avoid any possible objection to unanimous consent, and there ought not to be any objection to giving two weeks' time within which to do that and permit this bill to go over until next calendar day.

Mr. GARNER. I have no objection to the request of the gentleman from California to pass this without prejudice, and the gentleman from Illinois does not object to that, but why consume 30 minutes to accomplish the same purpose——

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman does not think that a fair discussion of these bills is not a proper thing in the House?

Mr. GARNER. No; I do not object to a discussion of these bills; but when the gentleman from Illinois has already given notice that he is going to object I see no use in the discussion.

Mr. EDWARDS. But the gentleman from California simply wants it to go over now.

Mr. GARNER. He has a right to ask unanimous consent.

Mr. FOSTER. It occurs in the calling up of these bills there may be matter we do not understand and possibly an explanation of the object of the bill would make it so there would be no objection.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, that is correct; and whenever the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] rises in his place and says that he would like to have this bill explained in order to determine whether he will object I am not objecting to that, but when the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] says that he intends to object, then I see no necessity of continuing this discussion.

Mr. FOSTER. I judge the gentleman from Illinois states that he will object on his present information.

Mr. MANN. I stated I thought I should object; I did not say I intended to object.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman from California might convince the gentleman from Illinois that he was wrong.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, let me say to the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Illinois——

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is to find out whether gentlemen are going to object to this bill or not.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that we pass, without prejudice, the consideration of this bill to the next Unanimous Consent Calendar day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to pass over this bill without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman whether he thinks it will be sufficient to pass it over this day, or whether it will be necessary to pass it over a few more times?

Mr. RAKER. I will be in a position at the next unanimous-consent day to let it go on; and if not, I will have to take another course.

Mr. MANN. I do not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to passing over this bill without prejudice? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

DISPOSAL OF SURPLUS LANDS, STANDING ROCK INDIAN RESERVATION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 109) to authorize the sale and disposition of the surplus and unallotted lands in the Standing Rock Indian Reservation, in the States of South Dakota and North Dakota, and making appropriation and provision to carry the same into effect.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, as hereinafter provided, to sell and dispose of all that portion of the Standing Rock Indian Reservation, in the States of South Dakota and North Dakota, lying and being within the following-described boundaries, to wit: Commencing at a point in the center of the main channel of the Missouri River where the township line between townships 18 and 19 north intersects the same; thence west on said township line to a point where the range line between ranges 22 and 23 east intersects the same; thence north along the said range line to the northwest corner of section 19, in township 21 north, of range 23 east; thence east on the section line north of sections 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, and 24 to a point where the same intersects the range line between ranges 23 and 24 east; thence north along said range line to a point where the same intersects the State line between the States of South Dakota and North Dakota; thence west on said State line to a point where the range line between ranges 84 and 85 west in North Dakota intersects the same; thence north on said range line between ranges 84 and 85 west to a point where it intersects the center of the main channel of the Cannon Ball River; thence in a northeasterly direction down and along the center of the main channel of said Cannon Ball River to a point where it intersects the center of the main channel of the Missouri River; thence in a southerly direction along the center of the main channel of the said Missouri River to the place of beginning, and including also entirely all islands, if any, in said river, except such portions thereof as have been allotted to Indians: Provided, That sections 16 and 36 of the lands in each township therein shall not be disposed of, but shall be reserved for the use of the common schools of the States of South Dakota and North Dakota, respectively: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior may reserve such lands as he may deem necessary for agency, school, and religious purposes, to remain reserved as long as needed and as long as agency, school, or religious institutions are maintained thereon for the benefit of said Indians: Provided, however, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to issue a patent in fee simple to the duly authorized missionary board, or other proper authority of any religious organization, heretofore engaged in mission or school work on said reservation, for such lands thereon (not included in any town site herein provided for) as have been heretofore set apart to such organization for mission or school purposes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. FOSTER. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, the bill has not been read yet. The committee has reported a substitute, and the substitute in section 1 is exactly the same as Senate bill 109. I ask unanimous consent that, beginning on page 12, line 3, of the bill, the substitute be read instead of the original bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read the substitute.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, as hereinafter provided, to sell and dispose of all that portion of the Standing Rock Indian Reservation, in the States of South Dakota and North Dakota, lying and being within the following-described boundaries, to wit: Commencing at a point in the center of the main channel of the Missouri River where the township line between townships 18 and 19 north intersects the same; thence west on said township line to a point where the range line between ranges 22 and 23 east intersects the same; thence north along the said range line to the northwest corner of section 19, in township 21 north, of range 23 east; thence east on the section line north of sections 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, and 24 to a point where the same intersects the range line between ranges 23 and 24 east; thence north along said range line to a point where the same intersects the State line between the States of South Dakota and North Dakota; thence west on said State line to a point where the range line between ranges 84 and 85 west in North Dakota intersects the same; thence north on said range line between ranges 84 and 85 west to a point where it intersects the center of the main channel of the Cannon Ball River; thence in a northeasterly direction down and along the center of the main channel of said Cannon Ball River to a point where it intersects the center of the main channel of the Missouri River; thence in a southerly direction along the center of the main channel of the said Missouri River to the place of beginning, and including also entirely all islands, if any, in said river, except such portions thereof as have been allotted to Indians: Provided, That sections 16 and 36 of the lands in each township therein shall not be disposed of, but shall be reserved for the use of the common schools of the States of South Dakota and North Dakota, respectively: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior may reserve such lands as he may deem necessary for agency, school, and religious purposes, to remain reserved as long as needed and as long as agency, school, or religious institutions are maintained thereon for the benefit of said Indians: Provided, however, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to issue a patent in fee simple to the duly authorized missionary board, or other proper authority of any religious organization, heretofore engaged in mission or school work on said reservation, for such lands thereon (not included in any town site herein provided for) as have been heretofore set apart to such organization for mission or school purposes.

SEC. 2. That the lands shall be disposed of by proclamation under the general provisions of the homestead and town-site laws of the United States, and shall be opened to settlement and entry by proclamation of the President, which proclamation shall prescribe the manner in which the lands may be settled upon, occupied, and entered by persons entitled to make entry thereof; and no person shall be permitted to settle upon, occupy, or enter any of said lands except as prescribed in said proclamation: Provided, That prior to said proclamation the Secretary of the Interior shall cause allotments to be made to every man, woman, and child belonging to or holding tribal relations in said reservations who have not heretofore received the allotments to which they are entitled under provisions of existing laws: Provided, however, That the said Secretary is hereby authorized to designate the superintendent of the Standing Rock Indian School to allot each child born subsequent to the completion of the allotments herein provided for and 60 days prior to the date set by said proclamation for the entry of said surplus lands: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be surveyed all the unsurveyed lands, if any, within said reservation, and to cause an examination to be made of the lands by experts of the Geological Survey, and if there be found any lands bearing coal or other valuable minerals the said Secretary is hereby authorized to reserve them from allotment or disposition until further action by Congress: And provided further, That the rights of honorably discharged Union soldiers and sailors of the late Civil and Spanish Wars or Philippine insurrection, as defined and described in sections 2304 and 2305 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by the act of March 1, 1901, shall not be abridged.

SEC. 3. That before any of the land is disposed of, as hereinafter provided, and before the States of South Dakota and North Dakota, respectively, shall be permitted to select or locate any lands to which it may be entitled by reason of the loss of sections 16 or 36, or any portions thereof, by reason of allotments thereof to any Indian or Indians, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to reserve from said lands such tracts for town-site purposes as in his opinion may be required for the future public interests, and he may cause same to be surveyed into lots and blocks and disposed of under such regulations as he may prescribe, and he is hereby authorized to set apart and reserve for school, park, and other public purposes not more than 10 acres in any one town site, and patents shall be issued to the lands so set apart and reserved for school, park, and other public purposes to the municipality legally charged with the care and custody of lands donated for such purposes. The purchase price of all town lots sold in town sites, as hereinafter provided, shall be paid at such time and in such installments as the Secretary of the Interior may direct. He shall cause not more than 20 per cent of the net proceeds arising from such sales to be set apart and expended under his direction in the construction of schoolhouses and other public buildings, or in improvements within the town sites wherein such lots are located. The net proceeds derived from the sale of such lots and lands within the town sites as aforesaid shall be credited to the Indians as hereinafter provided: Provided further, That all children of school age and of Indian parentage shall be admitted at all times to the public schools within said town sites on an equal footing with all other children admitted to the said schools.

SEC. 4. That the price of said lands entered as homesteads under the provisions of this act shall be as follows: Upon all lands entered or filed upon within three months after the same shall be opened for settlement and entry, $6 per acre, and upon all lands entered or filed upon after the expiration of three months and within six months after the same shall have been opened for settlement and entry, $4 per acre; after the expiration of six months, after the same shall have been opened for settlement and entry, the price shall be $2.50 an acre.

SEC. 5. That the price of said lands shall be paid in accordance with the rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior upon the following terms: One-fifth of the purchase price to be paid in cash at the time of entry and the balance in five equal installments, the first within two years and the remainder annually in three, four, five, and six years, respectively, from and after the date of entry. In case any entryman fails to make the annual payments, or any of them, when due, all rights in and to the land covered by his entry shall cease, and any payments theretofore made shall be forfeited and the entry canceled, and the lands shall be reoffered for sale and entry under the provisions of the homestead law at the price fixed herein: Provided, That nothing in this act shall prevent homestead settlers from commuting their entries under section 2301, Revised Statutes, by paying for the land entered the price fixed herein, receiving credit for the payments previously made. In addition to the price to be paid for the land the entryman shall pay the same fees and commissions at the time of commutation of final entry as now provided by law where the price of land is $1.25 per acre; and when the entryman shall have complied with all the requirements and terms of the homestead laws as to settlement and residence, and shall have made all the required payments aforesaid, he shall be entitled to patent for the lands entered: Provided further, That any lands remaining unsold after said lands have been opened to entry for five years may be sold to the highest bidder for cash, without regard to the prescribed price thereof fixed under the provisions of this act, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, and patents therefor shall be issued to the purchasers.

SEC. 6. That from the proceeds arising from the sale and disposition of the lands aforesaid, exclusive of the customary fees and commissions, there shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States, to the credit of the Indians belonging and having tribal rights on the said reservation, the sums of which the said tribe may be entitled, which shall draw interest at 3 per cent per annum; that the moneys derived from the sale of said lands and deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of said Indians shall be at all times subject to appropriation by Congress for their education, support, and civilization: Provided, That from any moneys in the Treasury to the credit of the Standing Rock Indians derived from the proceeds arising from the sale and disposition of their portion of the surplus and unallotted lands disposed of under section 6 of the act approved May 29, 1908, the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to distribute and pay to each of the Indians belonging to said tribe and entitled thereto a sum not exceeding $40 per capita.

SEC. 7. That sections 16 and 36 of the land in each township within the tract described in section 1 of this act shall not be subject to entry, but shall be reserved for the use of the common schools and paid for by the United States at $2.50 per acre, and the same are hereby granted to the States of South Dakota and North Dakota, respectively, for such purpose, and in case any of said sections or parts thereof are lost to either of the said States by reason of allotments thereof to any Indian or Indians or otherwise, the governor of each of said States, respectively, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, is hereby authorized, within the area described in section 1 of this act, to locate other lands not otherwise appropriated, not exceeding two sections in any one township, which shall be paid for by the United States, as herein provided, in quantity equal to the loss, and such selections shall be made prior to the opening of such lands to settlement.

SEC. 8. That the lands allotted, those retained or reserved, and the surplus lands sold, set aside for town-site purposes, or granted to the State, or otherwise disposed of, shall be subject for a period of 25 years to all the laws of the United States prohibiting the introduction of intoxicants into the Indian country.

SEC. 9. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $180,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay for the lands granted to the States of South Dakota and North Dakota, as provided in section 7 of this act. And there is hereby appropriated the further sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purpose of making the surveys and allotments provided for herein: Provided, That the said $10,000, or so much thereof as may be expended for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act, shall be reimbursed to the United States from the proceeds received from the sale of the lands described herein or from any money in the Treasury belonging to said Indian tribe.

SEC. 10. That nothing in this act contained shall in any manner bind the United States to purchase any portion of the land herein described, except sections 16 and 36, or the equivalent, in each township, or to dispose of said land except as provided herein, or to guarantee to find purchasers for said lands or any portion thereof, it being the intention of this act that the United States shall act as trustee for said Indians to dispose of the said lands and to expend and pay over the proceeds received from the sale thereof only as received and as herein provided: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to deprive the said Indians of the Standing Rock Indian Reservation of any benefits to which they are entitled under existing treaties or agreements not inconsistent with the provisions of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] give some explanation of this bill. I have some communications from parties interested in the opening of this reservation, and it occurs to me that if the things contained in those communications are true, the Government ought not to open this reservation at this time and dispose of these lands.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. FOSTER. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, the Standing Rock Reservation contains about 1,300,000 acres of land. It has all been allotted, with the exception of about 219,000 acres, which this bill proposes to put upon the market and to have sold to homestead settlers.

The Standing Rock Indians are one of the Sioux Tribes of Indians, and have in allotments the largest area of land of any tribe of Indians in the United States. The heads of families have 640 acres of land each. Their wives have 320 acres each. An unmarried Indian over the age of 18 years has 320 acres. Every child under 18 years of age has 160 acres. Consequently, a family of five in this tribe of Indians will have 980 acres in the husband and wife and 160 acres for each child, making in all 1,440 acres, which ought to be enough land for one family.

The original treaty, made in 1889, contemplated that after the allotments had been made the surplus lands should be disposed of and sold to homestead settlers. The theory of the law was that it would be beneficial to the Indians in many respects to have the surplus lands settled upon and improved by the white people.

The communication that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] refers to is from a delegation of Indians. This delegation came to Washington during the winter and spent some weeks here, and were twice before the Committee on Indian Affairs. They objected to the passage of this Senate bill for several reasons. The principal objection that they had to the bill was that they had not directly received any part of the proceeds from the sale of that portion of the Standing Rock Reservation which was opened to settlement under the law passed in 1908, and they were very solicitous that there be something paid to them from the sale of that land.

That law provides that the money shall go into the Treasury and be expended for the Indians for their support, civilization, and education. The Indians claim that the agent, Maj. McLaughlin, who negotiated with them before that law was passed, promised them that some part of the proceeds would be paid to them. After listening to this delegation and considering the communication which the gentleman referred to, the committee unanimously reported a substitute.

We have put into the substitute a provision by which not exceeding $40 per capita may be paid from the proceeds of the sale of a portion of the reservation opened under the act of 1908, and I may say that one of the leading Indians of that delegation said to me before he left Washington that if there was a provision that they could have that payment, then they practically had no objection to the passage of the bill.

Another objection that they had to it was section 11, which provided that there should be paid 20 per cent of the proceeds received from the sale of the land opened under this act of 1908. They objected to that very strenuously, and that section is eliminated from the bill.

Another objection they had to the passage of the bill was that it provided for the appraisement of the land, and that it involved an expense of from fifteen to twenty-five dollars. We have eliminated that, and provided that the land shall be disposed of under terms to be fixed so that all land taken in the first three months shall be sold at a certain price, and at a less price for the next three months, and after that a price of $2.50 an acre.

The department, in reporting upon this bill, recommends:

Notwithstanding the opposition to the opening of their reservation as expressed by the Indians in their council of November 28, 1911, I am of the opinion that the enactment of Senate bill 109, if amended as suggested herein, would be to the advantage of the Standing Rock Tribe at large.

We have made not only the amendments suggested by the department, but we have gone further, by making a provision that there shall be a per capita payment to the Indians.

If you will take the House report, you will find the report made by Maj. McLaughlin, the inspector who went to the Standing Rock Reservation and negotiated with these Indians, a man who has been in the Indian Service for more than 40 years, who for many years was the agent of the Standing Rock Indians, and he said in the concluding part of his report:

In conclusion, I desire to state that the Standing Rock Indians are well disposed and will acquiesce in any course pursued in the administration of their affairs; and notwithstanding their apparent opposition, as voiced by their chosen spokesmen, to the provisions of the pending bill, they will graciously accept whatever may be determined upon in this matter. Furthermore, having been intimately acquainted with the Standing Rock Indians for the past 30 years and believing that the opening of the surplus lands of their reservation will be beneficial to them as a people, as well as in the interests of the service, I respectfully recommend that legislation for the opening of their diminished reservation be enacted along the lines of Senate bill 109, Sixty-second Congress, first session, with the modifications herein suggested, and that at least one reasonable cash payment be made to them from the proceeds of their lands opened by the act of May 29, 1908.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from South Dakota has made a very clear explanation of the bill. Undoubtedly the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] knows whether he is going to object to it. I want to give notice now that when these bills are called up, as they come up I am going to call for the regular order; and if gentlemen have not sufficiently examined a bill to know whether they will object to it, they will have to take the consequences. I demand the regular order.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I do not understand that the gentleman objects to this bill——

Mr. GARNER. I do not object to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman from Texas object?

Mr. GARNER. I did not. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is what is going on now.

Mr. GARNER. The regular order is for the Chair to put the question whether or not there is objection.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is for Members to talk these things out. They sometimes exceed the limits of patience, but the Chair has no control of that.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, if a gentleman, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has done in this instance, reserves the right to object, and any gentleman in his place rises and says, "I demand the regular order," it is the duty of the Chair then to ask if anyone objects to this bill.

The SPEAKER. Perhaps that is true.

Mr. GARNER. I think it is true, and that is what I have done.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. EDWARDS. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. EDWARDS] objects.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I hope the gentleman will not object to this bill. If there were any objectionable features in it, they have been removed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has already objected. The bill goes off the calendar, and the Clerk will report the next one.

AMERICAN TRADE AND FOREIGN SHIPPING MONOPOLIES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 23470) to protect American trade and American shipping from foreign monopolies.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever in a proceeding brought under the provisions of the act of July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," it shall be adjudged that the owners, managers, or operators of any vessel or vessels, whether of the United States or of any foreign country, are engaged in a contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of interstate or foreign trade or commerce, or are monopolizing or attempting to monopolize any part of such trade or commerce, in violation of such act, the court may, by its judgment or decree, prohibit all vessels employed pursuant to such contract, combination, or conspiracy, or in such monopolization or attempt to monopolize, from entering at or clearing from any port of the United States; whereupon it shall be unlawful for such vessel or vessels to so enter or clear until the court shall find that such contract, combination, or conspiracy has been canceled, terminated, or dissolved, or such monopolization or attempt to monopolize ended.

SEC. 2. That a penalty of $25,000 shall be imposed upon any vessel which shall enter or clear from any port of the United States in violation of the provisions of a judgment or decree rendered as provided in section 1 of this act, for each and every such entry or clearance, which penalty or penalties may be recovered by proceedings in admiralty in the district court of the United States for the district in which said vessel may be, and which court may direct the sale of said vessel for the purpose of realizing the amount of said penalty or penalties and cost.

SEC. 3. That the Postmaster General is hereby authorized and directed to cancel any contract for carrying the ocean mails pursuant to the act of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports, and to promote commerce," on satisfactory evidence to him that any vessel performing such a service under such contract is, at the time of performing such service, owned, operated, or controlled by any person or persons who, in any proceeding, civil or criminal, instituted by the Government of the United States, have been adjudged by a court of the United States to have violated the act of July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," and that said vessel performing such a service under such contract at the time of performing such service is being used to carry out the purposes and objects adjudged unlawful in such proceeding.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask some gentleman to explain this bill.

Mr. GARNER. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The rule ought to be construed in some reasonable way. The House is not obliged to vote on a bill or give unanimous consent instantly without knowing what there is in the bill. The Chair thinks there ought to be a reasonable limit. The Chair is with the gentleman from Texas that far.

Mr. HARDY. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HARDY. My impression is that on the last unanimous-consent day this bill was up for unanimous consent and was being considered.

The SPEAKER. Was there a reservation of the right to object?

Mr. MANN. This bill was not reached on the last unanimous-consent day.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes; it was.

Mr. GARNER. Yes; it was, and it went over.

Mr. HARDY. We were engaged in the discussion of it. I do not believe there was any objection to it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman, for information, how it happened that if this bill was being discussed at the time the House adjourned on last unanimous-consent day there are six or eight bills ahead of it on the calendar to-day?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think it occurred in this way, that other bills preceding it had been passed over by unanimous consent, and for that reason they had precedence on the Unanimous Consent Calendar to-day.

Mr. MANN. That is correct.

Mr. ALEXANDER. It is a fact that this bill was being considered.

Mr. MANN. There was a reservation of the right to object.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and others discussed it somewhat.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I requested that two of these preceding bills be passed over on account of the sickness of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER].

The SPEAKER. The RECORD will show.

Mr. GARNER. If I may be indulged a moment, I have no desire to cut off opportunity to ascertain the purport of a bill before the House, but the Chair will remember that on the last unanimous-consent day we considered the Unanimous-Consent Calendar all day and yet did not finish the calendar.

The SPEAKER. No; but there were three pages and a half of that calendar.

Mr. FOSTER. I think we did remarkably well last unanimous-consent day.

Mr. GARNER. If we are going to take up 30 minutes or an hour in the discussion of each bill, and then if some gentleman is going to object, he undoubtedly knows whether he intends to object, and I do not believe it is in the interest of public business to let the discussion proceed indefinitely under such circumstances.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Certainly.

Mr. FERRIS. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that on Calendar Wednesday when a Member is recognized he has the right to speak for one hour, and I would like to call attention to the fact that we have not been getting for a long while the benefit we ought to; we have not got off the calendar on Wednesday but one bill—and I might say on the side that that rule ought to be amended——

Mr. MANN. It ought to be abolished.

Mr. FERRIS. This is the only possible hope that Members have of getting their little bills through. I hope the gentleman from Texas will exercise more leniency than he has manifested this morning so that we may explain these bills, at least for a little time, and let the Member who feels it his duty to reserve an objection know whether he is going to object or not. Here we are with a calendar loaded to the guards with bills. No one himself, unless he is more diligent than the most of us, can tell the moment the title to a bill is read whether he is going to object or not. Unless he is given more latitude than the gentleman—and I want the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. EDWARDS] to hear this—unless he is given more latitude to explain it, the Unanimous Consent Calendar will be of no more use than Calendar Wednesday. These bills, while seemingly unimportant, are important, and they ought to be disposed of. The big appropriation bills have the right of way, and I think a man should hesitate a good while before he cuts off all possibility of getting these local bills considered.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Oklahoma evidently misunderstands my object in the premises. In the first place, referring to Calendar Wednesday, I have no way under the rules of hastening matters, or else I would take that procedure. Under the rules of this House on Calendar Wednesday when a bill is taken up and a Member gets the floor he is entitled to one hour, unless the previous question is moved, and the next gentleman has an hour. So, under the rules, if I am not in charge of a bill I do not feel authorized to move the previous question.

But the Unanimous Consent Calendar; I am anxious to let the man who has a bill have the opportunity to have it considered. I am not making objection myself, and each Member of the House will realize that I have made no objection to any bill that has come up, because I believe if you let a bill come up and it is a bad bill the House will defeat it on its merits; but I do protest against this manner of discussing a bill a half an hour or an hour and then some gentleman saying, "I object." You have had the entire discussion with no benefit to the House, whereas if you permit a bill to come up on its merits and then discuss it, if it is not meritorious the House will refuse to pass it.

Now, one word further: I do not propose to insist on the regular order as each one of these bills is called, but I am calling the attention of the House at this time to the fact that they may take notice that a prolonged discussion of any bill before the question is put as to unanimous consent will not be permitted, but the regular order will be demanded.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the Clerk reported the bill H. R. 23470, and thereupon I reserved an objection, and thereupon the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], without waiting for anything, demanded the regular order, evidently for the purpose of having the bill brought before the House for consideration or objected to. If no objection was made to the consideration of the bill, and the bill came before the House, it might take all the day under the rules of the House. It is a shorter procedure, as a rule, to reserve an objection until an explanation is made.

Now, this bill is not a local bill; no more important bill has been presented to this House than this bill, and no more drastic legislation has been proposed to this House than is contained in this bill. I should be unwilling to have it pass without some statement, so that Members of the House should not hereafter be permitted to say that this bill with all of its provisions, drastic as they are, passed by unanimous consent and I knew nothing about it. I want an explanation of the bill, so that members are put on notice and know what the bill is when they vote for it. As I say, it is frequently a shorter procedure to reserve an objection.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. GARNER. If the question was put and unanimous consent given for the consideration of the bill, would it not be opened up by discussion?

Mr. MANN. Yes; and it might take a day.

Mr. GARNER. And if it is as important a bill as the gentleman says it is, why should it not take all day, not only to-day but the next day, to consider important legislation like this?

Mr. MANN. No; it ought not to take all day on unanimous-consent day. If a bill is called up and the bill is found to be so important that it ought to receive full consideration and discussion, objection ought to be made, because it ought not to be taken up on unanimous-consent day.

Mr. GARNER. Then ought not the gentleman from Illinois to make the objection at once? A measure that the gentleman says ought to take more than one day to consider, ought not the objection to be made at once?

Mr. MANN. I have not said that it ought to take more than one day to consider it. I have not said that it ought to take 10 minutes. I should think 10 minutes ought to be enough, and possibly less time to state what every bill is, so that every Member can have brought home to him what it is.

The SPEAKER. The truth about the whole situation is this: There are three processes of getting a bill up which are exceptions to the general rule, and all three are intended to expedite, not to retard, public business. The first one is by unanimous consent, the second is by suspension of the rules, and the third is by a motion to discharge the committee. Evidently the philosophy of it is that bills would be put on the Unanimous Consent Calendar to which there could be no reasonable objection—that is, when Members find out what is in the bill there will be no objection to it. The two-thirds rule takes in a class of bills which are a little more difficult.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] is technically right when he demands the regular order, which means that the Chair should immediately put the question, "Is there objection?" But if that were done, without any chance for explanation, Members would object, as we have already seen them do, to every bill that was called up, and thereby make a farce out of the Unanimous Consent Calendar. Of course, the theory is that every Member understands every bill which comes up here, but that is a very wild presumption. [Laughter.]

When a bill is read the Chair does the best he can to keep order, but frequently there is so much confusion that Members do not know what is in the bill when the Clerk gets through. No Member ought to be refused the privilege of reserving the right to object, but to strike it out would be to the detriment of somebody else.

Some of these bills that are called up by unanimous consent are extremely important bills, and there ought to be a reasonable time allowed upon them. Whenever the Chair thinks a reasonable time has come, he puts the question for unanimous consent. Undoubtedly allowing a reasonable time for inquiries touching the contents of a bill tends to expedite the public business.

As far as Calendar Wednesday is concerned, the Chair is very frank to state publicly what he has stated privately, that he believes that rule ought to be changed and a limit fixed to the time that any gentleman can hold up the House upon that day. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] upon this bill has reserved the right to object, and the Chair is willing to hear him. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to be heard. I want to hear something about the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

I would like to inquire what the RECORD shows with reference to the status of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The RECORD shows that when the House adjourned upon last unanimous-consent day the bill was in precisely the condition that it is now in. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] reserved the right to object and proceeded to make some remarks, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] then suggested the absence of a quorum, whereupon the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], seeing there was no quorum, moved that the House adjourn, and the House did adjourn.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I will undertake to briefly explain this bill. As has been suggested, it is an important bill, but it is not at all complicated in its provisions. On account of its importance and its far-reaching effect, I hope nobody will object to its consideration, for I do not believe there is any gentleman on this floor who is friendly to the combinations, whether they be domestic or foreign, at which this bill strikes. When the bill was first introduced in the House by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] it simply provided that no foreign ship in a combination or pool should be permitted to enter or depart from an American port under the penalties similar to those prescribed in section 2 of the bill. That did not meet the views of the committee. It was then referred to the Department of Justice for consideration and report to the committee. A substitute for the bill was sent to me as chairman of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries from the Department of Justice. After consideration that bill did not meet the view of the committee. I then requested the Attorney General to appear before the committee. He kindly did so, and the provisions of the substitute bill were discussed at length. As I stated, the original and the substitute bill were aimed at foreign shipping pools or combinations. The committee suggested that it should apply to domestic as well as foreign combinations. The Attorney General readily yielded to that suggestion. It was also suggested that the law should be so framed that there would be no doubt that the courts, having found that ships were in these unlawful combinations and pools in violation of the terms of the Sherman Antitrust law, should have the authority in the decree to expressly provide that no ship used as an instrument to carry out the unlawful purpose of the combination should be permitted to enter or depart from an American port until the court should find that the combination or pool no longer existed. Also that section 2 should provide that if in the meantime any vessel should enter or depart from an American port, which vessel by the terms of the decree was prohibited from so entering or departing, it should be subject to the penalties prescribed in section 2. The Attorney General concurred in the suggestions of the committee, and sections 1 and 2 were redrafted to conform to that view. The bill further provides that the Postmaster General shall cancel any mail contract which may have been entered into with a company the vessels of which are embraced in the decree of the court and are being operated in violation of law. That is the substance of the bill, and it is simply to make more effective the provisions of the Sherman antitrust law and provide a better remedy for the violation of that law.

Those who have studied the question at all agree that not only the foreign shipping interests are in these pools or combinations, but that our domestic shippers, our coastwise shipping, as far as that is concerned, are all to a more or less extent in these combinations or pools. After full consideration by the committee and after conferences with the Department of Justice, and finally after having had the Attorney General before the committee and having discussed the matter thoroughly, this bill was evolved and has the approval of the Department of Justice.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Certainly.

Mr. HARDY. I would like to state that it is also the purpose of this bill to make certain the authority of the court to render the decree which the Attorney General said should be asked for in the suits pending against these unlawful combinations, and the Attorney General thought it might be essential to have this bill passed into law in order to efficiently administer the proceedings of the court.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for the suggestion. Suits are already pending in the Federal courts in New York the purpose of which is to dissolve these rings or pools or unlawful combinations; and while the Attorney General did not say that the court has no power under the Sherman antitrust law to enter a decree to the effect that vessels in the pool might not enter or depart from our ports so long as the rings, pools, or unlawful combinations exist, yet we wanted it in the form of express law that it should be a part of the decree of the court. Hence we provide:

That whenever in a proceeding brought under the provisions of the act of July 2, 1890, entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," it shall be adjudged that the owners, managers, or operators of any vessel or vessels, whether of the United States or of any foreign country, are engaged in a contract, combination, or conspiracy in restraint of interstate or foreign trade or commerce or are monopolizing or attempting to monopolize any part of such trade or commerce in violation of such act the court may, by its judgment or decree, prohibit all vessels employed pursuant to such contract, combination, or conspiracy, or in such monopolization or attempt to monopolize, from entering at or clearing from any port of the United States, whereupon it shall be unlawful for such vessel or vessels to so enter or clear until the court shall find that such contract, combination, or conspiracy has been canceled, terminated, or dissolved, or such monopolization or attempt to monopolize ended.

In my view, the chief merit of this bill is this, that after it has once been judicially determined that these companies have been in a combination or ring or pool and the court has expressly decreed that the vessels named shall not enter or depart while the combination exists, it throws the burden on the companies to show that the ring, pool, or combination has been dissolved and that the ring, pool, or combination no longer exists, and the burden is not upon the Government, as it would have been in the original bill, to prove it in each case.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNER. I understood the gentleman to say, although I was unable to hear him distinctly, that the bill as it now stands meets with the approval of the Department of Justice.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. Is it the opinion of the Department of Justice that the Sherman antitrust law is sufficient to bring these foreign combinations that are now doing this business under its jurisdiction?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. I am quite sure that it would be possible to bring them under its jurisdiction, but I am not sure at all that they are now under its jurisdiction.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I will say to the gentleman that the Attorney General has no doubt upon that question. There are two suits now pending, one relating to the Far Eastern trade and one to the north Atlantic trade, involving that question.

Mr. TOWNER. I take it the gentleman assumes or takes for granted the proposition that this foreign shipping can be brought within the jurisdiction of the Sherman antitrust law.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes; of course, we have a right under the Constitution, which vests in Congress the power to regulate commerce between the States, and foreign commerce, to legislate on the subject matter, and it is our opinion these vessels that have entered and departed from American ports come under the provisions of that law.

Mr. TOWNER. Well, the difficulty, I suppose, lies with the determination whether or not a trust which was entirely foreign in its makeup and constituent parts could be brought under the jurisdiction of the Sherman antitrust law unless so specifically stated. It seems to me that is rather a serious question and one I have not given sufficient consideration——

Mr. ALEXANDER. The answer of the Shipping Trust is that we can not enforce this law for the reason that 90 per cent of our commerce is carried on foreign ships, and if we should undertake to enforce the provisions of this act we would cut off our means of transportation of our goods in foreign commerce. But the answer to that is that the prosperity of those companies depends upon their commerce with the United States, and we take it that rather than subject themselves to the penalties under this act they will obey the law, otherwise they will be the greater losers, and, next, we are not disposed to yield to any such suggestion as that.

Mr. TOWNER. I would like to ask the gentleman whether it would not be easy to have an amendment to this bill to place them unquestionably and specifically under the terms of the Sherman antitrust law?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Well, we would not care to suggest at this time, with two suits pending in the United States District Court of New York in which demurrers have been overruled, that there is any lack of authority under the Sherman antitrust law to enforce the law against this ship combination.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill to protect American trade and American shipping from domestic and foreign monopolies."

On motion of Mr. ALEXANDER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ENLARGED HOMESTEADS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 5428) to amend section 1 of an act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead," approved February 19, 1909.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide for an enlarged homestead," approved February 19, 1909, be, and is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. That any person who is a qualified entryman under the homestead laws of the United States may enter, by legal subdivisions, under the provisions of this act, in the States of Arizona, Colorado, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oregon, Utah, Washington, and Wyoming, 320 acres, or less, of nonmineral, nonirrigable, unreserved, and unappropriated surveyed public lands which do not contain merchantable timber, located in a reasonably compact body, and not over 1½ miles in extreme length: Provided, That no lands shall be subject to entry under the provisions of this act until such lands shall have been designated by the Secretary of the Interior as not being, in his opinion, susceptible of successful irrigation at a reasonable cost from any known source of water supply.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. MANN. As I understand this bill, while it names a number of States which should have the enlarged-homestead law as the Senate passed it, one is North Dakota, and as the House committee reports it, they have an addition of California.

Mr. RAKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. What reason is there for extending the enlarged-homestead law to California or North Dakota?

Mr. RAKER. Of course, the gentleman is aware that it applies to Colorado, Montana, Nevada——

Mr. MANN. Yes; to these other States named.

Mr. RAKER. For the same reason that it is necessary to apply it to the other States. There is a large quantity of land in the east and southeast of California where a man has a present homestead, and if he could enter 160 acres and cultivate it or cultivate one-eighth of it and then continue on until he makes final proof, he is in better shape to make a living and provide for his family and himself and build up the country. The reason for North Dakota is specified in Senator GRONNA's letter to the committee in the Senate when it passed the bill.

Mr. MANN. Well, Mr. Speaker, we made the enlarged-homestead law apply first to one or two States, and we have increased it on the theory that there were certain arid lands in the West this side of the Rocky Mountains where it was impossible to do anything without having more than 160 acres. In some places it has been abused and in some places it has been a very beneficial act, but it seems to me we ought to have very full information in regard to it, and there is absolutely no information in regard to it in relation to California.

Mr. RAKER. I want to call attention to the fact that this matter was submitted to the department, and the gentleman will find full information on page 3 of the report. They have gone into the matter thoroughly and reported in favor of this bill. The same circumstances which would call for the application of this extended homestead to Nevada, Colorado, and New Mexico call for it so far as the south and east of California are concerned.

Mr. MANN. How much land is there in California that this bill would apply to if it should be passed?

Mr. RAKER. I should believe possibly half a million acres.

Mr. MANN. That is down in the lowlands of the southeastern part of California?

Mr. RAKER. Along the eastern side of the State, and the southeastern, and such places.

Mr. MANN. Some of it, if we gave 320 acres or 32,200 acres, you could not make a living, and the gentleman does not expect to apply it there with any effect?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; the eastern part of the State, and places like that.

Mr. MANN. The bill ought not to be passed, because it would be a pure confidence game.

Mr. RAKER. In this the gentleman from Illinois is entirely mistaken, and I hope there will be no objections and that the bill with the amendment will pass.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield for a moment?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois I made some inquiry of the Land Office officials with reference to the situation in California with regard to the enlarged homestead laws. I can say that it is the opinion of the officials charged with the responsibility of administering the homestead laws that there are some areas of land in California in different sections to which the enlarged homestead law might properly be applied. The gentleman recollects that this law does not apply to any lands until the Secretary of the Interior designates them as lands of a character not irrigable at a reasonable cost. It enlarges the homestead area as to certain classes of lands, because on those classes of lands more than 160 acres is necessary, or believed to be necessary, for the support of a family. They must be nonirrigable and nonmineral and not containing merchantable timber. They are either dry lands, where they must practice dry-farming methods, or very rough lands in the hills where but a small portion of the 320 acres can be cultivated and where that area is necessary for a permanent home for the support of a family.

I think there is no question but that in the two States now proposed to be embraced within the provisions of the bill there are considerable areas which the Secretary will probably designate as falling under the provisions of the act.

Mr. MANN. The provision of the law is that "no lands shall be subject to entry under the provisions of this act until such lands shall have been designated by the Secretary of the Interior as not being, in his opinion, susceptible of successful irrigation at a reasonable cost from any known water supply." Of course, if the land is such that it does not require irrigation at all, it still may be taken up under the provisions of this law?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. There is much land in California that does not require irrigation, where we ought not certainly to give more than 160 acres. Yet under the provisions of this law that land which has a plentiful supply of water fall might be taken up under the provisions of the law in areas of 320 acres.

Mr. MONDELL. I suppose the gentleman is aware of the fact that these entries are limited to lands that do not contain merchantable timber. There are now no lands in the State of California subject to homestead entry, nonirrigable and nontimbered, where the entryman does not require more than 160 acres to care for a family and to make a fair home.

Mr. MANN. I am not aware of that, and, with due respect to the gentleman, I do not think he is aware of it.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman thinks he is not aware of it, but if the gentleman had lived as long as I have lived in the West——

Mr. MANN. In California?

Mr. MONDELL. I have not lived in California; but if the gentleman recalled the successive waves of homestead seekers who have gone over that land in the last 40 years he would realize that if there were 160 acres in that territory that was good land it would long since have been taken.

Mr. MANN. There were more acres of land taken up last year than in any year in the history of the country—much of it good, new land.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from California permit a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. RAKER. I do.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Does this apply to lands in the neighborhood of San Bernardino, Cal.?

Mr. RAKER. If the lands come within the description of the bill, that they are nonmineral and nonirrigable and nontimbered and not appropriated, and, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, not susceptible of irrigation at a reasonable cost.

Mr. CAMPBELL. But the lands in that section of the country are irrigable, and anywhere from 10 to 20 or 30 acres of land makes a ranch upon which men are making a good living.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, no.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, I have been there.

Mr. RAKER. That land could not be entered under this act.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The gentleman said it would apply to land in that neighborhood. If it does apply to it, or if it could be made to apply to it, I would certainly object, because 40 acres would make an ample ranch.

Mr. RAKER. I mean only lands that are designated by the Secretary in San Bernardino County, not in the city. The unoccupied lands in the county are very extensive. Take it up in Mono and Modoc and Lassen and other counties of that character and it would apply and it would be beneficial. This matter was taken up with the Secretary of the Interior, and he makes a report to the effect that the department approves it and sees no objection to it. And it applies in the same way as to Nevada and Oregon and other States adjoining.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would rather have the gentleman's own opinion in regard to a policy than that of some clerk in a General Land Office or in the Department of the Interior, if he knows about the subject.

Mr. RAKER. I would say to the gentleman that from personal experience I am satisfied that with the restrictions here specified it would be a good thing, because there are many acres of land in that country that would come under private use and taxation if we could add to the holding of a homesteader a sufficient amount to enable him to handle it by virtue of expending the money necessary to put it under successful cultivation.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, there are so many people without any sort of homestead that I do not think it is very good policy to enlarge the size of the homestead where it is possible to irrigate and make 10 or 20 or 30 acres a sufficient homestead for anyone.

Mr. RAKER. This does not do that.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Here is a plan to enlarge a homestead to 160 acres.

Mr. GRAHAM. The bill contains the words "or less," and the discretion is given to the Secretary to make it as low as 40 acres.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It can not always be predicted whether land can be irrigated or not. An inspector of the General Land Office might be sent out to inspect a piece of land, a section of country, and he might report back, "No; this can not be irrigated." But some practical engineer could go there and construct an irrigating ditch and irrigate that whole section of country.

Mr. GRAHAM. If the department declares it to be nonirrigable, the chances are that it is nonirrigable. And would it not be better to utilize it now than to wait to see if in the future a spring might break out or some sort of water supply could be found?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, well, there is sufficient water supply out there if engineers can be found to construct irrigating ditches. They are constructing them and extending the irrigable area constantly.

Mr. GRAHAM. This land is above the source of any known water supply.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I want the gentleman to look at that proviso on page 2:

That no lands shall be subject to entry under the provisions of this act until such lands shall have been designated by the Secretary of the Interior as not being, in his opinion, susceptible of successful irrigation at a reasonable cost from any known source of water supply.

It seems to me that is about as secure as you could possibly make it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 10, after the word "Arizona," insert the word "California."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. RAKER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

CHEYENNE AND ARAPAHO SCHOOL LANDS, OKLAHOMA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 22647) providing for the sale and entry of certain lands in the State of Oklahoma, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following-described tracts of land within the State of Oklahoma, to wit, the southeast quarter and the south half of the northeast quarter of section 30, the east half of section 31, and section 32, all in township 19 north of range 13 west of the Indian meridian; and the west half of section 5 and the northeast quarter of section 5, and section 6, all in township 18 north of range 13 west of the Indian meridian; and also any other tract or tracts of land within what was formerly the Cheyenne and Arapaho Indian Reservation which heretofore may have been reserved for agency or school purposes which, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior, are no longer needed or necessary for the purpose for which said tract or tracts were originally reserved; and said lands shall be opened to entry and settlement and the proceeds thereof disposed of under the conditions, terms, and provisions prescribed in the act approved June 17, 1910, entitled "An act to open to settlement and entry under the general provisions of the homestead laws of the United States certain lands in the State of Oklahoma, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman a question. I notice that the department in reporting upon this bill states that it has authority now to make sale of the land in question. Is that the case?

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the gentleman's inquiry I will state that I have in my hand a letter from Assistant Secretary Adams, dated May 21, 1912, and addressed to Hon. John H. Stephens, chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, which letter is very brief and will probably explain that. He says:

SIR: Referring to the report of the department of May 2 relative to H. R. 22647 providing for the disposition of certain lands embraced within the Cantonment school and agency reserve, Oklahoma, Hon. Dick T. Morgan calls attention to the reference therein to the act of June 17, 1910 (36 Stat. L., 533), and suggests that the act cited does not now afford authority for any disposition of the lands covered by the proposed bill. By reference to the act it appears that Mr. Morgan's contention is correct, and I am so advising your committee in accordance with his request.

Respectfully,

SAMUEL ADAMS,
First Assistant Secretary.

In other words, it was an oversight that this statement was made in the first letter of the Secretary of the Interior, which is printed by the committee in its report.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman means that the department was very careless in making such a statement as that.

Mr. MORGAN. I call it an inadvertence, an oversight.

Mr. MANN. This bill proposes to make a sale of land now occupied for a school, which sale the superintendent of the school did not recommend, and then the bill provides that the proceeds of the sale shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the Indians. Objection has been made by some of the Indians to the sale of the lands. The committee in its report says that that objection is not valid, because the Indians have been paid for the land and have no interest in it. If that is so, why should the proceeds be turned into the Treasury for their benefit?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will say to the gentleman that it will be a gratuity.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, the Cheyenne and Arapaho Indians occupied something like 2,000,000 acres of land. The Government, in treating with the Indians, allotted 160 acres to each Indian. In that treaty the Indians ceded all their right, title, and interest to lands other than their allotments. Now, there were certain schools, with lands surrounding these schools, which were used for school and agency purposes by the Government. These lands, technically, were ceded to the United States; so that, legally speaking, these Indians have no right, title, or interest in those lands. Heretofore, in opening a small school reservation of this kind, Congress—very wisely, in my opinion—by the act of June 27, 1910, provided that the proceeds of the sale of these lands should be placed in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Cheyenne and Arapaho Indians. Now, it is thought that, as a matter of justice and right to these Indians, the proceeds from the sale of these little remnants of land reserved by the President for school purposes ought not to go to the people of the United States, but ought to be preserved for school purposes or some worthy purpose for the benefit of these Indians.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit me, I call his attention to the report of the committee in this case. Among other things, the report says:

To the letter of the Secretary of the Interior is also attached a letter, signed by the Indians, opposing the disposal of these lands, but the Indians have been misled relative to the land. This is shown in the closing sentence in the petition, which reads as follows: "We understand that when this reserved land is no longer needed for school and agency purposes, the land reverts to the Cheyenne and Arapaho Indians."

That is quoted from the petition of the Indians. Now, the committee goes on to say:

From this statement it appears that the Indians, as well as the superintendent of the school, believe that these lands belong to the Indians. Such, however, is not the case. This is shown by the letter of the Secretary of the Interior, which says "that the territory within which the Cantonment lands are included was ceded to the United States by act of March 3, 1891 (26 Stat. L., 989, 1022), and payment in full therefor was made to the Indians by the United States." In other words, the Indians have ceded all right, title, and interest in these lands. The land belongs entirely and exclusively to the United States and the Indians have no title or claim thereto.

Now, if it be the fact that the Indians have no title or claim to the lands, why should the proceeds go to the credit of the Indians? If it be a fact that the Indians have some legal or moral claim to the land, why should it be disposed of against their protest?

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, the committee in their statement had reference, of course, to the naked legal title, which does belong to the United States and not to the Indians. But these Cheyenne and Arapaho Indians are not very far advanced in civilization and education, and in making this treaty they did dispose of these lands. But it has been the practice in disposing of such lands instead of putting the funds derived from the sale of the lands into the National Treasury for the benefit of all the people of the United States to devote such funds to the education of the Indians. Now, the Indians evidently had a misconception when they stated in their petition that these lands when no longer needed for school purposes will revert to the Indians. Of course, that is not true.

Now, these lands are not needed there——

Mr. MANN. Is it not a fact that the department in making the report on the bill stated that if this money was to be considered as the money of the Indians it ought to be used for school purposes and not deposited in the Treasury as other funds arising from the public sale of lands?

Mr. MORGAN. I will yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] to answer that.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I am possessed of any excessive information in regard to this. I have looked it up somewhat, but I am confident from the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois that I know as much as he does about it, and possibly some things that he does not know.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman knows as much as I do about it, it is strange that he is for the bill. Let us see whether he does or not.

Mr. MILLER. Well, our judgment might lead us to different conclusions. The gentleman from Illinois asked if this land was not the property of the Indians, why we are selling it against their protest, and why there was any desire on the part of the committee that the proceeds should go to the Indian funds. The committee had a clear conception of this situation, and I think when the facts are explained to the gentleman from Illinois he will see the justice of it.

Mr. MANN. Why does not the gentleman state the facts and not give us so much hot air?

Mr. MILLER. I am so accustomed to listening to hot air from the gentleman from Illinois——

Mr. JACKSON rose.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I have not the floor.

Mr. MILLER. I have the floor, Mr. Speaker, at present, and I do not propose to be taken off my feet by anybody.

Mr. MANN. Any Member can take the gentleman off the floor if he sees fit.

Mr. MILLER. But you will cut your head off at the same time.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JACKSON. Is this bill to be objected to?

The SPEAKER. It is still being discussed under the reservation of a right to object.

Mr. JACKSON. I think we have discussed it sufficiently so that any gentleman can tell whether he wants to object or not, and I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is, Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. MORGAN. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. MANN. It is due to the gentleman from Kansas that objection is made.

Mr. MORGAN. I hope that the gentleman from Kansas will withdraw his demand.

Mr. JACKSON. I think with five distinguished gentlemen on the floor discussing this matter we are not getting very far.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kansas withdraw his demand?

Mr. JACKSON. I have nothing to withdraw. If the gentleman from Illinois wants to object it is entirely satisfactory to me.

Mr. MORGAN. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will withdraw his objection.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois withdraw his objection?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Kansas demanded the regular order, which was that we should fish or cut bait, and I did not cut bait. [Laughter.]

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 1, 1912.

The Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I hereby resign my position as a member of the conference committee on the river and harbor bill. My reason for this action is that I am obliged to leave Washington for an absence of at least one week, and in all probability for a longer time.

Very respectfully, yours,

GEO. P. LAWRENCE.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. DAVIDSON, of Wisconsin, as a conferee in place of Mr. LAWRENCE.

NAVAL HISTORY SOCIETY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 24026) to incorporate the Naval History Society.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Charles Francis Adams, of Massachusetts; James Barnes, of New York; Willard H. Brownson, of the District of Columbia; French E. Chadwick, of Rhode Island; William C. Church, of New York; George Dewey, of the District of Columbia; Henry A. du Pont, of Delaware; Loyall Farragut, of New York; Caspar F. Goodrich, of Connecticut; Charles T. Harbeck, of New York; Grenville Kane, of New York; Stephen B. Luce, of Rhode Island; John F. Meigs, of Pennsylvania; Robert W. Neeser, of New York; Herbert L. Satterlee, of New York; Charles H. Stockton, of the District of Columbia; Charles W. Stewart, of the District of Columbia; Robert M. Thompson, of New York; Richard Wainwright, of the District of Columbia; John W. Weeks, of Massachusetts, and their associates and successors, be, and they are hereby, incorporated and made a body politic and corporate in the District of Columbia, by the name of "The Naval History Society"; and by that name may sue or be sued, plead and be impleaded, in any court of law or equity, and may have and use a common seal, and change the same at pleasure, and be entitled to use and exercise all the powers, rights, and privileges incidental to fraternal and benevolent corporations within the District of Columbia.

SEC. 2. That the object of such corporation shall be to discover and procure data, manuscripts, writings, and whatever may relate to naval history, science, and art, and the surroundings and experience of seamen in general and of American seamen in particular, and to preserve same by publication or otherwise; and to acquire, establish, or maintain in the city of Washington or elsewhere, for the use of its members and others, a house or rooms having a library, reading room, and such other appurtenances and belongings as may be desired.

SEC. 3. That said corporation may adopt a constitution and by-laws, and shall have power to amend the same at pleasure: Provided, That they do not conflict with the Constitution and laws of the United States.

SEC. 4. That said corporation shall have the right to hold meetings at any place in the United States, but annual meetings for the election of officers shall be held in the city of Washington, where the principal office of said corporation shall be.

SEC. 5. That the said corporation shall have the power to take and hold, by gift, grant, purchase, or devise, real and personal property not exceeding in value $500,000, which shall not be divided among the members of the corporation, but shall be used and administered as a trust for the purposes of the corporation, and so far as unexpended transmitted to their successors for the further promotion of such purposes.

SEC. 6. That the government of such corporation shall be vested in a board of 11 managers, to be elected by the members of such corporation, and the corporation shall have such officers as its constitution and by-laws may prescribe. The incorporators herein named, or a majority of them, shall act as the board of managers until their successors in office are chosen at the first meeting of the society after the passage of this act.

SEC. 7. That this charter shall be subject to alteration, amendment, or repeal at the pleasure of the Congress of the United States.

SEC. 8. That this act shall take effect immediately on its passage.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is absolutely and clearly explained in the text and a further and more elaborate explanation is made in the report. In the language of the report:

The purpose of the Naval History Society that it is proposed to incorporate is purely patriotic and entirely national in its scope. The object is to discover and procure data, manuscripts, writings, and whatever there may be relating to naval history, science, and art, and the surroundings and experience of seamen in general, and of American seamen in particular, and to preserve the same by publication or otherwise. There is no thought of private gain, and the bill distinctly provides that the real and personal property received by the society, whether by gift, purchase, or otherwise, shall not be divided among the members of the corporation, but shall be used and administered as a trust for the purposes of the corporation, and so far as unexpended transmitted to their successors for the further promotion of such purposes.

Every patriotic citizen of this country is proud of the achievements of our Navy. There is nothing local or sectional in this pride, for the Navy is as much identified with one section of the country as another, and its achievements in the past are the common heritage of all the people. No State in the Union now has or ever has had a navy of its own. There is and has been but one Navy and that is the American Navy, the common property of all the States and all the people. The Navy is thus essentially national, and any legislation relating to it or affecting it must and should be of national origin.

Mr. Speaker, this bill was introduced by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BRANTLEY], and sent to the Committee on the Library. That committee had an elaborate hearing by distinguished gentlemen who are interested in the procuring of data referring to the history and operations of the American Navy, who want to see it properly edited and published.

It seems that up to this time there has been nothing but a voluntary association, limited in the theater of its operations, and not doing completely what these gentlemen who are interested in the preservation of the history of the American Navy thought should be done. They have an opportunity to secure bequests that will make them entirely solvent and enable them to gather data and secure its publication.

The committee was unanimous in its approval of the bill, and I can see no reason why it should not be passed. As to the objection that may be made by some gentlemen that they should have taken a charter from a State, I can only say that the Navy, by its very nature, does not belong to or appertain to any particular State. We do have volunteer organizations in the event of war from New York, Texas, and other States, but never is that the case in any important operations of the Navy. The Navy is purely national in its scope and nature, and therefore it was believed that there could be no reasonable objection to granting a national charter.

Mr. MANN. I notice that the report says:

> Every patriotic citizen of this country is proud of the achievements of our Navy. There is nothing local or sectional in this pride, for the Navy is as much identified with one section of the country as another, and its achievements in the past are the common heritage of all the people.

All of which is true and very well stated. Then, looking at the incorporators, who are 20 in number, we find 8 from New York, 5 from the District of Columbia, 2 from Rhode Island, 1 from Delaware, 1 from Connecticut, and 1 from Pennsylvania, which looks to me quite sectional; not only sectional, but almost centralized in one State. Nearly a majority of these incorporators reside in the city of New York. Now, here you propose to incorporate a national society to inculcate patriotism on the part of the Nation at large, composed of a few very eminent gentlemen located in small sections of the country, mostly in New York City and a few in the District of Columbia. It is no reflection upon New York City to say that there are other parts of the country. I know that it is seldom that persons that reside in New York, and sometimes in districts that are near New York, on the floor, know that there are other portions of the country. [Laughter.]

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, let me suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that the reason that the proposed incorporators are limited in geographical extent is that they happen to be the gentlemen who compose the voluntary association to carry out in part the purposes of the bill. They were the only ones sufficiently interested to appear before Congress and ask for the incorporation. There will undoubtedly be associate members attached to this body who will represent every great State, including the State of Illinois.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt that every State in the Union with an hour's notice, could get plenty of gentlemen who would like to be incorporated as a naval history society by the United States Congress.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Not 20 accomplished gentlemen, who are as much interested and who have accomplished as much as these gentlemen have.

Mr. MANN. I do not know how much they have accomplished, but the work for the Navy has not been altogether accomplished by these great States, much as they have done.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, I am not referring to military work, but purely historical work.

Mr. MANN. Perhaps they have done more historically than they have in real combat.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the membership of the Naval History Society will be expanded just as rapidly as gentlemen who take an interest in it apply for membership. It happens that these gentlemen had organized themselves and had been operating in a voluntary capacity. They now want the privilege of receiving certain bequests that are awaiting them. With that they propose to buy manuscripts and other papers and things of historic interest and value.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. JACKSON. Does not the gentleman think, in line with what has been suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and others, that if you are going to incorporate a body of this kind you ought to include in it some representative from the Great Lakes, from the Pacific coast, and, inasmuch as the river navigation of the country has had considerable naval history, that some one from the State of Louisiana or the State of Missouri ought to be included in this board which is to compose the charter members of this great society?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman perhaps knows as well as I do that measures of this kind do not originate with the Members of Congress. The old voluntary Naval History Society was operated at the personal expense of certain gentlemen in private life, who, by reason of former association with the Navy, being perhaps the sons of eminent commanders or related in some other way, had taken an interest in the matter and had undertaken all of the expenses pertaining to the gathering of such data as was necessary for their purposes. They are properly the charter members. I have no sort of doubt they will be glad to take into association with them any creditable, reputable citizen of any part of the country who has an interest in the matter and will help to pay the expenses of the society, but I do not feel authorized to add the name of any man to the list we have here.

Mr. JACKSON. Can not the gentleman tell us why they have not already done so?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I believe the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS], who is one of the incorporators, may be able to answer that question.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Speaker, I see no objection to adding any number of names to the incorporators who appear in this bill. If the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. JACKSON] or the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] would like to have their names added——

Mr. JACKSON. No; I thought that, inasmuch as these gentlemen seem to have the matter in hand, they certainly had been in conference or communication, perhaps, with certain citizens of different States who would be interested in the subject and they would know who ought to be suggested.

Mr. WEEKS. The gentleman from Kansas knows that somebody has to start associations of this sort; there is now a voluntary organization which is getting together matter which is being printed. The men who appear as the incorporators in this act are among those who have been furnishing the funds to do what has been done up to this time. Of course the membership in this society will be extended, and a general invitation will quite likely be extended to all those who are interested in work of this character to join the society. The idea of any local character being given it is entirely removed from the minds of those gentlemen who appear as incorporators. I would be glad to have the gentleman from Kansas or the gentleman from Illinois join as incorporators of the society.

Mr. GARNER. There is no object, I presume, of laying a foundation for future appropriations by the Government to sustain the library of the society or the society itself?

Mr. WEEKS. Absolutely nothing of the sort.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I would like to inquire whether or not this is not a rather close corporation which we are giving a national standing, and whether or not there ought not to be a little more liberality as to others getting into it; whether or not there ought not to be, for instance, a provision that the governor of each one of the States shall be an ex officio member, so that this little coterie of distinguished gentlemen could not select for all time who should be a member of the society.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, of course the objection which was made to the place of residence of the incorporators is more apparent in its force than real. This is simply a nucleus, in any event. These gentlemen are simply named, in the first place, to take the incorporation. They will probably enlarge, and may have 500 or 1,000 members.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. These particular gentlemen designated to take this corporation are the individuals who will exclusively determine who hereafter shall belong, are they not?

Mr. McCALL. Yes; but we know from the character of the men that they are broad minded. There is Charles Francis Adams, who is the president of the Massachusetts Historical Society, the oldest and one of the greatest historical societies, with a great membership, and undoubtedly it is the purpose of these gentlemen, if they shall associate themselves together and have an incorporation, to elect associate members, and as they are broad minded I have no doubt they will take their membership from all over the country.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I trust the gentleman will not assume that I am presuming that they are not broad-minded men. My only doubt was that when we incorporate a national society, we ought not to do it in the way that one may incorporate a little private company in a State.

Mr. McCALL. I fancy none of these gentlemen was present who desires to be named as an incorporator.

Mr. WEEKS. May I add this: Six of these incorporators are retired rear admirals. Half of them are graduates of the Naval Academy, and almost every one of them has been connected with the Navy in some way at some time. That is the reason they are directly interested in this association. It is simply carrying on in this form the work they have been doing in another form, and it is believed that as there is a gift which is likely to come to the society, and others which may come, there should be an incorporation.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I want to suggest to the gentleman from Colorado that it is not the purpose of these gentlemen to limit the membership to themselves.

Mr. WEEKS. Oh, not at all.

Mr. SLAYDEN. They hope to make a large organization.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Why should there not be an automatic membership of retired naval officers—that is, if they desire to join the society?

Mr. GARNER. But they might not want to put up the necessary money.

Mr. WEEKS. There will be an opportunity given to every reputable man who wishes to come into this association and who will pay the dues which will be imposed to do so.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I suppose the gentleman is authorized to speak for the others?

Mr. WEEKS. No; I am authorized to speak only for myself.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is it not a fact that in almost all of these bills that Congress passes incorporating some society or association that the original number of incorporators is comparatively few?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Necessarily limited——

Mr. LONGWORTH. Necessarily limited in the legislation.

Mr. SLAYDEN. And by all the circumstances.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And I venture to say few bills have been passed containing a list of more than 20 incorporators. Is not that the fact?

Mr. MANN. Most of them contain a great many more.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I have now pending a bill which contains a larger list of charter members, but that has been changed and modified from time to time, chiefly because of the death of some of the proposed incorporators.

Mr. LONGWORTH. At any rate there have been a number of such bills in which the number was very small?

Mr. SLAYDEN. It is necessarily limited, but not for the purpose of restricting membership, which they want to enlarge.

Mr. MANN. As I understand, the purpose of the naval-history society, if incorporated, is to study naval history and publish in regard to naval history; in other words, to largely control naval history, because we all know that history is not a record of things which actually took place, but is a record of what somebody says took place.

Mr. SLAYDEN. If the gentleman is going into the domain of criticism, that is another matter.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman, in view of some incidents of recent history about which there has been a great deal of controversy, whether the corporation the gentleman proposes now is to influence the future history of naval affairs of this country in favor of Schley or Sampson?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Well, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MANN. I believe that is one of the important things that this corporation will have to deal with, so as to determine what will be the thought 100 years from now—whether it shall be in favor of Schley or Sampson.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman had been with the committee when we had hearings he would have realized that a great majority of those gentlemen who appeared will not for any very long time take any particular interest in what happened at Santiago or elsewhere.

Mr. ADAMSON. If the gentleman will permit, I think the high authority to which the case was appealed decided that neither of them was in it; that it was a battle of captains.

Mr. MANN. I shall withdraw my reservation of the right to object because one name on the list of incorporators, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS], is sufficient leaven not only to leaven the entire lump but the whole barrel of flour. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object; now, there are four States represented by the proposed organization—Massachusetts, New York, Rhode Island, Delaware, and the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN. And Pennsylvania, five.

Mr. AUSTIN. California also. Not a Southern or Western State, nor a Middle State, nor a State up by the Lakes is represented. If this is to be really national and take in the naval history of the United States, why should not the gentleman agree to an amendment, to which the gentleman from Massachusetts, whose name is here as one of the incorporators, says there is no objection, and enlarge the number?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Does the gentleman want an answer to that?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; I want to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill if he will not consent to that?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I will say I do not think there is any man on this floor more jealous of the dignity and the rights and the part played in history by the South than I am, and I have constituents who, I think, may become members of this historical society. But I do not believe it would be agreeable to any one of them for me to undertake to compel their association with those gentlemen who have been in the naval history society.

I do not believe my constituents would like that, and I think on reflection the gentleman will reach the conclusion that the constituents whom he may have in mind would not like it. I have not the slightest doubt that nearly every reputable citizen who has enough interest in this matter to apply for membership and to pay such dues as may be assessed will be made members of this Naval Historical Society.

Mr. AUSTIN. I understood the gentleman from Massachusetts to state some were there without their knowledge or consent——

Mr. SLAYDEN. I do not think the gentleman stated that, because if he did he is mistaken.

Mr. WEEKS. I did not state that.

Mr. AUSTIN. Have all of these gentlemen been connected with this movement in regard to this organization?

Mr. SLAYDEN. That is my information, and they have been putting up the funds for it.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will allow me a suggestion, the incorporation of this society will not give any official status to any statement that may be made by this association.

Mr. SLAYDEN. None whatever.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. It would be just as acceptable from a historical standpoint if it was made by this association unincorporated as if it was incorporated.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes; and that is not the purpose of it. I will say to the gentleman——

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will permit, I simply wanted to bring out this thought, that the whole purpose of incorporating this society would be to facilitate the management of its affairs and——

Mr. SLAYDEN. To receive bequests and to have means to do its work. A bequest of importance is now waiting on the granting of this charter.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. It is desired as part of the business handling of its affairs.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. If the gentleman from Texas will permit, I simply want to add to what the gentleman from Texas has said, that this national incorporation would be an advantage to the society by receiving the benefit of bequests; that I happen to know of a very important historical literary bequest that will be made to the national association, the owner of which would not make it to a State association.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Or a private association.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It is one of the best naval historical collections.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I am sure we have had all the information the House wants in regard to this matter, and I would like to have the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, accepting the assurance of the gentleman in charge of this bill that the other sections of this country shall be recognized in this organization, I withdraw the objection.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I take great pleasure in saying that so far as my influence goes I will use it to have the gentleman himself elected.

Mr. AUSTIN. Oh, no; I do not wish to be elected, but I did not want the entire South and West of this country ignored in the organization.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SLAYDEN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution of the following title:

CUSTOMS DISTRICT OF PHILADELPHIA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 4011) amending sections 2541 and 2543 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, defining the boundaries of the customs collection districts of Philadelphia, Pa., and Bridgeton, N. J., and establishing ports of entry and subports of entry therein.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MARTIN of Colorado). Is there objection?

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, this bill is on the Union Calendar, and I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unanimous consent for consideration of the bill has not yet been obtained.

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask the gentleman to reserve his objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. DALZELL. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] has not objected. He has reserved his objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GARDNER] objected.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I asked the gentleman from New Jersey to reserve his objection. I would like to know if he yields to that request?

Mr. DALZELL. Does the gentleman from New Jersey object?

Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman still objects, and the bill will be stricken from the calendar.

SUBJECTION OF LANDS OF FORT NIOBRARA MILITARY RESERVATION TO HOMESTEAD ENTRY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 22090) to subject the lands in the former Fort Niobrara Military Reservation and other lands in Nebraska to homestead entry.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the unreserved lands within the former Fort Niobrara Military Reservation, in the State of Nebraska, together with the south half of the north half and south half of section 4; the south half of the north half and the south half of section 5; the south half of the northeast quarter, northwest quarter of the northeast quarter, northwest quarter and the south half of section 6; all of sections 7, 8, and 9; south half of section 10; all of sections 15, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, and 22; north half of section 27; southwest quarter and the north half of section 28; all of sections 29 and 30, all in township 33 north, range 25 west; all of sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 17, and 20 to 29, inclusive, all in township 33 north, range 26 west; the southeast quarter of section 26; south half of the northeast quarter and the south half of section 33 and the south half of the northwest quarter, northeast quarter, and south half of section 34; all of section 35, all in township 34 north, range 26 west, sixth principal meridian, except as hereinafter expressly provided, shall be subject to entry at such time, in such manner, and under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, as follows: All that portion of said lands lying north and west of the Niobrara River, together with that part of the southeast quarter of section 22, the southwest quarter of section 23, the west half of section 26, and all of section 27, in township 34 north, range 27 west, lying south and east of the said Niobrara River, except such part of the lands south and east of the said river as the Secretary of the Interior may reserve from entry as provided by section 8 hereof, shall be entered and patented under the general provisions of the homestead laws; and all the remaining portion of said lands lying south and east of said Niobrara River shall be entered and patented under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to amend the homestead laws as to certain unappropriated and unreserved lands in Nebraska," approved April 28, 1904, but entries made under this act shall not be subject to commutation.

SEC. 2. That lots 1 and 2 and the west half of the southeast quarter and the west half of section 33 and all of section 32, in township 34 north, range 27 west, sixth principal meridian, within said reservation, be, and the same are hereby, granted to the State of Nebraska for use by said State as an agricultural experimental station.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior, upon the payment of $1.25 per acre therefor, shall cause patent to issue to the village of Valentine, in the State of Nebraska, to the east half of section 19; the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 20; the east half and the southwest quarter of section 29; the northwest quarter and the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 30; the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of said section 30, except that parcel of land in the southwest corner of said northwest quarter of the southwest quarter described as follows: Commencing at the southwest corner of the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 30, running thence north 435.6 feet; thence east 500 feet; thence south 435.6 feet; thence west 500 feet to the place of beginning, all of said lands being in township 34 north, range 27 west, sixth principal meridian.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Interior, upon the payment of $1.25 per acre therefor, shall cause patent to issue to W. F. Gilman to the parcel of land within said reservation, described as follows: Commencing at the southwest corner of the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 30, township 34 north, range 27, running thence north 435.6 feet; thence east 500 feet; thence south 435.6 feet; thence west 500 feet to the place of beginning.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Interior, upon the payment of $1.25 per acre therefor, shall cause a patent to issue to Charles H. Cornell for lot 4 in section 22 and lot 1 in section 27, in township 34 north, range 27 west, within said reservation.

SEC. 6. That the Secretary of the Interior shall cause patent to issue to the State of Nebraska for section 9 in exchange for section 36 in township 34 north, range 27, title thereto to be conveyed by Nebraska to the United States, upon the ratification by the State of Nebraska by an act of the legislature to be passed at the next regular session and the consent of W. F. A. Meltendorff, lessee, of said school section 36.

SEC. 7. That said former military reservation lands be, and the same are hereby, exempted from the statutes requiring payment to be made of the appraised value thereof.

SEC. 8. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to reserve from entry under this act a tract of land not exceeding 640 acres in area, upon which the buildings used in connection with said military reservation are located, and to sell the lands so reserved and the buildings thereon at public auction at not less than their appraised value, after one year from the date of the approval of this act if the Government shall not have appropriated the same to some public purpose.

SEC. 9. That the disposition of said military reservation lands shall be subject to the rights acquired by Charles H. Cornell, by acts of Congress approved June 18, 1906, and February 18, 1911.

SEC. 10. That the costs of carrying out the provisions of this act shall be paid from the appropriation for the expenses of the survey, appraisal, and sale of abandoned military reservations.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to subject the lands in the former Fort Niobrara Military Reservation in Nebraska to homestead entry."

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill or the gentleman from Nebraska, who introduced it, if this does not give to one Charles H. Cornell a water-power site for a mill at $1.25 an acre against the express statement of the Secretary of the Interior that water-power sites should be reserved?

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, answering the question of the gentleman from the State of Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], I am pleased to assure him that the Secretary of the Interior has given his express sanction to the sale of these lands to Charles H. Cornell. I will say further that Charles H. Cornell owns the water-power site, having acquired it under the laws of the State of Nebraska, and owns the land on one side of the river, and he has the material on the ground ready to construct a dam, and he simply wants to abut on the other side of the river. He already has the right to abut on this side of the river, which is Government land, by virtue of an act passed by Congress a session or two back; and the Secretary of the Interior recommends reserving the water-power sites, except such as are provided for in the bill, excluding those and agreeing to this.

Mr. FOSTER. Then there is another water-power site provided for in section 4, is there not?

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. That is a mill site.

Mr. MONDELL. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that a right is reserved to the person named to buy 5 acres of land.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. There is a large flouring mill, which has been in operation for several years—I have forgotten how long—and the mill owner, by a mistake made by a surveyor, abutted his dam against the military reservation land, and it is considered proper to sell to him 5 acres on that side of the little stream that his dam crosses.

Mr. FOSTER. But it does not provide for selling this and giving the present occupant the right to purchase at a fair price, does it?

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. The affidavits here show that the land is really worthless. The affidavits show that this land consists of precipices, except where there is room for sand hills. I will read you briefly one affidavit, signed by four affiants who were examined together. They are leading citizens, all of them, and I know them personally right well. They are gentlemen of high standing. They state that the affiants have examined personally these lands described in the bill, and that they are covered with rocky canyons and precipices; that is, these lands that the city wants to buy and the mill owner wants to buy also, and it includes the 5 acres for the mill dam to abut. Affiants state the land is covered with rocky canyons and precipice after precipice, with no grazing ground of any value existing thereon. And further, at the conclusion of the affidavit, it is stated that the land is absolutely worthless for farming purposes; that no crop could ever grow on such land; that it has no hay growing on it, and no amount of grass sufficient for stock grazing.

Mr. FOSTER. In section 2 it is proposed to give to the State of Nebraska some of this land as a site for an agricultural experiment station, so that by the time we get through with this, the Government will be expected to make up the difference of these lands.

I observe also in section 7 that the gentleman proposes that this land which is to be opened for settlement shall be exempted from the statute requiring payment to be made of the appraised value thereof. So that it seems to me that the gentleman has in this bill evidently taken good care of the State of Nebraska, on which I compliment him as a wise and careful Representative. But it seems to me that the National Government in all this is to get the little end of the horn, as it is called, and that there will be nothing left by the time that the State of Nebraska and other parties take the water-power sites, and the part that goes to the State of Nebraska, and so on. So, Mr. Speaker, I think that this bill ought to go back to the Committee on Public Lands and be reconstructed.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Just a moment. I guess the gentleman is not going to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois reserve the right to object?

Mr. FOSTER. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] for all the compliments he has expressed, which are undeserved. The provisions of this bill taking care of the State of Nebraska and exempting specifically the lands from sale at the appraised value are well fortified by precedent. Where lands of an abandoned military reservation are of a very poor quality and are such that ordinarily homesteaders will not enter them and you have got, instead of leaving them subject to entry in quarter-section amounts, to increase them fourfold and make them one section, it is evident that the lands should not be disposed of as existing law provides.

And it has been the practice to exempt from appraised value lands of a very poor quality, and that has been done in two or three instances in the district which I have the honor to represent, namely, as to Fort McPherson and also as to Camp Sheridan. Homesteaders did not succeed in perfecting their entries, broke down, were unable to pay the appraised value, and they relinquished and kept on relinquishing. A successor would come in and make an entry and then relinquish again, so that finally an act was passed exempting these lands from payment of the appraised value.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Under the existing law can not this land be disposed of by sale as an abandoned military reservation?

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. There are some other lands which are not on the military reservation. The lands on the military reservation are less than a township in extent, and those lands can be sold under what I would now call an obsolete statute.

Mr. MANN. The statute is not obsolete, although the practice of really selling any Government land may be obsolete as long as gentlemen are so insistent that the land shall be given away to their constituents. But is not this the fact, that under the existing law this land can be sold to people who are willing to buy it? Under this bill the land will be given away and people will not have to pay for it. Is not that the distinction between the bill and the law?

Mr. FOSTER. That is the effect of this bill.

Mr. GARNER. It is evident that the gentleman from Nebraska realizes——

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman from Texas allow the gentleman from Nebraska to finish his explanation?

Mr. GARNER. I might allow the gentleman to stand here and talk for two hours, or he may extend his remarks in the RECORD, but the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] has given notice that he is going to object.

Mr. KINKAID of Nebraska. I do not think the gentleman is serious in that.

Mr. GARNER. May I ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] if he is going to object?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] objects. The bill goes off the calendar.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. 25069) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report (No. 826), ordered to be printed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] reserves points of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to give notice that I will call the bill up for consideration to-morrow morning.

Mr. MANN. At what time to-morrow?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. MANN. We may have some unfinished business to-morrow, perhaps.

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS ON HYGIENE AND DEMOGRAPHY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was Senate joint resolution 97, authorizing the Fifteenth International Congress on Hygiene and Demography to occupy temporary structures erected by the American Red Cross and to erect temporary structures in Potomac Park, Washington, D. C.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the American Red Cross is hereby given permission to allow the temporary structure erected by it in Potomac Park, under the provisions of the joint resolution approved May 11, 1911, to remain in position for a sufficient length of time to be used for exhibition purposes by the Fifteenth International Congress on Hygiene and Demography at its meeting in 1912, and that authority is hereby given to the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, to grant permission to the responsible officers of the Fifteenth International Congress on Hygiene and Demography to erect on the public grounds, on a site to be approved by the Chief of Engineers, such additional temporary structures as may be necessary for exhibition purposes: Provided, That the United States shall be put to no extra expense of any kind thereby, and that all the structures shall be promptly removed by the Fifteenth International Congress on Hygiene and Demography at the close of the meeting and the site cleared of all débris and put in as good condition as before the erection of the structures.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I wish to call the attention of gentlemen to the situation created by this bill.

By resolution of Congress the Red Cross Society was authorized to erect some temporary structures on one of the public reservations in the District of Columbia upon condition that they should be removed and the grounds restored to their original condition without expense to the United States.

This resolution apparently relieves the Red Cross Society from that obligation and devolves it upon the Congress on Hygiene and Demography. They have estimated that $12,000 will be required to do that work. They expect to raise $40,000 by subscription, and they hope to get Congress to give them $51,000, in addition to the $60,000 that they have already had, to make this congress a success. In the present shape of this resolution Congress will practically be paying for the removal of these structures and the restoring of the grounds to their original condition.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I hardly think this resolution if passed would relieve the Red Cross from anything. It would impose the obligation additionally upon the Congress on Hygiene and Demography.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not so sure that it does not relieve the Red Cross.

Mr. MANN. I think not. They have given bond, as I understand it, to remove these buildings.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What would be the effect of this resolution, which turns these buildings over to this Congress and provides that they shall be removed at the expense of this Congress? As nearly as I can ascertain from the investigation I have given——

Mr. MANN. Here is a law permitting the Red Cross to erect buildings and requiring the Red Cross to remove those buildings, under bond, as I recall it. That removal is to be at the close of the Red Cross meeting here.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No.

Mr. MANN. Yes. Now, here is a permission proposed to be given to the Red Cross to permit the Congress on Hygiene and Demography to use these buildings instead of removing them at the time originally contemplated. As a part of the provision the Congress on Hygiene and Demography is required to remove the buildings. But the Red Cross is obligated under the original provision to see that those buildings are removed and the grounds replaced in good order in any event. I do not think they are relieved by this.

Mr. AUSTIN. There is a provision here——

Mr. MANN. Now, here is the situation in regard to it. We have unfortunately gotten in the habit of giving easy invitations to people to come to Washington and meet. One of these invitations was given for this Congress on Hygiene and Demography, originally provided for the year 1908, I believe. It was extended afterwards by permission of Congress. There is absolutely no place in Washington for such a congress to meet. No such congress ought ever to be invited by this Congress to meet in Washington. They ought to meet in some other American city, where they have facilities for taking care of such a congress. This is an international congress. It probably will be as large as the tuberculosis congress was several years ago, with four or five thousand members.

When the tuberculosis congress met there was great demand for the use of this Capitol and the House Office Building.

The House very generously shifted the burden of objecting to that on my shoulders. Fortunately my shoulders were able to stand up under it. We happen to have a National Museum Building, and we gave $40,000 for the purpose of putting it in shape for that tuberculosis congress. Of course, if we do not allow these buildings of the Red Cross to be used in the end we will build some buildings for them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, there are some other features in regard to this Congress on Hygiene and Demography that make me somewhat suspicious of their intention and ability to remove these buildings. As the gentleman said, this Congress was authorized to be held in 1908 or 1909. Congress appropriated $10,000 to pay the preliminary expenses of it. Then it was postponed, and Congress appropriated $10,000 additional to pay for the preliminary expenses, and in the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill that passed this year there was $40,000 additional placed at the disposal of the State Department to pay expenses in connection with this congress. An estimate of $51,000 was submitted for some other purposes connected with the congress.

I was curious as to what had been done with the $20,000 appropriated for the preliminary expenses. I ascertained that a secretary had been appointed at a salary of $5,000 a year, and had drawn three years' salary, amounting to $15,000, out of the $20,000, and had made one trip, at least, to Europe, at the expense of the Government out of the $20,000; so that more than $15,000, as I recollect, of the $20,000 appropriated for the preliminary expenses of preparing for this congress has been turned over to one gentleman, who has been at various times secretary to one kind of congress or another. I think he was secretary to the tuberculosis congress. I am not sure whether he calls himself a hygienist or a demographist, but one or the other.

Mr. MANN. Is it Dr. Fulton?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think it is Dr. Fulton who is the secretary of this outfit. He has drawn about $16,000 out of the $20,000 appropriated for the preliminary expenses—$15,000 in salary and the balance in expenses. Congress never dreamed that it was creating anything so "soft" when it appropriated this money for these so-called preliminary expenses. I do not care whether it is Dr. Fulton or Dr. anybody else; whoever is responsible for that situation has been guilty, in my opinion, of gross impropriety in the administration of public funds.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I have met Dr. Fulton several times. I think he is secretary of this association. I know I met him in connection with the tuberculosis congress, and in connection with the extension of the meeting of this congress for hygiene and demography. In fact, I got myself considerably disliked one time by Dr. Fulton and some other members of the tuberculosis congress because I would not consent to their using the House Office Building or the Capitol Building for a meeting. But, after all, Dr. Fulton is a very competent man.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I should hope so.

Mr. MANN. Five thousand dollars a year is not an exorbitant salary for a competent man. This work requires his entire time. Dr. Fulton is organizing this congress, an international congress of hygiene and demography, one of the most important subjects which concerns the human race to-day. It concerns matters that receive the greatest attention and the ones that receive the most consideration to-day, and the organization of this congress is no slight matter. The tuberculosis congress that was held here, which gentlemen who attended it will realize, was an enormous affair and productive of immense good. For the first time in many years we are beginning to see the tide of tuberculosis on the ebb. The movement is going the other way; we are overcoming the growth and increase of tuberculosis. The congress of hygiene and demography is along the same lines, and to organize it requires great attention.

Now, the gentleman says that the secretary received this fund. The fund donated by the Government is not the only fund that is used; there has been a considerable sum of money raised by private means and by societies.

Mr. FITZGERALD. For this particular congress it is hoped to obtain $40,000 by private subscription. We have already appropriated $60,000.

Mr. MANN. It is hoped to obtain $40,000 by private subscription, but the gentleman will remember that a large sum of money is raised for its use by different societies throughout the country which is not expended here, but through the organization a much larger sum than $40,000 is raised. Now, I have no doubt it is true—because the gentleman from New York would not make the statement unless he knew it to be true—that the secretary has received the appropriation which the Government made, but other moneys have been paid out of private funds.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that one reason that this secretary's salary has been so great is that the appropriation of $10,000 was made with the expectation that the next congress would assemble in 1908, but instead of that it was postponed; and at the next session we appropriated another $10,000 for preliminary work, and it was the distinct understanding, my recollection is, that the total limit should be $40,000, and the House Committee on Foreign Affairs carried that limit out, but an additional amount was placed on it in the Senate, and the House agreed to the conference report, which carried a larger amount than the original understanding.

Mr. FITZGERALD. My recollection is that the diplomatic bill this year carried altogether about $40,000 for this purpose.

Mr. MANN. It carried $10,000 in the House, and was increased to forty or fifty thousand dollars in the Senate, and, I suppose, compromised in conference. I was not here when the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That makes $50,000, and the request is now made for $5,000 additional. My understanding of the original appropriation for preliminary expenses was not to employ a high-priced secretary, but to pay for clerical assistance required in the Department of State in sending out invitations, which are sent out pursuant to the proclamation issued by the President.

Mr. MANN. But this is a matter of great organization.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, I understand. I have learned a great deal about it since I have undertaken this investigation, and I am quite sure that nobody ever anticipated that out of the $20,000 appropriated for preliminary expenses some one was to be paid $15,000 in salary.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia demands the regular order. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Illinois whether in his opinion this resolution makes obligatory on this Congress alone the removal of these buildings?

Mr. MANN. I was going to suggest to the gentleman from New York that if there be any question about that, why we should not provide that these buildings shall be removed by the American Red Cross instead of by this society, keeping the present obligation in force?

Mr. BARNHART. That is all right.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This resolution is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the resolution has been read, and I move to amend, on page 2, lines 8 and 9, by striking out the words "Fifteenth International Congress of Hygiene and Demography" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "American Red Cross."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, lines 8 and 9, strike out the words "Fifteenth International Congress of Hygiene and Demography" and insert in lieu thereof the words "American Red Cross."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate joint resolution as amended.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. AUSTIN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

RADIO COMMUNICATION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill H. R. 15357, to regulate radio communication.

The Clerk proceeded to report the bill.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill S. 6412, to regulate radio communication, may be substituted for the House bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that a Senate bill of like tenor be substituted for the House bill. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will ask the gentleman from Missouri where the Senate bill is?

Mr. ALEXANDER. It is on the table.

Mr. MANN. Has it been referred to a committee?

Mr. ALEXANDER. It has; and it has been reported back. It is in substance the same bill.

Mr. MANN. It is House Calendar 243.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I will state for the benefit of the House that Senate bill 6412 is the same as H. R. 15357, with the exception of three or four minor amendments. For that reason I ask unanimous consent that it be substituted for the House bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the House bill is on the House Calendar. Has it been transferred from the Union Calendar? It is printed as being on the Union Calendar No. 193. It seems to be on the House Calendar with the same number, 193. It would be very odd that it would have the same number, having been transferred from one calendar to the other.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk at the desk informs the Chair that the bill was transferred from the Union to the House Calendar.

Mr. MANN. It is No. 193 on the House Calendar and the same number on the Union Calendar.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object to the request of the gentleman from Missouri—I do not happen to have a copy of the Senate bill here, but have a copy of the House bill. I could not hear what the gentleman said a moment ago concerning the difference between the Senate bill and the House bill.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, as the Clerk reads, the gentleman will find that there is no material difference between the two bills.

Mr. BUTLER. But I do not happen to have a Senate bill here.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Has the gentleman a copy of the House bill?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Very well; he can follow the reading with the House bill and he will see that it is to all intents and purposes the same as the House bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri that the Senate bill of like tenor, 6142, be substituted for the House bill?

Mr. MANN. That does not affect the right of objection?

The SPEAKER. No; that will not interfere with the right of objection to the Senate bill. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 6412) to regulate radio communication.

Be it enacted, etc., That a person, company, or corporation within the jurisdiction of the United States shall not use or operate any apparatus for radio communication as a means of commercial intercourse among the several States, or with foreign nations, or upon any vessel of the United States engaged in interstate or foreign commerce, or for the receipt or transmission of radiograms or signals the effect of which extends beyond the exclusive jurisdiction of the State or Territory in which the same are made, or where interference would be caused thereby with the receipt of messages or signals from beyond the jurisdiction of the said State or Territory, except under and in accordance with a license, revocable for cause, in that behalf granted by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor upon application therefor; but nothing in this act shall be construed to apply to the transmission and exchange of radiograms or signals between points situated in the same State: Provided, That the effect thereof shall not extend beyond the jurisdiction of the said State or interfere with the reception of radiograms or signals from beyond said jurisdiction; and a license shall not be required for the transmission or exchange of radiograms or signals by or on behalf of the Government of the United States, but every Government station on land or sea shall have special call letters designated and published in the list of radio stations of the United States by the Department of Commerce and Labor. Any person, company, or corporation that shall use or operate any apparatus for radio communication in violation of this section, or knowingly aid or abet another person, company, or corporation in so doing, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $500, and the apparatus or device so unlawfully used and operated may be adjudged forfeited to the United States.

SEC. 2. That every such license shall be in such form as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor shall determine and shall contain the restrictions, pursuant to this act, on and subject to which the license is granted; that every such license shall be issued only to citizens of the United States or to a company incorporated under the laws of some State of the United States and shall specify the ownership and location of the station in which said apparatus shall be used and other particulars for its identification and to enable its range to be estimated; shall state the purpose of the station and in case of a station in actual operation at the date of passage of this act shall contain the statement that satisfactory proof has been furnished that it was actually operating on the above-mentioned date; shall state the wave length or the wave lengths authorized for use by the station for the prevention of interference and the hours for which the station is licensed for work; and shall not be construed to authorize the use of any apparatus for radio communication in any other station than that specified. Every such license shall be subject to the regulations contained herein and such regulations as may be established from time to time by authority of this act or subsequent acts and treaties of the United States. Every such license shall provide that the President of the United States in time of war or public peril may cause the closing of any station for radio communication and the removal therefrom of all radio apparatus, or may authorize the use or control of any such station or apparatus by any department of the Government, upon just compensation to the owners.

SEC. 3. That every such apparatus shall at all times while in use and operation as aforesaid be in charge or under the supervision of a person or persons licensed for that purpose by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. Every person so licensed for the operation of any radio apparatus on shore shall be a citizen of the United States. Every person so licensed who in the operation of any radio apparatus shall fail to observe and obey regulations contained in or made pursuant to this act or subsequent acts or treaties of the United States, or any one of them, in addition to the punishments and penalties herein prescribed, upon convicion shall suffer the suspension of the said license, and the same shall not be renewed for a period of one year from and after the date of his conviction of any such failure. It shall be unlawful to employ any unlicensed person or for any unlicensed person to serve in charge of the use and operation of such apparatus, and any person violating this provision shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not more than $100 or imprisonment for not more than two months, or both, in the discretion of the court, for each and every such offense: Provided, That in case of emergency the Secretary of Commerce and Labor may authorize a collector of customs to issue a temporary permit in lieu of a license to the operator on a vessel subject to the radio ship act of June 24, 1910.

SEC. 4. That for the purpose of preventing or minimizing interference with communication between stations in which such apparatus is operated, to facilitate radio communication, and to further the prompt receipt of distress signals, said private and commercial stations shall be subject to the regulations of this section. These regulations shall be enforced by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor through the collectors of customs and other officers of the Government as other regulations herein provided for.

The Secretary of Commerce and Labor may, in his discretion, waive the provisions of any or all of these regulations when no interference of the character above mentioned can ensue.

The Secretary of Commerce and Labor may grant special temporary licenses to stations actually engaged in conducting experiments for the development of the science of radio communication, or the apparatus pertaining thereto, to carry on special tests, using any amount of power or any wave lengths, at such hours and under such conditions as will insure the least interference with the sending or receipt of commercial or Government radiograms, of distress signals and radiograms, or with the work of other stations.

In these regulations the naval and military stations shall be understood to be stations on land.

REGULATIONS.

NORMAL WAVE LENGTH.

First. Every station shall be required to designate a certain definite wave length as the normal sending and receiving wave length of the station. This wave length shall not exceed 600 meters or it shall exceed 1,600 meters. Every coastal station open to general public service shall at all times be ready to receive messages of such wave lengths as are required by the Berlin convention.

OTHER WAVE LENGTHS.

Second. In addition to the normal sending wave length all stations, except as provided hereinafter in these regulations, may use other sending wave lengths: Provided, That they do not exceed 600 meters or that they do exceed 1,600 meters: Provided further, That the character of the waves emitted conforms to the requirements of regulations third and fourth following.

USE OF A "PURE WAVE."

Third. At all stations if the sending apparatus, to be referred to hereinafter as the "transmitter," is of such a character that the energy is radiated in two or more wave lengths, more or less sharply defined, as indicated by a sensitive wave meter, the energy in no one of the lesser waves shall exceed 10 per cent of that in the greatest.

USE OF A "SHARP WAVE."

Fourth. At all stations the logarithmic decrement per complete oscillation in the wave trains emitted by the transmitter shall not exceed two-tenths, except when sending distress signals or signals and messages relating thereto.

USE OF "STANDARD DISTRESS WAVE."

Fifth. For the purpose of sending signals of distress every station on shipboard shall be so adjusted, except on vessels of small tonnage unable to have plants insuring that wave length, as to permit these signals to be sent with a wave length of approximately 300 meters.

SIGNAL OF DISTRESS.

Sixth. The distress call used shall be the international signal of distress . . . — — — . . .

USE OF "BROAD INTERFERING WAVE" FOR DISTRESS SIGNALS.

Seventh. When sending distress signals the transmitter of a station on shipboard may be tuned in such a manner as to create a maximum of interference with a maximum of radiation.

DISTANCE REQUIREMENT FOR DISTRESS SIGNALS.

Eighth. Every station on shipboard, wherever practicable, shall be prepared to send distress signals of the character specified in regulations 5 and 6 with sufficient power to enable them to be received by day over sea a distance of 100 nautical miles by a shipboard station equipped with apparatus for both sending and receiving equal in all essential particulars to that of the station first mentioned.

"RIGHT OF WAY" FOR DISTRESS SIGNALS.

Ninth. All stations are required to give absolute priority to signals and radiograms relating to ships in distress; to cease all sending on hearing a distress signal; and, except when engaged in answering or aiding the ship in distress, to refrain from sending until all signals and radiograms relating thereto are completed.

REDUCED POWER FOR SHIPS NEAR A GOVERNMENT STATION.

Tenth. No station on shipboard, when within 15 nautical miles of a naval or military station, shall use a transformer input exceeding 1 kilowatt, nor, when within 5 nautical miles of such a station, a transformer input exceeding one-half kilowatt, except for sending signals of distress or signals or radiograms relating thereto.

INTERCOMMUNICATION.

Eleventh. Each shore station open to general public service between the coast and vessels at sea shall be bound to exchange radiograms with any similar shore station and with any ship station without distinction of the radio systems adopted by such stations, respectively, and each station on shipboard shall be bound to exchange radiograms with any other station on shipboard without distinction of the radio systems adopted by each station, respectively.

DIVISION OF TIME.

Twelfth. At important seaports and at all other places where naval or military and private or commercial shore stations operate in such close proximity that interference with the work of naval and military stations can not be avoided by the enforcement of the regulations contained in the foregoing regulations concerning wave lengths and character of signals emitted, such private or commercial shore stations as do interfere with the reception of signals by the naval and military stations concerned shall not use their transmitters during the first 15 minutes of each hour, local standard time. The Secretary of Commerce and Labor may, on the recommendation of the department concerned, designate the station or stations which may be required to observe this division of time.

GOVERNMENT STATIONS TO OBSERVE DIVISIONS OF TIME.

Thirteenth. The naval or military stations for which the above-mentioned division of time may be established shall transmit signals or radiograms only during the first 15 minutes of each hour, local standard time, except in case of signals or radiograms relating to vessels in distress, as hereinbefore provided.

USE OF UNNECESSARY POWER.

Fourteenth. In all circumstances, except in case of signals or radiograms relating to vessels in distress, all stations shall use the minimum amount of energy necessary to carry out any communication desired.

GENERAL RESTRICTIONS ON PRIVATE STATIONS.

Fifteenth. No private or commercial station not engaged in the transaction of bona fide commercial business by radio communication or in experimentation in connection with the development and manufacture of radio apparatus for commercial purposes at the date of passage of this act, shall use a transmitting wave length exceeding 200 meters, or a transformer input exceeding 1 kilowatt, except by special authority of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor contained in the license of the station.

SPECIAL RESTRICTIONS IN THE VICINITIES OF GOVERNMENT STATIONS.

Sixteenth. No station of the character mentioned in regulation 15 situated within 5 nautical miles of a naval or military station shall use a transmitting wave length exceeding 200 meters or a transformer input exceeding one-half kilowatt.

SHIP STATIONS TO COMMUNICATE WITH NEAREST SHORE STATION.

Seventeenth. In general, the shipboard stations shall transmit their radiograms to the nearest shore station. A sender on board a vessel shall, however, have the right to designate the shore station through which he desires to have his radiograms transmitted. The station on shipboard shall then wait until such shore station shall be the nearest. If this can not be done, the wishes of the sender are to be complied with only if the transmission can be effected without interfering with the service of other stations.

LIMITATIONS FOR FUTURE INSTALLATIONS IN VICINITIES OF GOVERNMENT STATIONS.

Eighteenth. No station on shore not in actual operation at the date of the passage of this act shall be licensed for the transaction of commercial business by radio communication within 15 nautical miles of the following naval or military stations, to wit: Arlington, Va.; Key West, Fla.; San Juan, P. R.; North Head and Tatoosh Island, Wash.; San Diego, Cal.; and those established or which may be established in Alaska and in the Canal Zone; and the head of the department having control of such Government stations shall, so far as is consistent with the transaction of governmental business, arrange for the transmission and receipt of commercial radiograms under the provisions of the Berlin convention of 1906 and future international conventions or treaties to which the United States may be a party, at each of the stations above referred to, and shall fix the rates therefor, subject to the control of such rates by Congress. At such stations and wherever and whenever shore stations open for general public business between the coast and vessels at sea under the provisions of the Berlin convention of 1906 and future international conventions and treaties to which the United States may be a party, shall not be so established as to insure a constant service, day and night, without interruption, and in all localities wherever or whenever such service shall not be maintained by a commercial shore station within 100 nautical miles of a naval radio station the Secretary of the Navy shall, so far as is consistent with the transaction of governmental business, open naval radio stations to the general public business described above, and shall fix rates for such service, subject to control of such rates by Congress. The receipts from such radiograms shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

SECRECY OF MESSAGES.

Nineteenth. Every operator shall be obligated in his license to preserve, and shall preserve faithfully, the secrecy of radiograms which he may receive or transmit; and for failure to preserve such secrecy his license may be revoked by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

PENALTIES.

For violation of any of these regulations, subject to which a license under sections 1 and 2 of this act may be issued, the owner of the apparatus shall be liable to a penalty of $100, which may be reduced or remitted by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and for repeated violations of any of such regulations, which shall be deemed a misdemeanor, the license may be revoked.

For violation of any of these regulations, subject to which a license under section 3 of this act may be issued, the operator shall be subject to a penalty of $25, which may be reduced or remitted by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, and for repeated violations of any such regulations, which shall be deemed a misdemeanor, the license may be suspended.

SEC. 5. That every license granted under the provisions of this act for the operation or use of apparatus for radio communication shall prescribe that the operator thereof shall not willfully or maliciously interfere with any other radio communication. Such interference shall be deemed a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof the owner or operator, or both, shall be punishable by a fine of not to exceed $500 or imprisonment for not to exceed one year, or both.

SEC. 6. That the expression "radio communication" as used in this act means any system of electrical communication by telegraphy or telephony without the aid of any wire connecting the points from and at which the radiograms, signals, or other communications are sent or received.

SEC. 7. That a person, company, or corporation within the jurisdiction of the United States shall not knowingly utter or transmit, or cause to be uttered or transmitted, any false or fraudulent distress signal or call or false or fraudulent signal, call, or radiogram of any kind. The penalty for so uttering or transmitting a false or fraudulent distress signal or call shall be a fine of not more than $2,500 or imprisonment for not more than five years, or both, in the discretion of the court, for each and every such offense, and the penalty for so uttering or transmitting, or causing to be uttered or transmitted, any other false or fraudulent signal, call, or radiogram shall be a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than two years, or both, in the discretion of the court, for each and every such offense.

SEC. 8. That a person, company, or corporation shall not use or operate any apparatus for radio communication on a foreign ship in territorial waters of the United States otherwise than in accordance with the provisions of sections 4 and 7 of this act and so much of section 5 as imposes a penalty for interference. Save as aforesaid, nothing in this act shall apply to apparatus for radio communication on any foreign ship.

SEC. 9. That the trial of any offense under this act shall be in the district in which it is committed or in any district in which the offender may be found, or if the offense is committed upon the high seas or out of the jurisdiction of any particular State or district the trial shall be in the district where the offender may be found or into which he shall be first brought.

SEC. 10. That this act shall take effect and be in force on and after 90 days from its passage.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Very well.

Mr. MANN. This is a very important subject to which attention has been particularly attracted in recent days. I have examined the bills which the gentleman from Missouri has reported from his committee and would like to take occasion to congratulate the gentleman from Missouri on the very hard, earnest, and intelligent work that his committee has done in reference to these various propositions.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I appreciate the compliment.

Mr. MANN. I think the work done by the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries at this session is the most important that has been done by that committee in many years, and, I will say, is as important as any committee of this House. Yet it seems to me that a bill of this sort ought to receive more consideration than can be given it on the unanimous-consent calendar. Now, does not the gentleman believe if Congress runs on he will have an opportunity to bring this up by unanimous consent, fixing a day for its consideration in the near future? The gentleman has introduced a rule providing for the consideration of a number of bills. Of course, if we should have the good fortune to adjourn Congress in the middle of this month, I take it——

Mr. BUTLER. That is a radiogram the gentleman is sending.

Mr. MANN (continuing). That this bill would have to go over; but, even at that, if we should adjourn this month without the consideration of this bill and these other bills which the gentleman has for consideration, the gentleman will remember, when we convene in December, there are no appropriation bills ready to report, and that gentlemen who are ready to take up other bills at once usually get most of the month of December for the passage of such bills. This being a Senate bill, and we pass it, that would end it. Now, I do not think the gentleman ought to ask the House to consider a bill like this on unanimous-consent day, notwithstanding its great importance and notwithstanding the intelligent work which the gentleman and his committee have done on this and the other bills.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate all the gentleman has said, and I appreciate very much the compliment he has paid to my committee.

Mr. MANN. It was deserved.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Now, I felt it my duty, in view of the lateness of the session and the chances that the bill might not be reached on the call of committees, to exhaust every parliamentary method to secure consideration of this bill.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman was quite right in that, of course.

Mr. ALEXANDER. And I appreciate the weight of the suggestion made by the gentleman from Illinois, and, as the bill has been read, if the gentleman thinks it ought not to be considered to-day, why would it not be well to ask unanimous consent that its consideration may be deferred until the next Unanimous Consent Calendar day? That will give the Members of the House an opportunity to study the bill, and if there are amendments which they wish to have considered, I shall be very glad to entertain them. I think it possibly may be better to let the House adopt amendments to the bill if it so desires and let it go over to the Senate, and if they are rejected let the bill go to conference. This bill, of course, comes to the House and the Senate from the Department of Commerce and Labor, cooperating with the Navy and War Departments. There are very large commercial interests involved; extensive hearings have been held both by the Senate and House committees, and the bill has been considered for months past by subcommittees of the House and the Senate, and as amendments were suggested in one committee they were conveyed to and considered and in most instances agreed to by the other, so that the two bills are in all essential particulars the same.

Mr. BUTLER. I notice a little difference in the reading.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I can point out the differences to the gentleman. It was simply that I might discharge a duty which is an important one in having wireless telegraphy regulated, to prevent the interferences that are a constant source of annoyance, and to place this great art on some footing under wholesome and reasonable regulations that I have placed it on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield to allow me to ask one question on the subject matter of the bill?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. What jurisdiction, in the first place, has the Government of the United States over an electric current which passes in the air from one State to another? How can anybody tell the effect of a radiogram which extends beyond the exclusive jurisdiction of a State or Territory where the same originates?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Of course, that provision is incorporated under the provision of the Constitution vesting in Congress the power to regulate commerce between the States, and if a radiogram or message sent by a station within a State is received by a station beyond a State it might be regarded as interstate business and may be taken as evidence of the fact that they are violating this law. The purpose of the bill is to prevent interference by amateurs with commercial and Government business.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit, I do not think he gets part of my question. Say there is an amateur working with a wireless instrument and he sends out a current. It goes beyond the limits of a State, and by the fact it goes beyond the limits of the State he is subjected to an offense under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Yes; if they use a wave length exceeding 200 meters or it interferes with Government or commercial stations.

Mr. MANN. Oh, it does not make any difference what is the wave length he uses. If he has not taken out a license under the provisions of this bill, he can not send out a radiogram or other electric current the effect of which extends beyond the limits of the State. How does anyone know how far it goes, and if they do know, how far does the commerce clause of the Constitution give to us the power to say that that thing done in a particular State the effect of which extends beyond the State is punishable? In other words, we say that a man on the Indiana side of the State line between Indiana and Illinois can not talk because the sound of his voice goes across the State line.

Mr. ROBERTS of Massachusetts. If that is an interference with interstate commerce.

Mr. MANN. That has nothing to do with interference with interstate commerce. This requires a license. I only ask the gentleman——

Mr. BUTLER. So that he may think about it.

Mr. MANN. So he may think about it. Now, if the gentleman will permit, I do not propose to place the responsibility upon the gentleman, but assume it myself. I shall object to the consideration of the bill at this time, but will not object to the gentleman asking unanimous consent to pass the bill over without objection to the next calendar day.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think that is quite fair.

Mr. MANN. And let it come up on the next calendar day.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the consideration of this bill may go over without prejudice until the next calendar Monday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] asks unanimous consent that the consideration of this bill go over without prejudice until two weeks from to-day.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. The bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar is the House bill. As I understand, the Senate bill has been substituted now for that on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent, and it is the Senate bill that goes over.

The SPEAKER. Yes; it is the Senate bill that goes over. Is there objection?

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MANN. What about the House bill?

The SPEAKER. The House bill will be laid on the table, under the usual practice, if anybody asks for it to be.

Mr. MANN. The House bill might as well be laid on the table.

Mr. BUTLER. This request carries the consideration of the bill over for two weeks from this day?

The SPEAKER. That is the Senate bill.

Mr. MANN. Unless it should come up sooner?

The SPEAKER. Yes; and by unanimous consent the House bill is laid on the table. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Missouri and of the gentleman from Illinois to the fact that the last six days of the session are suspension days. Of course, that has nothing to do with the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the Speaker will not make that statement, because it has always been held heretofore that the last six days of the session, which will not occur at this session, being suspension days, are also Unanimous-Consent Calendar days.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not hold that now, because the Chair is not required to pass an opinion upon it. The Chair was referring only to the two-thirds rule. There may not be the six days in contemplation of that clause. We do not know about it.

CARRIAGE OF DANGEROUS ARTICLES ON PASSENGER STEAMERS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 23001) to amend section 4472 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the carrying of dangerous articles on passenger steamers.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4472 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by the act of March 3, 1905, and by the act of May 28, 1906, be further amended by substituting a colon for the period at the end of said section as amended and adding thereto the following proviso: "Provided further, That nothing in the foregoing or following sections of this act shall prohibit the use, by steam vessels carrying passengers for hire, of lifeboats equipped with gasoline motors and tanks containing gasoline for the operation of said motor-driven lifeboats: Provided, however, That no gasoline shall be carried other than that in the tanks of the lifeboats."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 2, line 5, by adding, after the word "lifeboats," the following proviso:

"Provided further, That the use of such lifeboats equipped with gasoline motors shall be under such regulations as shall be prescribed by the board of supervising inspectors with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the amended bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ALEXANDER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SUBPORT OF ENTRY AND DELIVERY, INDIANA HARBOR, IND.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Indiana Harbor, in the State of Indiana, on the southern shore of Lake Michigan, be, and the same is hereby, constituted a subport of entry and delivery within the district of Chicago, Ill., and customs officers shall be stationed at said subport with authority to enter and clear vessels, receive duties, fees, and other moneys, and perform such other services, and receive such compensation, as in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury the exigencies of commerce may require.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, this bill being on the Union Calendar, I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CRUMPACKER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SALE OF CERTAIN LANDS TO STATE OF IDAHO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 20684) authorizing the donation of the lands, buildings, and other property heretofore used as the Lemhi Indian School, on the Lemhi Reservation in Idaho, to the State of Idaho.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the lands and buildings and other property heretofore used as a school for the Lemhi Indians, and situated on the Lemhi Reservation in Idaho, are hereby donated to the State of Idaho, to be used as a reform school by said State; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to issue patent in fee to the State of Idaho for the property embraced in this grant.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have the amendment reported, reserving the right to object.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out lines 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, and 9, page 1, and substituting the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause to be sold, under such regulations, terms, and conditions as he may prescribe, the unappropriated school and agency lands on the former Lemhi Indian Reservation, in the State of Idaho, described as follows: Northwest quarter, northwest quarter southwest quarter, section 28, northeast quarter northeast quarter, west half southwest quarter northeast quarter, east half southeast quarter northeast quarter, excepting 1 acre of ground and the building thereon to be sold to the school board of district No. 26, Lemhi County, Idaho; lot 1, northwest quarter southeast quarter, south half southeast quarter, section 29, township 18 north, range 24 east, Boise meridian, containing 434 acres, together with the buildings thereon, and to convey the same by patent or patents in fee simple to the purchaser or purchasers: Provided, That the State of Idaho shall be given the preference right for one year from and after the passage of this act to purchase said lands, together with the buildings, at the present appraised value thereof."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the amended bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill providing for the sale of the Lemhi School and Agency plant and lands on the former Lemhi Reservation, in the State of Idaho."

On motion of Mr. FRENCH, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

NORWEGIAN ICE BREAKER "KIT."

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 17235) to grant American registry to the Norwegian ice breaker Kit.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY], I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over until the next unanimous-consent day, without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that this bill go over, without prejudice, until the next unanimous-consent day. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

SUBPORT OF ENTRY AT BAY CITY, MICH.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 17679) to make Bay City, Mich., a subport of entry.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the substitute be read in lieu of the original bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the substitute be read in lieu of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the substitute, as follows:

That Bay City, in the State of Michigan, be, and is hereby, constituted a subport of entry in the customs collection district of Huron, and that the privileges of the first section of the immediate transportation act, approved June 10, 1880, entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," be, and the same are hereby, extended to said subport. And such customs officers may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, be stationed at said subport as, in his judgment, the interests of the service may require, who shall receive such compensation as may be fixed by him.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this is on the Union Calendar. I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

There was no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RAINEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

RADIO COMMUNICATION ON CERTAIN OCEAN STEAMERS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3815) to amend an act entitled "An act to require apparatus and operators for radio communication on certain ocean steamers," approved June 24, 1910.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to require apparatus and operators for radio communication on certain ocean steamers," approved June 24, 1910, be amended by the addition of the following words to section 1:

"Provided also, That on and after the 1st day of July, 1912, it shall be unlawful for any ocean-going steamer of the United States or of any foreign country, carrying 100 or more persons, whether passengers or crew, or both, to leave or attempt to leave any port of the United States unless such steamer shall be equipped with an efficient apparatus for radio communication in good working order, in charge of two or more persons skilled in the use of such apparatus, one of whom shall be on duty at all hours of the day and night, which apparatus shall be capable of transmitting and receiving messages over a distance of at least 100 miles, night or day."

The following substitute proposed by the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries was read:

That section 1 of an act entitled "An act to require apparatus and operators for radio communication on certain ocean steamers," approved June 24, 1910, be amended so that it will read as follows:

"SECTION 1. That from and after October 1, 1912, it shall be unlawful for any steamer of the United States or of any foreign country navigating the ocean or the Great Lakes and licensed to carry 50 or more persons, including passengers or crew, or both, to leave or attempt to leave any port of the United States unless such steamer shall be equipped with an efficient apparatus for radio communication, in good working order, capable of transmitting and receiving messages over a distance of at least 100 miles, day or night, under all conditions of atmospheric disturbance when it is safe for the operator to work the set. An auxiliary power supply, independent of the vessel's main electric power plant, must be provided which will enable the sending set for at least four hours to send messages over a distance of at least 100 miles, day or night, under all atmospheric conditions safe for an operator to work.

"The radio equipment must be in charge of two or more persons skilled in the use of such apparatus, one or the other of whom shall be on duty at all times while the vessel is being navigated. Such equipment, operators, the regulation of their watches, and the transmission and receipt of messages, except as may be regulated by law or international agreement, shall be under the control of the master, in the case of a vessel of the United States; and every willful failure on the part of the master to enforce at sea the provisions of this paragraph as to equipment, operators, and watches shall subject him to a penalty of $100.

"That the provisions of this section shall not apply to steamers plying only between ports less than 200 miles apart."

SEC. 2. That this act, so far as it relates to the Great Lakes, shall take effect on and after April 1, 1913, and so far as it relates to ocean-going cargo steamers shall take effect on and after July 1, 1913.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman whether he thinks it would be proper for this bill to go over with the other one, which went over a few minutes ago?

Mr. ALEXANDER. This is a substitute for the Senate bill, which was passed by the Senate as an amendment to the act of June 24, 1910. I would prefer that it be considered now. It is a simple proposition. If any amendments are desired to improve the bill, we have no particular pride in the language.

Mr. MANN. I should like to ask the gentleman one question in reference to the bill, if I may.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The provision is that the radio equipment must be in charge of two or more persons skilled in the use of such apparatus, one or the other of whom shall be on duty at all times while the vessel is being navigated. Just what jurisdiction has the United States to say how a vessel shall be navigated on the high seas, outside of the 3-mile limit, if that vessel belongs to a foreign country?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I should say that we have no jurisdiction to enforce the penalty, and as to those vessels it would be no more than advisory. At the same time, I could point the gentleman to legislation by Congress along the same lines, in which they prescribe regulations for foreign ships on the high seas.

Mr. BUTLER. Could we not decline to admit them to American ports and decline to give them clearance papers?

Mr. MANN. That is the trouble. Supposing Great Britain makes one regulation for foreign ships on the high seas and we make another regulation concerning the same ships on the high seas. Those ships would be on the high seas, but they would be between the devil and the deep sea.

Mr. BUCHANAN. They would be between two devils, would they not?

Mr. ALEXANDER. In my opinion the practical effect would be that it would be impossible to enforce the penalties except as to American vessels or foreign vessels in American waters.

Mr. MANN. Of course we could decline to give clearance and entry unless they did certain things, but I do not see where we get the authority to control the navigation of a foreign vessel on the high seas, and I have been afraid that if we assume that authority other nations will assume the same thing, and that there will be conflict rather than accord.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman explain why it is that the limit is placed at 100 passengers? It seems to me all ships carrying passengers for hire, even if no more than half a dozen, ought to have the very best wireless apparatus.

Mr. MANN. How can a little tugboat carry wireless apparatus?

Mr. BUTLER. A little tugboat would not be carrying passengers for hire.

Mr. MANN. Not on the high seas.

Mr. BUTLER. No.

Mr. MANN. But they would on the rivers and lakes.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The House substitute provides that it shall apply to 50 or more persons, including the crew. The Senate bill makes it apply to 100 persons.

Mr. BUTLER. I did not hear the reading of the amendment.

Mr. ALEXANDER. That is the existing law, except that the existing law does not apply to cargo vessels, whereas the committee amendment does apply to cargo vessels as well as to passenger vessels.

Mr. BUTLER. Does not the law apply to vessels carrying both passengers and freight?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Not the existing law.

Mr. BUTLER. It should.

Mr. ALEXANDER. This amendment proposes to do so.

Mr. BUTLER. I did not hear it as it was read, and I could not get a copy of the bill. I understand that the committee substitute applies to vessels carrying 50 or more persons, including the crew.
